PLAYING TOGETHER

ANYONE could assemble the same number of men that comprise Sousa's band. The same music and the same instruments would be available. But few band leaders could, or ever have, attained the public popularity or artistic eminence of John Phillip Sousa. It isn't the individuals or the instruments that make Sousa's band great. It's the way they play together.

It's the same in motion pictures. The greatest story ever written can be spoiled by poor direction. The greatest director in the industry is helpless without a competent cast, adequate technical help, and proper cinematography. The most artistic photography can be ruined in the laboratory.

Those whose combined efforts make a motion picture must "play together." The laboratory must work with director and cinematographer all the way and express THEIR ideas, photographically, in negative and prints. Upon this foundation has been built the success of STANDARD FILM LABORATORIES. Producers and exhibitors find their best photographic insurance in the excellence of STANDARD SERVICE and STANDARD PRINTS.

WHERE WE LEAVE THE OLD ROAD

ON the following pages you will find the productions to be released by Paramount for the first seven months of the new season, beginning August 1st, 1923.

Each picture carries the complete cast, director, detail of production, etc. We firmly believe that in quality and drawing power, these productions will more than meet our expectations.

Pages could be written outlining our opinion of their value to the exhibitor, but just as they will prove on demonstration, we feel, to be greater in quality than any previous productions released by this organization, so do we feel that in justice not only to the product but to the exhibitor, these pictures should be accompanied by a plan which will really and actually demonstrate their true value before the exhibitor is asked to sign a contract.

The time has gone by in this industry when there can be any compromise between the good picture and the bad. The time has gone by when exhibitors can be asked to or should buy on a plan that no longer fits the needs of today.

However, by the same reasoning, every fair-minded exhibitor should be interested in protecting product that has demonstrated its real value at the box-office and it should be the exhibitor's interest, as well as the producer's, to see that such product receives not less than it is worth. Good pictures must bring their just reward if good pictures are still to be made.

Exhibitors throughout the country are in a great state of worry over the quotations received this year for motion pictures which have not yet demonstrated their value to the public. Under the circumstances the prices quoted do present a real problem to the buyer. However, in an effort to protect himself against over-paying for bad pictures the exhibitor is unconsciously working a hardship on the production of real box-office merit.

In certain parts of the country, buying combinations are being formed, under one pretense or another, in order to force down prices. Destructive forces are being set at work which can, in the end, do nothing but add further complications to an already difficult situation without solving the question of what good pictures are really worth.

The present-day demand by the public for better pictures has resulted in a better grade of productions at a higher cost. But whether the pictures are truly better can only be proven through the box-office. And for those pictures that are so proven, there is unquestionably a higher box-office value. If that greater value is demonstrated, higher production costs are justified and must reap their just reward for the producer.

Too many exhibitors today are buying without faith in the pictures. No production, regardless of merit, can deliver its best at the box-office when backed up by an uncertain exhibitor mind. No picture can receive justice at the hands of an exhibitor unless his mind is at ease as to its quality. In no other way can he approach the task of putting over each picture with the degree of confidence that is necessary for a proper result.

Just to screen pictures in advance of selling is not quite sufficient. Actual demonstration of box-office power must be made, demonstrations of a character that will form a real and safe basis on which exhibitors can buy with confidence, in any community.

To sell after screening, is but half a step forward. Paramount now proposes to take the full step.

We throw to the four winds every other policy than that of standing on our quality 100% and rising or falling unqualifiedly on the results of our pictures at the box-office as evidenced by their appeal to the public.

To meet what Paramount considers a vital necessity in the business today, and beginning with the productions announced for release after November 1st, every branch and district manager of this organization has been instructed not to negotiate any contract with any exhibitor until after that exhibitor knows what he is buying. No exhibitor will be asked to sign a contract for future Paramount Pictures until he has witnessed an actual demonstration of their box-office value.

With this as our policy, with firm faith in our industry, in our organization, and in the certainty that the public will support good pictures, we announce the following definite sales plan, affecting productions announced for release after November 1st, 1923:

Paramount will establish in the United States an adequate number of exhibition zones.

The best theatres in each zone will be chosen for the pre-release demonstrations.

Each key-center chosen will be with the thought that its result will be a fair criterion for the surrounding territory. You will not be asked to accept a Broadway showing alone as a basis of value.

Back of these demonstration theatres will be placed the best exploitation force in existence, plus the advertising cooperation of Paramount in providing an adequate but not unnatural campaign.

You are invited to watch these runs closely and do your buying accordingly, but not before you know.

After we have made the demonstration, and only then, are we ready to negotiate with each exhibitor.

We shall not expect for any picture more than it is worth. But after we have demonstrated it, neither shall we expect the exhibitor to try to buy it for less than its true value to him.

We feel that our productions will measure up to the public demand, and we believe that after we have proved this to be true, we will have demonstrated the real value of the pictures and fair prices may then be established in accordance with the actual drawing power of the pictures.

We ask you to watch for the coming announcement of the demonstration zones and the list of theatres in which our productions will be proven out for you.

We believe that in adopting this policy of selling pictures on their demonstrated merit only, we are going to make it more possible for good pictures to succeed and less possible for bad pictures to be made.

And we pledge the seasoned and experienced efforts of every part of our organization to create, in the future as we have in the past, those productions which will be worthy of the patronage of exhibitor and public alike.

WEST OF THE WATER TOWER

Meantime the hay wagon was jogging slowly into the country. At first Guy kept going over and over the scene. What a fool his father had made of himself, he thought. How much better Mr. Chew had conducted himself. And then the next moment Guy had to admit his father's strength, his power. The hay wagon had moved off in silence, but after a time they began to talk. Soon the incident began to develop humorous aspects. At last the party had regained its spirits. Guy now looked at Bee; she was curled up in the hay, a straw hat dangling on the back of her head. How strange and far away she seemed! Was this the person he had held in his arms? who had so passionately kissed his eyes? whose voice over the telephone could make him quiver? the person into whose ears he had whispered such profound thoughts? Was it all a dream? Was this the person he was to grow old with? Why did she seem so aloof? He must touch her. Or should he? If he only dared put his hand on her openly, as Harlan treated girls. He worked his hand under the hay until it was able to touch her. His heart was beating fast, and he assured. She raised her eyes and studied his face soberly. wagon jolted and rattled and jogged on. IF there is one picture for which there is an audience ready-made, it is this one.

You can't look at young Douglas Fairbanks, Jr. five minutes in person or on the screen without falling for him. He is the clean, healthy, breezy all-boy, AMERICAN BOY! The screen catches and radiates this lad's wonderful personality. He is a good actor. His smile is natural and winning—and in "Stephen Steps Out," he smiles a lot even as he grits his teeth to "go get 'em."

The picture has everything—thrills, comedy, the joyous exhuberance of American youth, and at the bottom, a sound theme and moral.

And with such a cast, it is set for a big success!

I JUST finished looking at a dozen reels of 'The Spanish Dancer,' which looks as big in production as 'The Four Horsemen' and 'Robin Hood.' We have produced a super-special that will make motion picture history.

"Pola Negri is a revelation; Antonio Moreno is the most gallant, romantic, lovable figure as 'Don Cesar' that I have ever seen upon the screen. You can imagine Wallace Beery as the king. The story is tremendously dramatic, with wonderful comedy relief and brilliancy, romance and beauty in every scene. "Here is one of the masterpieces of the screen."

THE most popular of all American authors has at last written an original story for the screen—"Pied Piper Malone." Thomas Meighan, Alfred E. Green, and Tom Geraghty (star, director and adaptor of "Back Home and Broke") are now filming it with the personal assistance of Mr. Tarkington. It's a splendid American comedy-romance centering around Meighan, some kiddies, a girl, and a brand-new screen idea. Mr. Meighan will be supported by George Fawcett and a typical Meighan cast.

"BIG BROTHER"

by REX BEACH

A Sam Wood Production

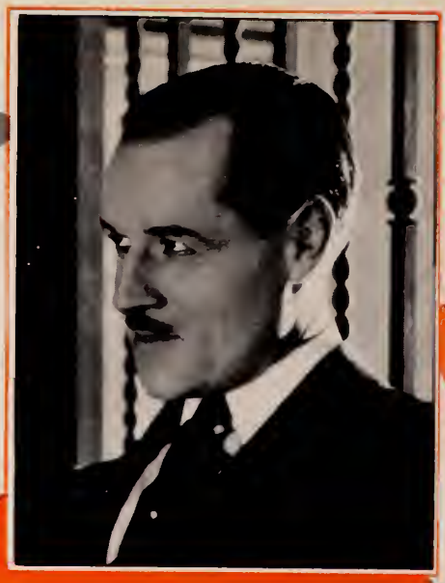
Adapted for the Screen by Monte Katterjohn

Presented by Adolph Zukor

ONE of the biggest stories ever written by any author is running right now in Hearst's Magazine—"Big Brother" by Rex Beach. Read one paragraph of this story and you can't stop. You're simply held spellbound by its breathless action, its great theme. For this story has something you find only in one in a thousand stories—a soul.

Rex Beach's novel, upon which he has spent more than two years of preparation in this, the prime of his career, tells a powerful, graphic and at the same time very realistic story of a gangster's inheritance—said inheritance being a little boy bequeathed him by his closest pal. The pal, shot in a feud, had time to say little before he died, but that little concerned the small boy. "He's all alone, now," gasped the dying Ben Murray. "Promise to bring him up decent, Jimmy, —promise." And in Jimmy Donovan's herculean endeavor to bring little Midge Murray "up decent" lies the heart of the whole "Big Brother" scheme. It's a story of the real underworld as it has never been told, with more adventures than Nick Carter, more heart-appeal than "Humoresque." It's ideal for the screen.

The greatest successes have been scored in stories of regeneration,—"The Miracle Man," "Back Home and Broke,"—you could name a dozen. But no one ever had as big material as "Big Brother" to work with!



You've heard of the Big Brother Movement—the great organization of thousands of business men from clerks to millionaires, in every country in the world, of every sect, pledged to help protect and rear boys and youths in the slum sections of our great cities, especially those subjected to vicious influences, the children of the streets who don't otherwise get a chance.

A convention of the Big Brother movement was held in Washington. Rex Beach went. He had no intention of writing anything. But before he had been there long the great, unselfish purpose of this Movement gripped him. He received the inspiration for his greatest story; Greatest because he wrote it with his heart—"Big Brother."

Tom Moore will be cast in the role of Jimmy and a distinctive supporting cast of artists will be engaged to portray these splendid characterizations.

POPULAR when it ran in the Saturday Evening Post as a serial, a smashing success as a novel by Julian Street and stage play by Hubert Osborne, this love-drama is more vivid and throbbing than ever produced by the artistic talent of William de Mille.

It is the story of an honorable man torn between the allure of a fascinating opera singer and the love of a charming, refined girl. Who wins out and how, portrayed behind the doors of New York's best society, makes a picture with all the punch of "Nice People" and the comedy values of "Grumpy" and "Clarence."

FACT is often many times stranger and more fascinating than fiction. Paramount proves it again with this amazing film record of the complete voyage around the world made by A. Y. Gowen, in a 98-foot motor boat.

Everybody has heard of the "Speejacks," and its epic-making feat. Front pages of newspapers all over the country carried the news of the start and successful finish of the voyage and the four times the "Speejacks" was reported lost at sea.

Here's the "Speejacks" alongside the "Leviathan." In this eggshell of a craft, Mr. Gowen, his pretty wife, and six picked college athletes braved hurricanes, tidal waves, starvation, cannibals, and dangers untold in every quarter of the globe. The ninth member of the party was Ira J. Ingraham, former head cameraman for Burton Holmes, who filmed this adventure picture extraordinary on the spot.

ANYBODY who has seen "Merton of the Movies" knows that Glenn Hunter is a comedian of a peculiar type—one who can work up a marvelous amount of sympathy so that audiences take him right to their hearts, even while they're laughing at him all the time.

To pick the type of story that will fit a personality like that is not the easiest thing in the world. So it was with a feeling of good luck that Paramount got hold of just the story for Glenn Hunter—"When Knights Were Bold"—to follow what is destined to be his huge success, "West of the Water Tower."

Ralph Spence, title writer of "A Connecticut Yankee," and author of much of this year's "Follies," will be right in a field where his satire and wit are of the sharpest.

"When Knights Were Bold" is adapted from the comedy wherein Francis Wilson attained huge success.

"NORTH OF 36"

By the author of "THE COVERED WAGON"

Featured in "The Covered Wagon" and "North of 36"

Director of "The Covered Wagon" and "North of 36"

JESSE L. LASKY, whose foresight and faith were largely responsible for "The Covered Wagon," says about "North of 36":

"Probably we shall never get another opportunity to film a masterpiece like 'North of 36.' It is the last novel by Emerson Hough, author of 'The Covered Wagon.' The editor of the Saturday Evening Post says, 'It is the most popular serial story we have run in many, many months.'

"In producing 'North of 36,' we have set for ourselves the gigantic task of surpassing 'The Covered Wagon.'

"James Cruze, who made history with 'The Covered Wagon,' is directing. Jack Holt plays the lead; Ernest Torrence is the ranch foreman, a similar role to the one he scores with in 'The Covered Wagon'; Lila Lee is the girl; Wallace Beery is the heavy; and others of equal importance will appear."

"THE COVERED WAGON"

ON the following pages are given some additional facts concerning Paramount's first twelve productions released between August 1st and October 31st, 1923.

A word or two about "The Covered Wagon" should be included at this time.

The potentialities in "The Covered Wagon" are pretty well understood by exhibitors at this time. It has played 23 weeks in New York, 18 weeks in Los Angeles, 19 weeks in Chicago and 15 weeks in Boston at advanced prices.

The New York run plays to capacity day after day and week after week. The Chicago and Boston runs have been the most successful picture bookings in this history of those cities. In Los Angeles, at Grauman's Egyptian Theater in Hollywood the most astounding records are being made. For 18 solid weeks from the day it opened, right up to now, this picture has done $20,000 a week or better without a struggle. Nothing like such a run was ever known or even contemplated in the history of entertainment.

These runs and the showing of "The Covered Wagon" in legitimate theaters during the present season are immeasurably enhancing the value of the picture for the motion picture theaters. "The Covered Wagon" will come to them the most widely known picture in the world, and its value at the box-office will prove itself in the most remarkable record-breaking business in every picture theater in which it is booked.

BIG, wholesome love-dramas of the West are splendid box-office bets at the present moment. "Salomy Jane" is an exciting romance of the days of '49, actually filmed among the giant Redwoods of the Santa Cruz mountains in a big, sweeping way.

"Salomy Jane" was Bret Harte's most popular novel. It was Paul Armstrong's most successful stage play. Now George Melford, Jacqueline Logan, and a supporting cast of real talent make the famous story live before your eyes.

Variety's famous showman critic says:

> "Here is a whale of a picture for entertainment purposes. The story is a high-class society-melodrama. In the screen version much has been added to the original which lends a delightful comedy relief. As a picture 'Lawful Larceny' is sure-fire for any type of audience in any type of house from the highest to the lowest. The featuring of four names gives the picture more value at the box office for the exhibitor. The wise theatre men will also take advantage of the fact that Gilda Gray is in the production with her famous South Sea Island dance that she does in the current 'Follies' and make advertising capital out of it."

A play that had a record run on Broadway, produced by the director of "Robin Hood," with a cast packed with big names. "It should give 100% satisfaction" . . . . Harrison's Reports.

Gloria Swanson

IN A SAM WOOD PRODUCTION

"Bluebeard's 8th Wife"

THIS frisky French love-comedy ran over a year on the Broadway stage before Paramount spent six months in transferring it to the screen. The role of the fascinating French girl who marries an American millionaire to save her family from ruin presents Miss Swanson's gorgeous personality in its ideal setting.

Sam Wood, producer of "Prodigal Daughters" and "His Children's Children," has spared no effort to make this a big de luxe special in every sense of the word. Huntly Gordon and Robert Agnew are in the supporting cast.

We invite you to see it for yourself. Prints ready now!

A CHARLES MAIGNE PRODUCTION

Adapted by Sada Cowan from Maximilian Foster's famous Saturday Evening Post serial

"YOU'RE a fool, George—but go ahead. Risk our hard-won earnings in Wall Street. Gamble with our love and our future and our happiness. But remember this—hereafter, our marriage is a business proposition. I'm your partner. You say you'll make a million. All right. I get half, dollar for dollar. And I'll spend it as I like—gowns, jewels, motors, I'll travel as dizzy a pace as I like, and no questions asked. Is it a go?"

In his foolish pride he agreed. And that's the unique bargain that forms the basis of the plot of the greatest drama of modern New York marriage ever screened—"The Silent Partner."

The peculiar gripping force of this picture lies in the fact that it might happen to any married couple in the United States.

The women, married or single, will love it. They'll bring the men. And they'll leave supremely satisfied. For this picture is as good for the soul as it is for the box-office. You can see it at your Paramount Exchange now.

AT last—Pola Negri as you've always wanted to see her, as a lovable heroine of a strictly modern romantic drama with a happy ending.

"The Cheat" is admitted to be the greatest dramatic story ever written for the screen. It has been produced as an American stage play and French opera, published as a novel in both English and French. Miss Negri is seen as a beautiful luxury-loving woman torn between her love for her husband and the attractions of his millionaire rival. The scene is Paris and fashionable Long Island.

Filmed on a typically lavish Paramount style, with a notable cast, including Jack Holt and Charles de Roche, "The Cheat" is a picture to be proud of and worthy of special exploitation. You can see this feature at your Paramount Exchange now.

"EVERY one of William deMille's pictures stands out like a starry diamond," say the critics.

And thousands of picture-goers agree. Mr. deMille uses constantly the technique of the stage. His pictures, comprising a series of climaxes, depend, not alone on action, but upon character and plot development.

"The Marriage Maker" has more than a cast of big names—more than a sumptuous production, more than a unique and moving plot (one of the most unusual ever devised), more than a heart-warming, rib-tickling element of real humor—more than all these—it has evidence of the kind of showmanship brains that makes the picture hit the heart of public and critics alike and assures the exhibitor's success.

The theatre that shows William deMille's "The Marriage Maker" is instantly labeled as the most worth-while theatre in any community.

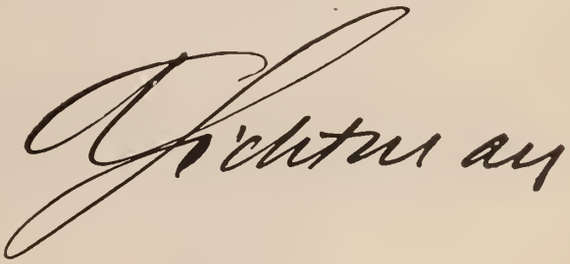
J. B. CLARK,
Pittsburgh, Pa.

Dear J. B.:

I have known you ever since I have been in the picture business, and you and I have made a lot of money together because we have always dealt on the only basis that is successful—the basis of give and take, with a fair profit for both.



I know that our Pittsburgh manager has not solicited you, because your signed contract has not yet come in. When he does call on you, I know that you are going to remember all the years of uninterrupted profits we have made together and that you are going to make room in your theatres for the Preferred Fifteen.

Confidentially, J. B., this is the work of my life. We've put into this year's output all we had and all we could borrow, but "The Broken Wing," "Mothers-in-Law," "April Showers," "The Virginian" and "Maytime"—the pictures produced thus far—justify all the risks we have taken and all the sleep we have lost.

And, say, you should visit our Los Angeles studios and see the organization headed by my partner, B. P. Schulberg, working like Trojans to turn out even better pictures! And they're succeeding!

Did you see our advertising campaign to the public—or are you one of the four or five people in Pittsburgh who don't read The Saturday Evening Post and the motion picture fan magazines?

Your patrons are counting on you to book these pictures in all your theatres and I'm waiting expectantly too, banking on your good judgment and your confidence in my ability to make good my promises. So please hurry with your autograph on a contract.

Announcement Extraordinary!

METRO has the honor to announce the signing of contracts with Miss Laurette Taylor whereby she will star in screen versions of two of J. Hartley Manners' international stage successes.

Exhibitors the country over will welcome Miss Taylor. They know what an overwhelming triumph she scored in her cinema presentation of "Peg O' My Heart," and the unprecedented success this charming photoplay enjoyed from the box-office standpoint. Miss Taylor's name, theatre owners know, is unquestionably the greatest box-office asset any motion picture production could have. Her's is a name that stands for the very best in the way of wholesome entertainment, a real box-office name if there ever was one.

J. Hartley Manners' plays, in which Miss Taylor has gained world wide fame, are of the sort that the motion picture industry needs. With absolutely nothing that could offend even the most fastidious, they are extraordinarily entertaining, appealing to a marked degree to all classes, the 100 per cent perfect stories long sought by the exhibitor of pictures.

It was because of this that Metro outbid every other large producing organization in the business for the rights to Mr. Manners' plays and the services of Miss Taylor, knowing full well they could offer nothing finer to the vast army of exhibitors the organization serves all over the world.

The use of the laughing man, the traffic signs, and the various other incidents of this campaign prove conclusively the desire and ability of Metro to co-operate with the exhibitor and make money for him.

EXHIBITORS

As a forward step toward centralized distribution, we have selected the F. B. O. offices, and by special arrangement our product and representatives will be in their 33 Branches in September.

This is an economic cooperation by which overhead now loaded on picture prices will go to the exhibitor and independent producer as rightful revenue. Our belief in F. B. O. service, together with the harmony existing between our plans and theirs, is responsible for this arrangement, by which they will distribute and also sell in accordance with our policies.

PRODUCERS

Without driving up the prices, we can secure a larger gross for our producers than is secured by any other independent agency because our exploitation is effective and widespread, our selling is rapid and intensive and our sales force is larger than any other independent sales organization.

A certified accounting and the opening of the door to the inner workings of distribution that heretofore has been closed to the independent producer, are added elements of important interest. And—your identity remains as intact as ours.

Something to Think About

When Frank Munsey bought the New York Globe that paper had about 200,000 circulation.

When he added it to the Evening Sun the latter's circulation was increased only 45,000.

What became of the other 155,000?

Why, it was duplicate circulation, of course; and it immediately evaporated.

If MOTION PICTURE NEWS were to add to itself any other trade paper in this field or all of them its circulation might be increased by a few hundred theatres, a very few hundred; that's all.

All the rest of the acquired circulation would disappear into thin air.

Duplication, of course.

We have a man right now travelling the country —he has already covered ten States—and checking up every single theatre.

Here's a sample of his regular report, week in and out.

North Carolina (for instance): Towns visited 24. Theatres 26. Take MOTION PICTURE NEWS 22. Other papers: 2, 7, 5—14 all put together.

And again: Towns visited 24. Theatres 31. Take MOTION PICTURE NEWS: 27. Other papers 4, 7, 4—fifteen all together.

And so all of his reports read. Just about that percentage, right along the line.

The NEWS reaches practically every exhibitor—other circulations, half as large, are duplicative.

That's why we preach concentration—two papers at the most are enough.

And all you—the advertiser—save on duplication you can add to the selling force back of your picture when it's really in circulation.

Says the New York American: "Men that run every other branch of their business on a thorough basis of knowledge—testing and proving—often run their advertising as a sort of gift enterprise allowing prejudice or fancy, or a low advertising rate to influence them.

We have nothing to sell—no reviews, or socalled "publicity"—nothing but bonafide circulation, so large, established and influential that it covers the field.

And, if you use it as you conduct other branches of your business—it will profitably sell your goods.

The Public Interest

FAMOUS Players-Lasky steps forth with a statement this week, the boldness of which is indicated by the heading: "Where We Leave The Old Road."

Briefly, the declaration is made, that this concern's forthcoming pictures will be first tried out in an "adequate" number of theatres and zones, each backed with "adequate but not unnatural" advertising, before any exhibition value is set upon them.

We take the statement, of course, at its full face value, and as such it strikes us as a forward step of very large and excellent consequence to the picture and the public and to this business.

These paragraphs stand out:

"The time has gone by in this industry when there can be any compromise between the good picture and the bad. The time has gone by when the exhibitor should be asked to buy on a plan that no longer fits the needs of the day."

". . . . Whether the pictures are truly better can only be proven through the box-office."

The time has at last arrived when the public interest must be considered by this business. It is to the best interest of this business that the public interest be considered.

And in the past this business has been desperately blind to the public interest.

The General Film Company did not consider the public interest when it bought film from its producers on a basis of mere footage—on quantity not quality values.

And later and also important distributors did not consider the public interest when they bent their energies toward the quantity and not quality output of feature pictures—and when they sold this quantity output wrapped up in a bag and by the bag instead of selectively, picture by picture—and when they set their rental prices flatly, arbitrarily and blindly.

The exhibitor has been just as much to blame as the distributor.

Because, in most instances, he has preferred to buy pictures by the block; it is the easiest way. And, while protesting against arbitrary exhibition values he has resolutely refused to consider a way out of the difficulty so logical as percentage playing.

The new policy of Famous Players is right along the inevitable and logical path of true progress. It lets the public say what a picture is worth; and that's the only way a true value will ever be established—that, plus the "adequate but not unnatural advertising" which must be used in fairness to picture, public, exhibitor and producer.

Block booking and rental prices—these two great factors in motion picture progress—are more than trade matters. They are matters of public interest. It is not a question of whether or not the exhibitor prefers the lazy way of block booking; or whether or not the distributor finds it cheaper and profitable. And rental policies are not to be settled by the whims and greed of the short lived day.

It is a question of getting good pictures to the public at a fair price to all concerned.

That—and that alone, will make a buying public and a progressive industry.

The signs are bright. Fox announces all pictures screened in advance. Famous says prices fixed by the public.

And now let the exhibitor join in the forward movement and also observe this supreme matter of the public interest in pictures.

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" is creating some excitement among the powers behind the French Republic. Premier Poincare has personally banned the film on the strength of a law passed in the second year of the French Revolution, on August 6, 1790, which gives the Government power to veto all spectacles calculated to disturb public order.

The English manager of the production, H. Fenston, stands to lose $40,000 by the banning of "The Birth of a Nation," and he has called at the Foreign Office to ask if the political objections on which the police acted could not be met by radical cuts in the picture. The principal scenes objected to are believed to be the court scene where Negroes place their bare feet on the tables and the scenes showing the pursuit of a white girl by a black man. The promoters are ready to delete all offending incidents, in order to set out on their 3,000,000-franc tour.

Readers of the press despatches from France have learned of considerable conflict between American tourists and French nationals from Africa. Inasmuch as these nationals helped France win the war, the Republic has given them equal rights with its white citizens and guests. The Premier is pressed on his present course by Negro deputies and by fear of losing their support in the Algerian elections. Neither can France afford militarily to affront her North African citizens.

Many Paris newspapers are asking what is the good of film censorship if the Government interferes. "The Birth of a Nation" was passed by the censor with a few minor reservations. The police actually declare in one quarter that the scene showing the assassination of Lincoln might spur some French Booth to kill M. Poincare.

VIEWED as an artistic effort, "The Green Goddess" takes very high rank among screen achievements. Second thoughts on the production strengthen this conviction. It is the sort of picture which pushes the industry ahead, marking a real advance and further confounding the dwindling few who still can't see any art in or about the silversheet.

This is the result of a happy combination of star, director and story. George Arliss, of course, was established long ago as a master of pantomime. On the stage, facial expression and vocal gifts were blended by him in such a manner as to become one in their effect on the spectator. But it takes the screen to bring out his remarkable pantomime, and nothing of lasting value is lost by the absence of the voice, either. In "The Green Goddess" Mr. Arliss's ability to "speak" from the screen becomes startling at times. His genius at summing up a situation by the raising of an eyebrow, or the lifting of a hand, is given full play and is a delight to watch.

Yet all these gifts would not avail if they were not guided by just the right kind of director. Sid Olcott, who had shown only a short time before in "Little Old New York" that he could do that sort of picture supremely well, supplies in "The Green Goddess" additional proof that he knows what he is about.

As for the story, it is glove-fitting for Arliss, as on the stage. And the management of it, by Forrest Halsey, who made the adaptation; Director Olcott, the star and the players, is wholly effective. The screen speaks its own language though it is silent. "The Green Goddess" is eloquent as a work of art.

HY MAYER, the well known cartoonist whose "Travelaughs" have furnished a bright spot on the program for several seasons, is branching out. He will make a series of two-reel comedies for Universal. Not animated strips, but legitimate two-reelers.

CHARLIE, the biggest elephant in America, and who is said to answer to 183 summers, is about to be executed. The big pachyderm has been acting before the camera for several years, but he has been registering such heavy villainy that the Humane Society of Los Angeles has decreed that he must depart his earthly life. He is a member of Universal's menagerie.

Charlie never was a male Pollyanna. His temper, always bad, has become more savage, his whims and fancies more treacherous. The huge elephant weighs five tons and because of his great intelligence and wide education is valued (press agent figures) at $30,000. He may be hard to replace, but his owners have decided that unless Charlie is dispatched at once, it is only a question of time when he will murder a few human beings besides wrecking a studio or three.

On the average of once a month he breaks his chains and fares forth upon Los Angeles, just rarin' to go. He shows no partiality in his campaign of playing a "dirty elephant heavy." Movie sets, front porches, lamp posts, motor cars, trolley cars and occasionally a dog, a horse or even a human being have shown the wear and tear of his mighty trunk and the crushing force of his weight. The only man who could ever handle him was his trainer who has just emerged from the hospital after being knocked down and knelt upon by Charlie some weeks ago.

Charlie is a widower. He had a mean wife in Susie. Some years ago when they lived together the big spouse almost wrecked the town of Raleigh, N. C., and Susie was hanged for it, a stone derrick and several loops of chain being used. Charlie is too big for any derrick—and a little too wise to take poison and a bullet might make him hopping mad. So H. A. Snow, the explorer, has been called to superintend Charlie's execution.

Just what method the executor will use to exterminate Charlie has not been determined, but it is possible that he may be towed out to sea and used for target practise by a battleship.

THE Paramount Art Department have conceived and executed an eye-compelling insert of forty pages of its company's productions for the coming season—which appears in this week's issue of the News. It reflects the dignity and improved standards of motion picture production and advertising and emphasizes the fact that Paramount has an art department second to none. There is color and background on every page—the advertising talk being readable and the cuts exciting attention. In all a distinctive, artistic insert—one carrying on the Paramount prestige.

COLLEEN MOORE, who has risen rapidly as a picture star within the past year, became the bride of John McCormick, West Coast Representative of Associated First National, on August 18. The wedding took place in Los Angeles. The young couple are receiving congratulations and best wishes from their host of friends in the industry.

AS an earnest of the respect for the memory of the late lamented President, S. L. Rothafel of the New York Capitol deserves especial commendation for the dignified presentation he gave for the views of the funeral of the beloved Executive. Warren G. Harding was a man of simple tastes—a man never seeking ostentatious display of any sort.

It was fitting and proper that Mr. Rothafel so arranged the presentation of the funeral scenes that they carried out the atmosphere of simple dignity. There was no fanfare of trumpets—no ostentatious, vulgar bombast. Instead an impressive silence marked the showing of the funeral ceremonies. Somehow sitting there in this appreciative silence—a silence punctuated only by the occasional tolling of a muffled bell and the distant notes of Taps, we caught the true solemnity of the occasion—the deep reverence being paid to the memory of the President.

Rothafel in his dignified tribute has demonstrated again that he bows to no one in the manner of making artistic presentations.

THE publishing house of George D. Swartz & Company, New York, has engaged in a new department, that of specializing in publishing original screen stories. Most of the novels purchased for motion pictures consist mainly of dialogue with a paucity of action. When people who have read the books see the screen versions of these novels, they continually complain that the pictures contain entirely different incidents than what are in the books, and many times parts of the plots are even changed in the screen versions. Thus, although the pictures may be good, the public readily finds fault.

Dialogue cannot be photographed into action to such a great an advantage as action can be written into dialogue and description. One cannot make a fast moving motion picture out of a novel that consists mainly of dialogue and description; but one can write a fast moving picture into a good novel.

This is real initiative on the part of George D. Swartz & Company in novelizing and publishing original screen stories that are produced by the leading film companies—stories which will have the added prestige of being published, although the pictures are written especially for their needs or stars.

HELENE CHADWICK and an assistant director were badly burned when the Giant Geyser at Yellowstone Park unexpectedly spouted and drenched them with hot water. Acids and other chemicals in the water added to the seriousness of their injuries, but it is expected that they will be able to return to work shortly on "Law Against Law."

MARY PICKFORD has gone in for art treasures. The star out-bid the others who had gathered in the auction hall of a Pacific Coast collector and carried away "A Portrait of a Young Boy," by Sir Joshua Reynolds; "A Portrait of Lady Cunningham" by Sir Peter Lely; "A Portrait of Helen Minturn-Post," by Rembrandt Peal; a miniature on ivory of a young woman, by Paul Herve; an old Dutch painting, by T. C. Vaarburg. In the line of antique furniture Miss Pickford took a seventeenth century Florentine Renaissance carved walnut Cadenza; a pair of Italian Renaissance carved mirror frames, a seventeenth century Italian walnut mirror frame, a pair of massive Spanish andirons, two antique Louis IV commodes, and a pair of Louis IV arm chairs. These art objects were from the Minturn-Post estate.

LOCAL motion pictures of picnics and other public gatherings are being displayed as part of the program of some of the Carr & Schad, Inc., chain theatres in Reading, Pa., and have proved a very popular innovation. They are displayed under the title, "Community Events," and the Carr & Schad interests welcome requests for filming local gatherings. The picnic of the Reading Chamber of Commerce was one of the events recently filmed successfully. The stunt is said to be causing an increase in box office receipts.

DOUG FAIRBANKS is a firm believer in giving his public new faces and as little make-up as possible for his players. Because of the number of new types in "The Thief of Bagdad," it was necessary to shoot 20,000 feet of film in camera and costume tests to be sure of the capabilities of the players selected. Doug's leading woman is Julanne Johnston.

Plan to Cut Insurance Cost is Furthered at Convention in Milwaukee

FRED C. SEEGERT, of the Regent theatre, Milwaukee, and one of the most prominent men in exhibitor organization councils, was elected president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wisconsin at the final session of the convention held last week.

F. J. McWilliams, of the New Madison theatre, Madison, Wis., who declined to run for re-election as president, was made vice-president, and other officers were chosen as follows: treasurer, Ernest Langemarck, of the Colonial theatre, Milwaukee, and secretary, W. Van Norman, of the Parkway, Milwaukee.

One of the important steps taken at the convention was the appointment of an arbitration committee to meet with exchangemen in settling disputes. The exhibitor membership of the committee is: Max Krofta, Idle Hour theatre; Steve Bauer, Venus theatre; Jack Stillman, Downer theatre; Eugene Phelan, West Allis theatre, and William Jacobs. They are all residents of Milwaukee.

A movement was started for better and cleaner pictures and more refined methods of exploitation. Insurance was given a great deal of attention at the convention. These discussions were led by Joseph G. Rhode, of Kenosha, former president of the organization. At Mr. Rhode's invitation and suggestion representatives of several insurance companies addressed the convention and declared that by establishing special branches to handle theatrical insurance, the companies could save exhibitors from 25 to 50% on their insurance premiums. The plan contemplates that the sale of the insurance will be eventually transferred to the M. P. T. O. of Wisconsin.

The Board of Directors was authorized to examine the plan further and report to the association.

When the music tax question came up, members were advised to pay their assessments and try to get as good individual adjustments as they could, it being pointed out that no solution of the problem had yet been obtained. In view of recent court decisions empowering the collection of taxes for copyright music which is broadcasted by radio, it was pointed out that it was useless for exhibitors to attempt to evade payment of the tax for the playing of copyright music in their theatres.

Additional Building Plans Announced by United

Plans for the construction of a new properties storage building, to contain a restaurant and five stores on the ground floor, on the Melrose Avenue frontage of the United studios, are announced by M. C. Levee, president of the studio company. Furniture, draperies, "hand props" and electrical fixtures are all to be housed under one roof.

The original property room in charge of Tom Little has long been outgrown and various other rooms around the lot have been utilized for storage. Now all properties are to be gathered under one roof.

Hartford Doubles Business During July

According to announcement last week by Chief Deputy Federal Revenue Collector Appleton at Hartford, Conn., theatre attendance during July was nearly double that of July, 1922. The receipts from admissions and dues in July, 1922, aggregated $62,000.

Atlantic City to Have New Stanley House

The Stanley Company of America will build a 2,000-seat house at Atlantic City, according to word received from there. The plan is to open it for next season. This will be the largest house at the seaside resort.

York Paper Prints First Picture Editorial

AFTER a period of ten years in which it is reported to have declined to print a line of free advertising for motion picture theatres, the York (Pa.) Dispatch, a daily York newspaper, recently printed an editorial which is interpreted by the trade to mean it has adopted a more liberal attitude toward the film business.

The editorial is headed "Movies Improving," and says among other things: "Fairness urges that the movies be given time to climb the heights to the atmosphere that critics love—if they can do so without losing grip on the public. They are not yet old. Even the young can see marvelous progress in moving pictures by comparison with what was only a few years back. * * * The movies show many defects and are subject to improvement, but they have their good points and should be given credit for them."

Cleveland Houses Without Music Seven Weeks

This is the seventh consecutive week that there has been no music in motion picture neighborhood theatres of Cleveland. The only theatres playing music with pictures are those which do not belong to the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitor's Association, and which negotiate individually with the musicians. They are the Loew houses, Reade's Hippodrome, and Keith's East 105th Street theatre.

The members of the Cleveland Exhibitor's Association are standing together like one man on the proposition, and no music will be heard in any of the neighborhood houses until a satisfactory wage agreement is reached between the Musicians' Union and the Association. This is the first time that the Exhibitor's Association has been sufficiently united to carry out their point.

Negotiations are also under way between the Exhibitor's Association and the operators relative to the 17 per cent wage increase presented. Nothing definite has been done in the matter up to the present time, although negotiations are peaceful, and a settlement is expected to be announced within the week.

Ohio Educational Chief Advocates Motion Picture Study as Part of School Curriculum

VERNON M. RIEGEL, head of the Ohio State Department of Education and the Ohio Board of Censorship, has publicly declared that the teaching of motion picture appreciation in the public schools in much the same manner as English literature and other studies are taught is recommended by the state department.

In his plan for school students of the state of Ohio to study motion pictures, from an artistic and dramatic standpoint, to analyze impressions received from a cinema production, Mr. Reigel urges in his statement that schools throughout the state make a serious attempt to follow out some program of motion picture study. Director Riegel suggests that there be appointed in each class a committee of students who will make a weekly review of the movies in the particular city or town and report back to their class their findings. This plan would make motion picture study a part of the curriculum.

The state director of education and censorship suggests still further that once each month or oftener the English classes devote a special period to motion picture study, discussing the films screened in their city from an artistic and dramatic standpoint.

"The time is at hand," he said, "when the school must cease to be a passive observer of the new trend of the school-child mind toward the silent drama. The motion picture is in the schoolroom," he continued, "whether the teacher knows it or not. This is so because the boys and girls carry there the impressions and concepts which they have gained from attendance at the theatres."

That the child learns to read and like good literature instead of objectionable matter largely because of a developed sense of appreciation are the grounds given by the director for his advocating a developed sense of appreciation of motion pictures.

Report Shows Film Export Continues Heavy

Film exports continue to maintain a high level, according to the Department of Commerce in Washington. Shipments for the month of May totalled over 15,500,000 feet. Of this total 9,211,252 feet were positives, with a value of $360,840. Canada was the leading market.

There were 5,031,366 feet of unexposed film exported during May, with a value of $133,678. Japan and England were the largest purchasers. Shipments of negatives totaled 1,274,401 feet, with a value of $100,657. Approximately half of this was shipped to Mexico.

Buffalo Stage Workers Ask 30 Per Cent Increase

Buffalo union stage workers have presented their annual wage demands to local exhibitors, about 30 per cent more, or about the largest boost ever asked. The union wants the managers to increase the pay of stage carpenters from $52.50 to $72, and the other workers from $45.55 to $67 a man for seven days.

Government Hearing Ends in Boston

Other Sessions Possible Later

NEW ENGLAND aspects of the hearing of the charges brought against the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and several other respondents by the Federal Trade Commission, which recently adjourned for the time in Dallas, Texas, were renewed in Boston, August 20, in the Federal Building before Examiner E. C. Alvord and were completed the next day.

Most of the agitation here in New England centered around the theatre holdings by Alfred C. Black, of Black's New England Theatres; his selling out gradually to the Famous Players-Lasky group, and his methods of acquiring other theatres throughout the territory. These practices of his, however, the testimony showed, were indulged in for the most part before Famous Players acquired any interest in his theatre holdings. The Trade Commission's counsel for the hearing was headed by William H. Fuller, assisted by Gaylord R. Hawkins and Joseph I. Klein. Although Black filed no answer to the amended bill of complaint, he was represented by his counsel, Herman Mintz, of Boston, who sat in on the hearing.

Robert T. Swaine, of the firm of Cravath, Henderson & De Gersdorff, handled the case for Famous Players in Boston, while assistant counsel were Bruce Bromley and C. Frank Reavis, Jr.

Exhibitors Testify

As was the case in Dallas at the sessions of the trial held there, practically all of the testimony given during the short session in Boston was from the exhibitor standpoint, although film exchange managers were also called to the stand. The bulk of the testimony fell in favor of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, so much so that Robert T. Swaine, chief counsel, waived cross-examination in all but a few cases.

The first witness called was William P. Gray, who has offices in Boston and who testified that, in addition to managing his own chain of 31 houses spread through 20 New England towns, he was also manager for the Famous Players-Lasky circuit here of 25 houses.

He said that he took charge of the latter's Maine and New Hampshire houses in August, 1922, and took over the rest in February of this year; that he booked pictures by theatres and not for the circuit, in his own houses and those run by Famous Players as well, and that, besides their own product, these houses used many First National, Metro, United Artists, Warner Brothers and pictures from the studios of other prominent producers. The bulk of his testimony was taken up with a description of the producer-owned houses.

M. A. Hill, Metro New England manager, testified that in 1920, after Famous Players-Lasky had bought into the Black New England Theatres, the prices paid him for Metro pictures was slightly lower than usual, but that in the fiscal year of 1922-23, since they got full control of the Black interests, the prices received had been entirely satisfactory, and that their relations were of the friendliest.

His testimony also brought out the fact that there are now seven circuits of motion picture houses in New England. And that from the standpoint of revenue from other centers, it is important to give all pictures their New England first run in Boston, a practice, however, that is not as general as it might be.

The circuits referred to are Goldstein Brothers, with 30 houses; the 30 Gordon houses, Poli with 16, Graphic with 15, Boaz with 8, Lowry with 5, and Elm with 9.

J. H. Brennan, manager for Loew's State Theatre, Boston, testified that in the year 1922-23, he showed 40 Paramount pictures at his house, 23 Metros, 12 First National releases and several others from prominent producers.

Seven Circuits in New England

V. J. Morris, manager of the Orpheum, Loew's other big Boston house, furthered this testimony by saying that out of 70 features shown by him in the same period, 30 were Paramount features and 11 were Metros.

J. W. Conn, owner of two small houses in that city, the Sterling and the Star, testified that after Black sold out to Famous Players he had a hard time in getting films, but on cross-examination admitted that he only needed the product of one well-recognized brand to run successfully, and that he had been offered 52 features by Universal. He claimed that he had finally been forced to sell out to the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation at a figure of $105,000.

J. B. Ames, of Littleton, N. H., who formerly operated the Park theatre, at Barre, Vt., admitted under examination that he had sold out to Black in 1918, had stayed on as his manager, and had also been employed by him in securing other theatres, but had later been discharged.

He offered the testimony that Black on their trips showed theatre owners plans of houses he threatened to build if they did not sell, and in this way acquired houses in Northfield and Morrisville, Vt., at a low figure. This all happened in 1918 and 1919.

Mrs. Minnie C. Humphrey, Manchester, N. H., who operated a theatre in Barre, 1915-1922; David J. Adams, Concord, N. H., theatre owner, and George A. Cross, Northfield, Vt., all suffered under Black's methods of purchasing, they testified. He threatened to build opposition theatres if they failed to sell, they said.

Senator Hartford Testifies

State Senator Walter G. Hartford, of Longmeadow, R. I., manager of the Imperial theatre, Pawtucket, testified to keen rivalry in that city between Famous Players-Lasky and Keith. The new Strand theatre there, in which Black is or was interested, was using the Famous Players product exclusively, he said, in its fight against the Keith interests. He said that his relations with Paramount and Famous Players always were satisfactory.

The hearing was adjourned without date for possible additional hearings. None will be held before late in September, however.

Picture Censorship Due in Ireland

Official censorship of motion picture films will become effective in Ireland in November of this year under provisions of a bill recently passed by the Dail Eireann, according to advices from Vice Consul H. M. Collins, Dublin.

The bill provides for the appointment of an official censor and of an appeal board, consisting of nine commissioners to whom appeal may be made from the censor's decision.

Kent Making Arrangements for Convention

Tentative arrangements for the international convention of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to be held in Kansas City next May were made this week by S. R. Kent, general manager of distribution, who was in Kansas City. Mr. Kent predicted that the convention next May would surpass by far any previous gathering held by Famous Players.

Film to Show Development of Los Angeles Harbor

Los Angeles joined the ever-growing group of municipalities resorting to the motion-picture screen as a medium of presenting their advantages to the world. The picture under way, which is two reels in length, is titled "The Port of Golden Opportunity," and shows in realistic fashion the development of the Los Angeles Harbor. The picture is being made by the Standard Film Laboratories of Hollywood for the World Traders of Los Angeles.

I HAVE found in the past that the Technical Section of MOTION PICTURE NEWS carries the best information available in connection with such problems. We feel that we would like to have such information at hand in order to be sure that our recommendations in the motion picture field are the latest and up-to-date.

Fall Golf Tournament September 18

Over Two Hundred Entries Expected for Event at Bayside, Long Island

GOLF—September 18—Tuesday—Belleclaire Golf Club—Bayside, Long Island.

This is the fifth tournament to be held under the auspices of the Motion Picture Industry. The entry list of the last tournament was well over 100. This time we anticipate a turn-out which will run over 200.

The out-of-towners should be here in greater numbers than ever before, especially the theatre men. It is the right time of year. Come to New York and get a line on some of the big pictures you will show this winter. Talk it over with the executives of the distributing companies. Detroit, Chicago, and other of the larger picture centers have held their tournaments—send on your good men—whether they play well or not we'll handicap them—and let's have a look at them.

Almost a prize a man—can you do any better than that? If you want to donate a prize for some special event you can do it and the committee will be much pleased, and if you want to win it yourself perhaps we can fix that.

Yes, we have had some out-of-town theatre golf stars present at our tournaments and they have gone home with the bacon. There's C. W. Deibel from Youngstown, Ohio—a very young man considering the length of time he has been playing golf—yes in the 70's—not age, but score. Then there is Tom Moore, the father of Tom, Jr., active in motion pictures, real estate and everything in Washington, D. C.—also in the 70's. They have both promised to be on hand early in the morning and play all day—they both like a gallery, so if you don't play yourself follow them, get some pointers and be a golfer.

Entries are coming in already. Ten dollars per person covers everything—lunch, dinner, greens fees and everything but caddy. If you are lucky enough to get one you pay him direct. If you are not a golfer $5.00 covers lunch and dinner and a chance to join the gallery and watch the boys drive into the lake on the 18th hole.

Send your entry fee direct to Motion Picture News and we will see that you are entered.

Following is the committee in charge of the tournament: Felix Feist, Schenck Productions; G. B. Gallup, Hodkinson; Abe Warner, Warner Brothers; Joe Dannenberg, Film Daily; E. Kendall Gillett, Motion Picture News.

Kansas Exhibitors Plan for Convention

AT a meeting of the board of directors of the M. P. T. O. Kansas at the Hotel Baltimore, Kansas City, Wednesday of last week, the date of the next semi-annual Kansas convention was set for Wichita, Kas., August 24 and 25, at the Hotel Broadview.

Pleasure will be combined with business at the convention, as $250 is to be awarded at the movie ball in conjunction with the convention on the first night for the best impersonations of movie stars. Then there will be a more serious phase to the meeting. State legislators and widely known men of the Middle West will be invited to attend.

Incorporation papers, changing the name of the Kansas body from the Kansas State Exhibitors' Association to the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Kansas, were received Thursday.

Members of the Kansas board attending the meeting were: R. G. Liggett, Gauntier theatre, Kansas City, Kas., president; Harry McClure, Emporia, Kas.; G. L. Hooper, Topeka, Kas.; R. R. Biechele, Kansas City, Kas.; Fred Meyn, Kansas City, Kas.; C. M. Smith, Kansas City, Kas., and Samuel Handy, Kansas City, Mo., attorney for the Kansas body.

President Poses, Makes Hit With Cameramen

Twenty-seven Washington news reel and news photographers admit that President Calvin Coolidge has endeared himself to them. At the noon hour the other day following his first reception to the press and cameramen at the executive offices in the White House annex, the camera guild asked permission to "shoot" the President, in the office. He was wearing a light suit. They asked him to change into a dark suit so "the picture would be good at any season."

After luncheon the President returned from the Willard to the presidential office at the White House, garbed in a cutaway. The movie men of the famous White House Cameramen's Club, had in the interim transformed the White House into a veritable movie studio with powerful Kliegl lights surrounding the presidential desk. After several minutes of posing smilingly for the cameramen and doing their bidding, the President waved his hand in deprecatory fashion at the few men who stayed behind to get exclusive "close-ups," saying, "Please, boys, that's enough, now."

K. C. Exhibitors Used as "Goats," is Claim

Kansas City real estate companies have used exhibitors as the "goat" in increasing the valuation of property, is the claim of Kansas City exhibitors. Several weeks ago there came within a period of three weeks announcements of five new suburban theatres that were to be constructed, all at logical locations for theatres. Rents immediately were boosted and in some cases genuine hardships were worked on exhibitors adjacent to the anticipated location of the new houses, it is said. A combination motion picture theatre and 10-story Hotel at 40th and Main Streets was among the proposed projects. With their goal —increased valuation of property—reached, the real estate companies then calmly announced that "plans for the theatres had fallen through," according to the exhibitors.

Fox Abandons Plan for Long Island Studio

Plan for the building of a big studio on Long Island was abandoned this week by William Fox, who has sold the large plot of ground near Corona originally bought for this purpose.

Fox production activities in the East will be centered in the plant on Tenth avenue. A big new studio will be built in Los Angeles.

Several other concerns, which planned the building of studios on Long Island, have given up the idea. Famous Players alone has a plant on the Island.

Oklahoma Will Decide on Child Labor Law

Whether or not Oklahoma's child labor law applies to theatre performances is to be decided by the Oklahoma Criminal Court of Appeals soon. Arrests of theatre managers over the state for violations of this law are being made almost every day, and the decision of the court will either prohibit or permit child actors to or not to perform on Oklahoma theatre stages.

Kansas Settles Difficulty With United Artists

The controversy between the M. P. T. O. Kansas and United Artists has been settled.

"We are pleased to announce that the differences existing between our organization and the United Artists Corporation have been satisfactorily adjusted," said C. E. Cook, business manager of the M. P. T. O. K. "This office refrained from advising that a difference existed until the matter could be thoroughly gone over with home office representatives. We have been advised that United Artists will not serve unfair competition, churches, schools, lodges, etc., without first having made every conceivable effort to sell the exhibitor, and not even then until the exhibitor has been advised of the company's intentions, as well as the M. P. T. O. K. headquarters. Fraternal organizations are becoming more active in this particular. We have an investigation committee now at work, which will make a report on the fairest manner in handling the proposition."

Sues for the Possession of Two Films

John M. Riehle, receiver for the Morosco Holding Corporation, has filed an injunction suit against the Greenwich Bank, Oliver Morosco, George R. Bentel and First National to get possession of the films "The Half Breed" and "Slippy McGee."

The complaint charges that Morosco and Bentel, as officers of Oliver Morosco Productions, assigned the films to the bank as security for loans, and that the stock of Oliver Morosco Productions, which owned the film rights to the two plays and produced them, is owned by the holding company.

The papers ask that the assignment of the films to the bank be declared illegal and that First National be restrained from paying any more money to the bank.

Japanese Control Pictures in Manchuria

Japanese own and operate most of the motion picture theatres in Manchuria, says Consul J. W. Ballantine in a report to the Department of Commerce. In Dairen, the chief city, there are three movie houses with seating capacities ranging from 600 to 1,000 under the direct management of Japanese companies.

American pictures are popular among all classes, but the better classes rarely go to the movies on account of many disagreeable features in the local houses, and the Consul states that a good theatre showing American pictures exclusively would be welcomed and heavily patronized, as the city offers few diversions.

Crandall's Public Service Work

By L. W. Boynton—Article No. 2

THE origin and growth of the Public Service and Educational Department of the Crandall theatres in Washington, D. C., have already been sketched in the first article in this series. The general plan has ben stated. It remains to take up in detail the points already enumerated, the first three of which group themselves naturally: Identifying the department in the public mind; second, the development of Organized Activity; and third, Community Service.

Telling the public what it was all about was the first big job. The people of Washington had to be made to understand that the department was absolutely distinct from the commercial aspect of exhibition.

Mr. Crandall points out that unless the public would believe that the department was organized solely as an aid to civic betterment, the whole plan would fail. Exhibitors who look at the proposition as a get-rich-quick scheme had better stay away from it, is the Crandall view.

Sincere determination to make the department of real service to the public had to be present before any success could be obtained. That was the Crandall idea; and experience justified it.

How Plan Started

The work was started in June, 1922, with Mrs. Harriet Hawley Locher in charge of the department. The first thing Mrs. Locher did was to attend the Biennial Convention of the General Federation of Women's Clubs at Chautauqua, N. Y., where she was introduced on the floor of the meeting by Mrs. Louis N. Geldert, President of the League of American Pen-Women, as "National Chairman of motion pictures for the League, representing the Crandall Theatres of Washington, D. C., and officially endorsing the Will H. Hays Movement."

This gave the new work at Washington national recognition and made it the subject of inquiry and discussion at this convention of women from all parts of the country.

When Mrs. Locher returned to Washington, she went systematically to work to publicize the new plan. The Crandall Publicity Department, under the direction of Nelson B. Bell, bombarded the newspaper and other publications with stories on the new project, and many of them "landed," for here was a pioneer work in a new field of theatrical activity.

It was deemed best to approach grown-ups through the agency of children's organizations. Special juvenile matinees for Saturday afternoons were given in the Crandall neighborhood houses. The old idea of children's matinees was most emphatically not followed. Instead of giving the kiddies fairy tales and uninteresting "drama," Mrs. Locher, from careful investigation already made, gave them real entertainment to the same degree as their elders.

Thus was avoided the rock upon which so many children's matinees have been wrecked—attempting to make the children look at pictures that their intelligence had long since left behind.

But if children were to see the same sort of pictures as their parents then there must be supervision, and here the point of contact with adults was established.

Advisory Board of the Crandall Public Service and Educational Department, composed of representatives of Child Welfare Organizations.

Committees were formed to see that the bills for the special matinees were carefully prepared and free from objectionable features of any kind. Later, a juvenile committee was appointed to sit with the adult Advisory Board and contribute suggestions, and this plan was found to be very valuable.

These Advisory Committees were permanent organizations recruited from the people of the neighborhoods in which the Crandall residential houses are located. Effort was made to have the members drawn from organizations devoted to child welfare.

The membership represents such organizations as the Municipal Playgrounds Association, Children of the American Revolution, Girl Reserves of the Y. W. C. A., Girl Scouts, Boy Scouts, Camp Fire Girls, Trinity Community House and the Boys' Club of Washington.

Exhibitors in any town of reasonable size can find similar organizations and form such an alliance, is the Crandall view.

Direct Box-Office Reaction

When these special matinees had become a regular part of the Crandall neighborhood program, Mrs. Locher went a step further in using children's organizations. The first undertaking was the filming of the kids' activities on all the playgrounds of the District of Columbia. This was done with the full cooperation of Mrs. Susie Root Rhodes, supervisor of municipal playgrounds, and the Commissioners of the District. Pictures were taken by the Crandall technical department, and the prints were given to the District for permanent record.

Now came the first direct box-office reaction. The pictures were shown as special Saturday attractions in the Crandall neighborhood house houses. Not only did all the children of Washington turn out to see themselves on the screen, but interest by parents was so great that the films had to be repeated as part of the regular night program.

Similar pictures have since been made of the High School Cadets competitive drills, High School Shakespeare Pageants, Athletic Meets, Fire Department Drills, Safety Week Drives and a great number of other civic activities.

While these activities were going on, a series of special evenings at Mrs. Locher's studio in the Metropolitan Theatre Building, immediately adjoining the private projection each of the children's room, were given for organizations named above. For each a special program was prepared, pictures were shown in the projection room and refreshments served.

These "at homes" for the young people soon led to the formation of the Capital Athletic Club, which subsequently won the basketball and swimming championships of Washington.

This athletic club, which was the forerunner of the Crandall public service in sports, started with a membership of eight girls. It now has sixty. The girls pay ten dolllars a year in dues and the organization is self-supporting except for the use of the Crandall projection-room and the films donated by Crandall.

Regular meetings are held. The members study slow-motion pictures of the sports in which they are interested and thus gain greater proficiency.

Out of this branch of organized activity grew the idea of inviting a large number of men and women interested in sports to view films in the projection room. And in this way the Crandall organization is contributing directly to the promotion of clean sport and the upbuilding of physique among the citizens of Washington.

Public Service in Sports

Of course, another natural development was the organizations of baseball teams among the boys in the various neighborhoods. The managers of the Crandall houses did this work, and a league of four teams was formed. Next year there will be six.

The growth of the Community Service Hours was equally important. It started from the pictures made of the playground activities. Soon hours, observed each week in the neighborhood theatres and devoted to topics of interest to each respective neighborhood, were in full swing.

These hours have been given to the Juvenile Protective Association, Municipal Playgrounds, Woman's Bureau of the Police Department, Mothers' Congress, Visiting Nurses' Association, Infant Welfare Association, Social Hygiene and others.

Wide publicity is given to these hours through a regular system of post-cards sent out by Mrs. Locher. Here is an example:

"If you believe civic information can be a valuable asset in any community life tell every one you know of the neighborhood gathering hour in the Crandall Neighborhood theatres.

"February 20th and 21st the Instructive Visiting Nurse Society will demonstrate the work of their organization with a motion picture 'Dividends of Happiness.' It is a story alive with human interest that will find an echo in every woman's heart."

Then follows a list of the showings at the various neighborhood theatres.

Mrs. Locher also sends out regularly cards calling attention to pictures as they are booked from week to week by the Crandall houses. This information service has played a great part in developing a new clientele from those who might not otherwise attend the regular shows. It also serves to drive home the public service work of the Crandall theatres, and is

George Spoor to Re-Enter Industry

Will Form Company to Make Pictures With His New Third Dimension Process

FINAL completion of his new third dimension process, by which motion pictures will be given depth, has been announced by George K. Spoor at the Essanay Studio in Chicago.

This is the process upon which Mr. Spoor has been at work for a long time, and which is said to have cost him $1,000,000. He will organize a new company to make pictures, utilizing the process.

On August 20 Mr. Spoor and his assistant inventor and technician, P. J. Berggran, gave a demonstration of the process at Chicago. The screen, which will fill the proscenium arch of the biggest theatre, measures twenty-one and a half by forty feet. The film is much larger than film ordinarily used, each "frame" being 50% higher and twice as wide as the "frame" now employed.

In front of the screen is strung a breaking surface consisting of several miles of black thread, thus making the picture float solidly in front of the eyes, creating depth and doing away with the flat effect.

This stereoscopic process, it is said, gives the background depth, while the actors appear exactly as they would in real life. It is also claimed that distortion has been completely overcome and that the picture can be seen from any point in the theatre with equal advantage.

Some innovations in picture-making are promised. For instance, it is planned by Mr. Spoor to do away with close-ups and cut-backs and make the picture unfold just as if the eye were viewing an occurrence, or a series of incidents in real life.

A new projection apparatus is necessary for showing these third dimension pictures, and an entirely new set of printing appliances had to be devised.

Since he returned from the making of features some years ago, Mr. Spoor, who is one of the pioneers in the industry, having organized the old Essanay Company with G. M. Anderson, has been devoting himself to the perfection of the invention.

It has attracted wide attention, particularly as it is believed to be the first process which claims to give the stereoscopic effect in the picture itself, without the use of some appliance by the spectator.

Within five weeks according to Mr. Spoor he will start work at the Essanay Studios on a big feature picture utilizing the new camera and on its completion will show it in legitimate theatres in the country's leading cities. Natural vision pictures came as the result of seven years' work by Mr. Spoor and his technical assistants, the principal of whom is Mr. Berggran.

Mr. Spoor has devoted his energies ever since the Essanay shut down on production first, to inventing and completing a wide camera capable of taking three dimension pictures, second, printing machinery where the prints are made by projection instead of contact, third, a specially designed and built projector, and fourth, a specially constructed screen.

Several times Mr. Spoor had been on the verge of success but each time some obstacle caused him to scrap the equipment already built and start practically all over. He regards the possibility of using a screen of hitherto unheard of size as of perhaps equal importance with the natural vision effect of the pictures making possible as it does the impressive presentation of huge sets and outdoor scenery as well as small interior sets where only part of the screen will be utilized and getting away from the use of close-ups as now practiced.

The natural vision pictures, Mr. Spoor believes, offer a great opportunity for the development of motion pictures and already many leaders in the motion picture industry, theatrical business and press have gotten into communication with Mr. Spoor requesting a view of the pictures. The very few who have seen them are reported to be enthusiastic over the possibilities.

Bill Hart to Build Studio and Reside at Westport, Conn.

ACCORDING to statements made by his sister, who resides at Westport, Conn., William S. Hart is to dispose of all his picture interests at Hollywood, including the studio property and remove to Westport, early this fall.

Hart plans to make the little Connecticut village his permanent home as soon as the Hart homestead which is now in the process of renovation is completed.

The Hart estate is one of the largest in the town, comprising more than 300 acres of woodland, swamps, hills, brooks and miniature prairie land. The estate was bought from Willard S. Adams of the Connecticut town, who, in turn, acquired possession of it from John Quincy Adams, a distant relative of the second President of the United States. Adams acquired it from Cornelius Brinckerhoff, an old Dutch settler in southwestern Connecticut.

The old homestead is more than 100 years old and is being thoroughly renovated under the personal instructions from Hart. An addition is being built on the south side, with another wing of the dwelling. Surrounding the chimney, a small observatory is being constructed. According to contour maps, the house is located on the highest point in the town of Westport. From the roof, a view across Long Island to the Atlantic ocean can be had, and a magnificant view is available of the surrounding country.

Miss Mary Hart, sister of the film star, is now occupying the house. She states she received a letter from her brother last week to effect he is disposing of all of his western property and will make his permanent home in Westport. He has been away from the estate about 12 years, having made only an occasional visit there during that period.

Unofficially, it is stated that the estate will be used by Hart as headquarters of a new motion picture corporation, with studio and headquarters located there.

Michigan M. P. T. O. Fixes Convention Dates

particularly valuable in building attendance because the cards are signed by Mrs. Locher and go to persons of wide influence in the city.

After nine months of this activity, Mrs. Locher sent out a return post-card asking for opinions on the service. The responses were overwhelming. "More than once I have enjoyed a good picture that I would have passed over if it had not been for your notice calling my attention to it," one patron wrote. Another said: "When we are planning to go to the movies, as we do every Friday night, my husband always says: 'What's in town? Where's Mrs. Locher's card? What does it say?' And nine cases out of ten we are guided by your description of the production."

And still another: "Your service establishes a personal interest not only in the picture shown, but in the theatre and the entire industry."

One more: "I am always eager to see the picture after getting your card, and you are drawing people to the right kind of pictures."

What exhibitor would not like to have a public service department that would draw this kind of comment: "More power to your elbow in your fight against Federal Censorship. It would be a calamity."

Incidentally, Mrs. Locher has a regular plan for meeting individual criticisms of pictures by women who may complain of the need for censorship. She has a printed form, headed "Review form for constructive criticism," which these critics are asked to fill out. It contains the name of the theatre at which the picture was seen; the date; the title; the name of the star; the names of the producer and distributor; and space for remarks. The critic is asked to fill out the form, and give it to Mrs. Locher, who will in turn send it to the producer. More often than not, criticism is thus effectually silenced.

All these activities have impressed the Crandall name upon the community as something above and beyond the merely commercial. It gradually fostered a new clientele, because the theatres as a matter of fact were being made to assume their rightful places as the real neighborhood community centers.

The most vital result was to establish the Crandall name as a synonym of co-operation, "service" and "progress" in the minds of the people of Washington. It "identified" the Department as a new branch of picture exhibition that meant what it said and had nothing to do directly with the box-office.

Washington, to be sure, is a city peculiarly fitted for the successful pursuit of this kind of work. But there are schools, churches and the active agencies of government in every city, town and hamlet in the country. Any of them or all of them, make a fine starting point for public service and educational work through the medium of the picture theatre and the community center idea.

M.P.T.O.A. Wars on Insurance Cost

Questionnaires Go to Exhibitors

A CONCENTRATED drive to effect nationwide reductions in insurance is announced by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

The first step in the campaign—the sending of insurance blanks and letters to the exhibitors of the country—was taken this week.

The movement for insurance premium reductions received special impetus at the recent Atlantic City meeting of the officers and board of directors of the M. P. T. O. A. Representatives of prominent insurance concerns presented detailed information, with particular reference to the safety risks of theatre insurance. It was pointed out that picture houses, as a rule, are infinitely better risks than many other buildings in the community, and yet the theatre rates are much higher.

Cohen Sends Out Letter

Following is the letter sent out to exhibitors by the M. P. T. O. A. and signed by President Sydney S. Cohen:

"Dear Exhibitor:

"We are enclosing you blank for the purpose of obtaining data on the theatre insurance situation in your territory. Will you please fill out the same as soon as possible and forward it to this office?

"The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America have taken the matter of theatre insurance in hand in such a way as to comprehend the needs and interests of the theatre owners in this relation.

"At the meeting of the national officers and board of directors in Atlantic City recently insurance experts gave us detailed information on the subject, convincing all that, through the efforts of your national organization, savings of from 25 to 47 per cent. can be effected in insurance premiums.

"Your national officers have discussed the insurance situation with prominent representatives of vaudeville and other theatrical interests and all are enthusiastic over the proposition of saving this money to theatre owners.

"To put our plans into execution and save you this insurance money we must have complete information so that we can apply the new processes to each theatre.

"Will you kindly let us hear from you as promptly as possible in this matter, so the reduced rate may soon be made effective.

"Fraternally and sincerely yours,
"Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.
"Sydney S. Cohen, President.

"N. B.—It is intended to keep all information confidential, using it only for the purpose of obtaining a complete analysis, thereby making the saving possible for you."

Colleen Moore, First National leading lady and John McCormick, Western Representative, who were married last week.

Colleen Moore Weds First National Executive

Colleen Moore, popular motion picture star, was married last Saturday at Los Angeles to John Emmett McCormick. Western representative of Associated First National Pictures, Inc. The ceremony took place at St. Thomas' Church. The Rev. M. J. Mullin officiated.

Carmelita Gerraghty, screen actress and a close friend of the bride, was the maid of honor. The groom was attended by Earl J. Hudson of New York, production manager for the organization with which Mr. McCormick is associated.

The ceremony, a quiet one, was attended only by the immediate families of the bride and groom, consisting of Mr. and Mrs. C. R. Morrison, the bride's father and mother; Cleeve Morrison, her brother; Mr. and Mrs. J. S. McCormick of San Francisco, the groom's parents; Mrs. Mary Kelly, Miss Moore's grandmother; her uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Mitchell and Mrs. E. J. Hudson.

The marriage is the culmination of a romance which had its inception two years ago when the winsome Colleen met Mr. McCormick while playing in her initial First National picture. Three months ago Miss Moore signed a long-term starring contract with First National.

The wedding trip has been postponed until after the completion of "The Swamp Angel," in October, when the couple will go East to New York and other Atlantic coast cities for a protracted stay.

National Premiere Long Run House for Los Angeles

THE Kinema theatre, Los Angeles, one of the first run houses of the West Coast Theatres, Inc., owned by Gore Brothers, Adolph Ramish and Sol Lesser, closed its doors August 17. It will reopen in six weeks as the new Criterion and become a national premiere long run house.

The theatre will be gutted from top to bottom, only the walls and balcony remaining. New decorations and effects are to be introduced. The lower floor will be transformed entirely, over 500 divans having been ordered to occupy one-half the capacity of the entire house.

When the theatre is reopened, only two performances will be given daily. All seats will be reserved, and it is probable the admission scale will range from fifty cents to two dollars. The policy will be long run premieres of big specials only, accompanied by elaborate preludes and prologues. A noted stage director will be engaged for these. A symphony orchestra will be installed.

The new Criterion, it is understood, will be First National's chief opposition house to the Grauman-Paramount interests on the West Coast.

T. O. C. C. Against Increase for Operators

THE Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, of New York City, at a meeting held August 21, declared against a wage increase for operators in their theatres. Committees of the operators' union and the T. O. C. C. held an extended conference earlier in the day, which resulted apparently in a deadlock.

It was stated by T. O. C. C. members after the meeting that the union had reduced its demands to 25%.

It was finally decided to hold a special meeting of the T. O. C. C. at the Hotel Astor on Friday, August 24, with the F. I. L. M. Club in attendance, when final decision will be made on the situation.

"Scaramouche" Elaborate Picture

Metro Gives Statistics Showing Size of Rex Ingram's Newest Production

"SCARAMOUCHE," Rafael Sabatini's French historical novel, which is serving as Rex Ingram's newest production for Metro is the latter's most elaborate effort since "The Four Horsemen."

The number of people used in all the scenes, including principals and extras, total in the neighborhood of 10,000, Metro declares, and furnishes other statistics of the picture as follows:

Twenty-two cameramen and their assistants photographed the scenes showing the Rennes mob charging the Palais de Justice and the scenes of the pitched battles between the Paris populace and the Government soldiery.

Four hundred and twelve tons of cobblestones were used to pave the streets of Paris, Gavrillac and Rennes.

The cobblestones were hauled a distance of 26 miles to the Metro studio where the Paris and Rennes streets were constructed and 36 miles to the spot in the San Fernando valley where the village of Gavrillac was built.

An army of carpenters, stone masons, street builders and other workers built the village of Gavrillac on two weeks' notice. It covers an area of 60 acres and is 10 miles from the studio. It is circumscribed by a four foot stone wall. An "automatic" river was installed in the natural gulley at one edge of the village. Its source is in six water tanks, each with a capacity of 1,200 gallons, erected at a point a few hundred yards above the town. The tanks are fed by pipes leading from a well 6,000 feet distant.

Six hundred and ten tons of sand and gravel were used in preparing the plaster and cement used in building the various sets.

Three hundred and forty tons of plaster were used.

Studio passenger automobiles and trucks transporting actors, cameras, properties and other material recorded a mileage total of 127,580 miles.

The workers included 630 carpenter, 75 plasterers, 88 painters and scenic artists, 65 electricians, 48 chauffeurs and teamsters, 23 property men and 34 assistant directors.

A research department with a staff of eight began its activities six months before the first scene was filmed.

There were 11 architects and designers.

Three diligences, or four-wheeled stage coaches of the period, were reproduced as well as three heavy berlines, or four-wheeled cabs. A dainty, glass-encased, two-wheeled cabriolet, a huge chaise and 45 wagons and other cruder vehicles including three large strolling players' wagons.

Ramon Novarro, Alice Terry and Lewis Stone head the cast of more than thirty principals, including Lloyd Ingraham, Julia Swayne Gordon, William Humphrey, Otto Matiesen, George Siegmann, Bowditch Turner, James Marcus, Edith Allen, Lydia Yeamans Titus, John George, Nelson McDowell, De Garcia Fuerburg, Roy Coulson, Edwin Argus, Clotilde Delano, Willard Lee Hall, Napoleon Bonaparte, Lorimer Johnstone, Edward Connelly, Howard Gaye, J. First National Releases Are Ready

Prints of Four Productions for September Distribution Sent Exchanges

THE last of the First National September releases arrived from the cutting and editing room last week and prints of four new productions have been sent to First National exchanges. They are Thomas H. Ince's "Her Reputation," which stars May McAvoy; "The Fighting Blade," Richard Barthelmess' story of seventeenth century England; "The Wanters," John M. Stahl's drama of society life, which is presented by Louis B. Mayer; and Samuel Goldwyn's "Potash and Perlmutter," screen adaptation of the famous Montague Glass stories, with the two famous characters who have made their appearance in five distinct plays on Broadway.

"Her Reputation" is a story of the power of the press and the evil of unscrupulous journalism which comes near to ruining the life of an innocent girl by misinterpreting circumstantial evidence. It brings Miss McAvoy to the screen in the delightful role of a New Orleans girl of French extraction who is made the victim of yellow journalism. The story is by Talbot Munday and Bradley King. John Griffith Wray directed under the personal supervision of Thomas H. Ince. Lloyd Hughes enacts the leading male role.

In "The Fighting Blade," Barthelmess has the role of a Dutch soldier who joins the ranks of Cromwell. The story permits considerable sword play and the climax features a battle scene in which several hundred horsemen attack a castle. John S. Robertson directed the picture and Dorothy Mackaill, star of "Mighty Lak a Rose," enacts the principal feminine role.

Exploitation for "Mothers-in-Law"

Al Lichtman Offers Prizes to Exhibitors Conducting Most Effective Campaigns

TO the exhibitor who puts over the most successful exploitation campaign for "Mothers-in-Law" Day, Al Lichtman, president of Preferred Pictures, will give a prize of $100. A second prize of $50 will also be given.

The judges will be the exploitation experts from the leading trade papers: Eddy Eckels, of the Exhibitors Trade Review, L. C. Moen, Motion Picture News, Epes Winthrop Sargent, Movie Picture World, and John S. Spargo, Exhibitors Herald.

The prize will not be awarded until some months after "Mothers-in-Law" is released on September 9th, in order to give everybody a chance to win.

Exhibitors who wish to compete should send to the Advertising Department of Preferred, New York City, a complete report of their campaign, together with clippings, photographs, and a statement of what the campaign did for their business on the picture.

As described in the press book on "Mothers-in-Law," the campaign on this picture is one of the simplest and most effective ever devised. Properly handled, it will produce a great amount of publicity, with practically no cost.

The theme of the picture, which should be the basis of the campaign, is that mothers-in-law have never been given their just dues. The first step is to write to the newspapers, suggesting that since we have Fathers' Day and Mothers' Day, we should have a "Mothers-in-Law" Day as well.

In order to test out the practicability of this idea, Preferred wrote a sample letter which was printed in the New York Sun and Globe. This letter is given in the press book.

The next step in the campaign is to arrange with the merchants for tie-ups. On "Mothers-in-Law" Day everybody will be urged to do something for his mother-in-law—buy her candy, flowers, a book, etc.

Every wide awake exhibitor can think of local applications of the idea. Women's Clubs, ministers, teachers, and prominent citizens will help, if properly approached.

Film History of Lincoln Finished

Twelve Reel Rockett Production Ready for Release Early in September

"THE Dramatic Life of Abraham Lincoln," the film history of the martyr President, upon which Al and Ray Rockett, executive officers of the Rockett Lincoln Film Company, of Hollywood, have been at work for two years, is completed.

The actual filming occupied eighteen weeks, but preceding it were two years of research work, in which every possible authority on Lincoln's life was consulted and all sources explored.

The search for an actor equipped physically and spiritually to portray Lincoln was a big obstacle, but the producers believe they have solved it successfully in the engagement of George A. Billings, said to bear a startling recemblance to the great Executive. He is a stranger to motion pictures and had only small experience on the stage.

Frances Marion wrote the scenario. Direction was in the hands of Phil Rosen, M.P.D.A., and the camera work was done by Robert Kurrle and Lyman Broening, assisted by nearly a score of cinematographers.

Thousands of men, women and children, the announcement says, were used in the action, which covered the period from 1809, the year of Lincoln's birth, to 1865. The picture, which is in twelve reels, takes up in detail the striking incidents of Lincoln's life.

Among the one hundred and fourteen sets in the picture were the birthplace in Kentucky; the log town of New Salem; Lincoln's law office in Springfield; the Lincoln-Douglas debates; the historic Decatur Convention; the Lincoln home in Springfield; the slave market, New Orleans; the historic East Room of the White House; Gettysburg; the Cabinet room; President Lincoln's office; Grant's headquarters; Lee's surrender; Fort Sumter; Fort Stevens; historic Pennsylvania Avenue from White House to Capitol, a mile and a quarter long; Ford's theatre; the great catafalque in the East Room; and the historic room where Lincoln died.

The picture will be ready for release early in September and will probably be screened under its working title, "The Dramatic Life of Abraham Lincoln." A copy of this picture will be inurned in Washington in custody of the government to be screened on the three hundredth anniversary of the birth of Lincoln, February 12, 2109, the idea being to prove that film can be preserved "alive" indefinitely.

The Rockett Company plans to follow this Lincoln picture with other productions of America's historical subjects.

Four Metro Releases in September

Will Mark Opening of Biggest Year In History of the Organization

FOUR productions are to be released by Metro during the month of September. These will be the opening guns in the biggest year of the organization's history. They are "The French Doll," Mae Murray's newest photoplay; "Strangers of the Night," the Fred Niblo production of the famous stage play, "Captain Applejack;" "Rouged Lips," starring Viola Dana, and "Three Ages," Buster Keaton's initial feature length comedy.

Even more elaborate press sheets, posters, accessories and other publicity and exploitation material has been prepared for these pictures than in the past. Metro's idea of the fullest co-operation is evidenced in the material available on these productions, and the additional request that exhibitors call on the company for any additional help that they may require in putting the pictures over.

"The French Doll," the first of Metro's September releases, is a Robert Z. Leonard presentation, with Mae Murray in a role that gives scope to all her abilities, besides showing her in $100,000 worth of clothes and making 50 changes during the course of the picture. The production is said to be more elaborate than any of Miss Murray's previous pictures. "The French Doll" is an adaptation of the stage play of the same name, which enjoyed unusual success on Broadway and on the road, and is sponsored by Tiffany Productions, of which Mr. Leonard is director general and M. H. Hoffman general manager.

"Strangers of the Night," directed by Fred Niblo and presented through Metro by Louis B. Mayer, is a screen version of that outstanding hit of the past theatrical season, "Captain Applejack." WHAT SHOWMEN THINK OF CURRENT RELEASES

Exhibitors' Box-Office Reports

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATRES

FAMOUS PLAYERS

Salomy Jane—
Fairly true to the original tale. Interesting to the minority of movie fans. Only fair business. (Middle West.)

One of the best photographed dramas of the melo type that we have had. Story poorly done in continuity at times, but went well. (East.)

Homeward Bound—
Played to good crowds for a week. (Middle West.)

A picture of fairly good quality. Business good all week. (East.)

The Covered Wagon—
Second week equals the first in numbers. (East.)

The Woman With Four Faces—
Star popular; picture held interest. Business quite good. (East.)

The Purple Highway—
Not a very big box office attraction. Mediocre production and rather unfavorable title did not bring much business. Strong comedy on bill helped to put over the engagement. (West.)

FIRST NATIONAL

Trilby—
Great picture; played to very good business. (Middle West.)

A Man of Action—
About an average picture and box office attraction. (Middle West.)

The Lonely Road—
A rather weak picture used to show Miss MacDonald's beauty. (East.)

The Sunshine Trail—
Tickled the crowd. (East.)

Girl of the Golden West—
Did a fair business on second week of run. (West.)

Wandering Daughters—
Business was good, although this is the type of picture that is beginning to become tiresome to audiences that want real entertainment and not "exposes" of so-called "society" and youth of the present day. (West.)

GOLDWYN-COSMO.

The Love Piker—
Entertained fairly well. Fair business. (East.)

Executives and director of Rockett-Lincoln Film Co. From left to right they are, Phil Rosen, director "The Dramatic Life of Abraham Lincoln;" Ray Rockett, president and general manager; A. L. Rockett, vice-president and production manager.

Interesting but very light; nothing to kick about, but far from being a knock-out. (Middle West.)

The Spoilers—
The attendance held up good with this one. (Middle West.)

A very fine production, and very interesting. Big week. Everybody liked it. (Middle West.)

Mad Love—
Foreign-made film and more or less of a freak. Business fair. (East.)

Enemies of Women—
This picture did very good. There was some unfavorable comment at the Sunday showing, but the crowds kept on coming all week and there was plenty of favorable comment all week. Good picture. (Middle West.)

UNIVERSAL

The Victor—
Good business for hot weather. (Middle West.)

Shooting for Love—
Western fans liked this one and business was good. (Middle West.)

The Shock—
A good picture. Business good, best for several weeks. (Middle West.)

Out of the ordinary to say the least, and better than that, popular approval and the reviewers marked it one of the best films in the city for months. Very good business in a poor week. (East.)

F. B. O.

Human Wreckage—
Drew tremendous well pleased houses. (East.)

Went very well on second week. Picture previously reported. (East.) (Middle West.)

Three Jumps Ahead—
Not so good, but Mix has following here. Business good. (East.)

PLAYGOERS

Counterfeit Love—
As the name indicates, more counterfei than real. Average business. (Middle West.)

ALLIED P. & D.

Suzanna—
Fairly good picture, put over by Mabel Normand. Drew well. (Middle West.)

AL LICHTMAN

Daughters of the Rich—
Fair picture and fair business. (East.)

Pretty good. Almost said real good. (Middle West.)

WARNER BROS.

Brass—
Brought back for a week's return engagement and did a very nice business—just as good if not better than the first run, despite warmer weather. As a picture it can stand up with any of them. (West.)

Main Street—
Played to nice business during hot week; several storms also interfered with attendance. Picture well liked. (Middle West.)

Was well exploited and drew fairly good houses all week. Press favorable in commen s, and picture well liked. (East.)

SELZNICK

Modern Marriage—
Very poor picture. Business poor. (Middle West.)

METRO

Rouged Lips—
High time that Viola Dana had as good a vehicle as this. She does full justice to the material and makes a really funny film, and clever too. (East.)

HODKINSON

The Rapids—
Very fine photography and the story goes into the fair class. Was quite well liked, however, and played to fair business for this time of the summer. (East.)

The Lion's Mouse—
Plenty of thrills, excitement, society stuff, and at the end an honest man instead of a crook. Well liked and very fair business. (East.)

STATE RIGHTS

Sinner or Saint—
A snappy picture that pleased the crowd. (East.)

Bright Lights of Broadway—
A very good picture, satisfactory entertainment. Business good. (Middle West.)

East Side—West Side—
A nice picture. Failed to create any great enthusiasm, but did a pleasing business for a week. (West.)

Has the World Gone Mad!—
Just another program picture. Title helped business some. Not strong enough for summer. (East.)

Luck—
Fair picture. Business good. (Middle West.)

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 752 S. WABASH AVE.

VIRGINIA VALLI, whose latest production, the Universal Super Jewel, "A Lady of Quality," has recently been completed, is in Chicago, looking over "Up the Ladder," the Owen Davis play, produced by William A. Brady, which has been offered to her as her second Super Jewel.

Frank & Schwartz have sent out invitations for the opening of their New Palace theatre at Moline, Illinois, on Saturday, August 25th. The house policy will be vaudeville and high-class pictures. Louis H. Frank and I. Maynard Schwartz, who compose this enterprising firm, now own and operate four theatres, three of them being located in Chicago.

Will Baker, who for seven years has been connected with the Goldwyn organization, the last three as road salesman for the Chicago exchange, has gone with Al Lichtman as special representative and will make his headquarters in Pittsburgh.

G. P. Mason is now traveling Western Illinois and Ben Weisenbach, Wisconsin, for Hodkinson Pictures.

Lon Chaney, noted character actor, was in Chicago Tuesday en route from Hollywood to New York and was honored guest at a luncheon given by local Universal officials at the Blackstone Hotel on Tuesday to members of the daily and trade press. Following the luncheon a one-reel picture of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" in the making was shown, and Mr. Chaney made very interesting explanations of how the massive settings, including the replicas of the historic church of Notre Dame and medieval Paris were built. The press representatives were particularly interested in his description of the make-up he used in playing Quasimodo, the hunchback, in this big feature. District Manager Stern, Sales Manager Lesserman and Publicity Director Hill were the hosts at the luncheon, which was thoroughly enjoyed.

Mr. McConnel, of McConnel & Hoeffler, the well known Quincy exhibitors, has taken over the Empress at Decatur and will open his new house with a vaudeville and picture policy about the first of September.

Jack Swartz of First National escaped injury when his car was badly smashed in a collision with a mail carrier's Ford on the Lincoln Highway near Dixon last week. The mail man was badly hurt and confined to the hospital with seventeen cuts in his head. Both cars were traveling at a high rate of speed when they bumped. Nate Wolfe of the same concern has recovered from his recent operation and is back on the job.

William Clark and son have acquired the Castle theatre at Havana, Illinois, and will operate it hereafter. Mr. Clark is a well series of four features of which the known exhibitor, having formerly operated houses in Southern Illinois.

The way the public has been crowding to see big pictures this summer is an indication of renewed interest in the movies and an indication of good business this winter. Joe Hopp reports that his splendid Fort Armstrong theatre in Rock Island broke all house records with "Circus Days," which was shown in the midst of a hot spell, and word comes from the Illinois at La Grange that it also broke records with this feature as the attraction.

T. S. Scott of the Scott theatre, Jacksonville, Ill., has reopened the Grand, where he will show high grade second run features and some first runs.

Frank Rhinehart of the Apollo and Majestic theatres, Belvidere, Ill., has signed up his Apollo theatre for a First National franchise and will start showing this company's releases on September first.

The Association of Motion Picture Equipment Dealers is now organized 100 per cent in Chicago, all supply houses in the city having become members with dues fully paid up. A meeting of local members is held each Friday at 12.30 and much benefit is being derived from the round table discussions of matters pertaining to the business. Carl Fulton of Fulco Sales Company is chairman of the local branch. Offices of the national association have been established at 10 S. La Salle street, with secretary Frank F. Barth in charge, and the amount of business being transacted there is indicative of the interest supply men and manufacturers throughout the country are taking in the organization. Mr. Barth last week made a flying trip to Detroit in the interest of the association.

J. N. Kenny of the Star and Palace theatres, Watseka, was in Chicago last week arranging bookings for the coming season. He set in First National features for the Palace for the balance of the year and also closed for other important releases.

Manager Eddy Silverman of Warner Brothers exchange has appointed Lee Woodyett sales manager and states that a number of salesmen will be added to the Warner Brothers local staff within a few days.

J. M. Duncan, Vitagraph district manager, has returned to his Chicago headquarters after his first trip through the Canadian territory which has been added to his district recently. He visited Vitagraph exchanges at Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver, B. C., and on his return stopped off at Minneapolis for an inspection of the exchange there.

Ben Garretson has been given charge of the advertising and publicity for the run of "If Winter Comes," the Fox feature which is to have an extended run at the Harris theatre.

New Agreement with Chicago Musicians

SAMUEL ABRAHAMS, vice-president of the Illinois Motion Picture Theatre Owners, acting on behalf of Chicago members of that organization and other Chicago theatre men, has negotiated a new agreement with the Federation of Musicians, to become effective on termination of the present agreement, September 3rd.

The basic scale remains practically the same as it has been during the past year, but will be based on a thirty-two hour week instead of a thirty-three hour week, the working times to be divided into four-hour week days and six hours on Saturdays and Sundays for theatres which do not run daily matinees. The rule providing that members of orchestras playing two weeks must be retained by theatres during the entire season, has been withdrawn.

Mr. Abrahams also succeeded in having the musicians withdraw their demand for a two-year contract and the new agreement will run for one year only.

Harry Igel is still talking about the speed (?) which he claims Edgar Hopp showed as a chauffeur on their recent trip East. According to Harry, ten miles an hour was the best the speedometer showed all the way from Detroit to Chicago.

J. A. Harris has been appointed manager of Associated Exhibitors' Chicago exchange. Mr. Harris is former manager of Associated's Pittsburgh office.

George Hackathorne, one of the stars in "Merry-Go-Round," which is a coming attraction at the Roosevelt theatre, and who also played one of the leading parts in "Human Wreckage," passed through Chicago last week en route to New York, where it is expected that arrangements will be completed for him to play leads in some of Booth Tarkington's stories, which are to be filmed at an early date. Mr. Hackathorne only tarried for a few hours in Chicago, making his headquarters at Universal exchange.

It is reported that Christos and Van Voukis of the Rex have acquired the 1,000-seat Wabash theatre located at Eighteenth and Wabash and will take it over on November 4th.

Irving Mandell of Security Pictures reports that he has purchased Northern Illinois and Indiana rights to a number of pictures, including eighteen two-reel Crescent comedies featuring Milburn Moranti, a series of eight Bill Patton Westerns, a first release is "The Dangerous Trail" and a feature picture, "The Man Alone," starring Hobart Boswell.

W. D. Burford of the Midwest Theatres Company, reports that this company has added another theatre to its already large holdings. It is the Grand theatre at Mattoon, a 750-seat house. William Holliday, who has been operating the Avon at Decatur, has been appointed manager of the Grand, which is scheduled to open on September 1st, by which date extensive improvements which are being made are expected to be completed.

Nicholas Young of Brunhild & Young has returned from a 1,500-mile motor jaunt, during which he visited Detroit, Cleveland and many other cities east of Chicago. He was within a short distance of Marion, Ohio, the day of President Harding's funeral, but so great had been the influx of visitors to Marion that the authorities had barred all roads leading to that city, so that Mr. Young and his party were unable to pay a last tribute to the late President as they had hoped to do.

Word from Minneapolis that Al Steffes is rapidly recovering from his recent illness will be good news to his host of Chicago friends and admirers. Up to the time of his illness Al had been working hard, spending all his time in an effort to make the already strong Minnesota Motion Picture Theatre Owners a 100 per cent organization, and he is anxious to get back on the job.

Julius Lamm of Brunhild & Young is back on the job after a two weeks' vacation at Elkhart Lake, Wisconsin.

Clyde Eckhart, assistant to the general manager of Fox Film Corporation, was in Chicago completing arrangements for the opening of the "Monroe," which was formerly Barbee's Loop theatre, and which has been entirely remodeled and redecorated since it was taken over by the Fox organization. The Monroe will be opened on the night of August 31st with a gala invitation performance at which "The Silent Command" will be the feature, and a number of officials of the company and other film notables are to attend. Mr. Eckhart also completed plans for the opening of "If Winter Comes" at the Harris on the night of September 1st. This opening will also be an invitation de luxe performance. "If Winter Comes" will be shown at $2 top prices.

Joe Friedman of the Tower theater, St. Paul, Minnesota, was a Chicago visitor last week. He made the trip to met Clyde Eckhart of Fox Film Corporation, and a contract was closed whereby Mr. Friedman secured the entire Fox program for his St. Paul house. Mr. Friedman stopped over in Milwaukee on his return trip and attended a session of the Wisconsin M.P.T.O.

Putting "Penrod and Sam" Across

Early Campaigns on New Feature

AMONG recent releases receiving special exploitation effort is "Penrod and Sam," which is being given a wide variety of advertising stunts. Several of these are grouped together in the following article.

Like many other exhibitors, Manager D. J. Shepherd of the Branford theatre, Newark, N. J., aimed his campaign particularly at the youngsters, running a special performance for them.

The show was run after the regular run of this picture which was exhibited at the Branford.

About 50,000 cards were distributed through the schools, which were holding summer session, each card being good for ten votes for the most popular boy who received a suit of Penrod Clothes, donated by Hahne and Company, the local department store. The card was also good for ten votes for the most popular girl, who received a complete set of Booth Tarkington's works, donated by the same firm and a special prize was given of a bathing suit, donated by Hahne and Company, for the young lady having the most freckles.

The show was greatly aided by the running of announcements in the Uncle George Column of the Morning Ledger which has a children's club which lends itself nicely to children's parties.

Puzzle Picture Stunt

What Manager Frank L. Browne of the Liberty theatre, Long Beach, Calif., wanted was youngsters who could follow figures in curved lines, doubling lines and any other formations as outlined by 98 consecutive numbers in a diagram game puzzle.

It was all part of his exploitation for "Penrod and Sam" and the Long Beach newspapers took to it willingly. They printed the diagram puzzle, the completed picture as represented by the numbers, showing some of the characters in "Penrod and Sam." The idea was taken from the press sheet but Manager Browne adapted it to his needs and actually got the newspapers to publish.

The first one hundred boys who finished the drawing and identified the actors correctly were invited to see "Penrod and Sam" at the Liberty.

PUTTING "SAFETY LAST" ACROSS

Lobby display material used by Manager H. A. Brownlee of the Capitol theatre, Oklahoma City, on "Safety Last" (Pathe)

Boy and Dog Appeal Used

A contest which got over exceptionally well because it was packed brim full of human interest and appeal was staged by A. A. Malaney, exploitation man for Loew's Ohio theatres, in connection with the showing of "Penrod and Sam" at the State theatre, Cleveland.

Malaney first prepared the ground by playing up "Duke," the dog in "Penrod and Sam," by featuring him in stills and ads. Then he arranged with the Cleveland Press, a local afternoon daily, to run a contest offering a dog like Duke to the boy who wrote the best letter describing his idea of the ideal dog—the kind he should be and the qualities he should possess. A daily story was carried, with pictures of Ben Alexander and Duke, stills from the picture, as illustrations. The response was remarkably good, and some of the letters even drew comment on the editorial page. In case a boy did not want the dog, he was allowed to select a suit of Penrod Clothes, thus furnishing a tie-up with a local department store. A $10 gold piece and twenty-five tickets to the theatre were other prizes offered.

Such a contest has excellent possibilities, inasmuch as any editor likes to play up something with a child interest as the predominant feature. This one is especially strong, combining as it does the human interest of those inseparable companions—a boy and a dog.

Poster Cut-out Makes Neat "Adam and Eva" Front

Manager H. A. Brownlee of the Capitol theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla., used as a lobby display on "Adam and Eva" a lattice framework, which was cut and fitted to the entrance of the theatre, allowing the opening for entrance and exit.

In the center of the lobby, tacked against the lattice framework, was a large head cut-out of Marion Davies, underneath which was the name of the star and title of the picture and on one side of the lobby was a small cut-out of the characters, Adam and Eva, respectively.

A municipal parade, as part of Anti-Narcotic Week, was put over by William Goldman, owner of the Kings theatre, in his campaign for "Human Wreckage."

The parade was but part of the campaign. To begin with, Mayor Henry W. Kiel officially proclaimed the week of July 29 Anti-Narcotic Week for St. Louis. Col. Phil Brockman, president of the St. Louis Board of Police Commissioners, and W. E. Atkins, head of the United States narcotic squad in St. Louis, also indorsed the movement.

Tie-ups were also perfected with the United States Army, Navy and Marine Corps recruiting services, the large recruiting signs throughout the city advising everyone to see Mrs. Wallace Reid in person with "Human Wreckage" at the Kings.

Almost everywhere one went he was greeted by some advertisement of "Human Wreckage;" even in the Young Women's Christian Association's restaurants 50,000 napkins advertising "Human Wreckage" were used. On the disk wheels of the taxicabs of the Black and White fleet were the banners, while downtown were distributed 25,000 blotters and 2,500 one-sheets. Printed on every street crossing was the line "Human Wreckage," 10,000 such impressions being made. Muslin banners were placed on all prominent buildings, 5,000 yards of muslin being used. The advertising also included 300 three-sheet cut-outs, 2,500 streamers, 100 illuminated 24-sheet sign boards and many cards containing the official indorsement of the St. Louis Chamber of Commerce.

Novel Stunts and Tie-ups in "Safety Last" Drive

An unusually complete campaign on "Safety Last" was put over by Manager Harold Horne of Loew's Palace theatre, Memphis, Tenn., a few features of which are listed in following paragraphs:

"What he considers his biggest accomplishment in the way of tie-ups was that with the Van Vleet Drug Co., which was sold on the idea of furnishing 10,000 bottles of liniment (regular size) and paying for one-half the cost of printing tags to fasten around the neck of each bottle. The tag advertised the picture at the Palace and suggested that it might be needed for aching sides after viewing the film.

Window displays carried out the same idea and several drug concerns were persuaded to put in whole windows of this Magic Liniment with a card reading: "Special Sale. Better take home a bottle. You will need it to rub into your sides when you get through laughing at the 4,354,526 side-splitting antics in Harold Lloyd's 'Safety Last,' at Loew's Palace. Seven big reels of joy."

Manager Horne has made one of the most conspicuous parts of his recent campaigns the placing of cut-outs on corners of principal streets. He had a most unusual one on "Safety Last." Under a giant cut-out of Harold Lloyd, a three-sheet board with actual record (a giant one furnished by the Vocalion people) occupying a central position carried this copy: "This record actually contains 5,437,728 laughs (big record here), recorded at Loew's Palace theatre, during Sunday's performance of Harold Lloyd in 'Safety Last.'"

SUMMER "SNOW BRIDE" DISPLAY

Silk Tie-up Is Aid to Run of "Souls for Sale"

Manager Clement of the Orpheum theatre, Ft. Wayne, Ind., and H. T. Snowden, Goldwyn exploitation man, arranged a big silk tie-up with Wolf & Dessauer's department store for the showing of "Souls for Sale." The management of the store devoted a large window to the display of blue silks. Three models wearing turquoise blue gowns were posed in the window. A large card read: "Turquoise blue, the color of the elaborate gowns worn in 'Souls for Sale,' Rupert Hughes' daring story of Hollywood at the Orpheum all next week."

A moving billboard ballyhoo, consisting of 24-sheets mounted on an auto truck, patrolled the streets for several days in advance of the showing and for most of the week while the picture was on.

Five thousand of the teaser envelopes, "How to get into the movies" and 1,000 hangers were distributed. Every downtown drug store in the city placed the Palm Olive strips in their windows—forty-four windows carried them—and sixteen studio streamers were placed in big store windows.

Telegrams from Rupert Hughes and Eleanor Boardman to the "fans" of Ft. Wayne were incorporated in the teaser ads. A double page advertising truck of co-operative advertising was run in the Journal-Gazette.

Clown Ballyhoos Showing of "Soul of the Beast"

A street ballyhoo that attracted no little attention on the streets of Mobile, Ala., was used recently by C. D. Haug, Metro e ploitation man, for the engagement at the Crown theatre of "Soul of the Beast."

A stunt-man dressed as a clown walked up and down the main streets distributing small envelopes properly imprinted with the name of the picture and the theatre—each enclosing a small elephant "animal cracker." This stunt was pulled several days before "Soul of the Beast" opened at the Crown and thousands of people about the Mobile streets became acquainted with the picture in this way.

EFFECTIVE USE OF LOBBY SPACE FOR HAND-PAINTED MATERIAL ON "THE CHRISTIAN"

Manager Charles F. McManus of the Colonial theatre in Tacoma prepared this artistic lobby display material for use during the showing of "The Christian" (Goldwyn)

Two-for-One Ticket Scheme Worked by George Schade

On the theory that any extra receipts were velvet during the hot spell, George Schade, owner and manager of the theatre of that name at Sandusky, Ohio, has been using a special two-for-one ticket plan, on which he reports excellent results.

Small printed cards were distributed broadcast announcing that the card, accompanied by one paid admission, would admit two people. For children, ten cents extra would admit two.

The method of distribution marked the ingenuity of the plan. With Sandusky noted as a summer resort, Schade made a special play for the summer resort hotels, picking out about 100 names of guests registered at the various hotels. He made sure that his selection was composed of married women who would be all the more likely to have their escorts take them to see the picture. The escort, of course, paid.

"White Shoulders" was the first picture upon which the plan was tried out.

Jazz Musical Program Aids "Children of Jazz"

Manager Charles F. McFarland billed Houston, Texas, with plenty of posters, well in advance of play date, announcing the coming of "Children of Jazz" to the Queen theatre. The outstanding feature of the campaign was a striking lobby display, which was rather unusual in color scheme, consisting of black and white stripes. On one side of the lobby was a cut-out of a young lady dressed in the costumes of 1850 and on the other side of the lobby was a modern "jazz baby" in the latest attire. Across the entrance to the theatre in large cut-out letters was the title of the picture.

Special cut-outs, photos, insert cards were on display in restaurants, hotels and all dance halls. Mr. McFarland made a special appeal to the lovers of dancing and as a special feature of the week, was a jazz musical program, during which the orchestra played the latest popular hits.

"SLANDER THE WOMAN" PROLOGUE WITH PROFESSIONAL PLAYERS

Manager E. J. Weisfeldt of Saxe's Strand theatre, Milwaukee, was able to obtain a number of stock company players to present this prologue to "Slander the Woman" (First National)

How "Brass" Has Been Exploited

Stunts Successfully Put Across by Exhibitors Elsewhere on Photoplay

BASED principally upon the title, a considerable variety of appropriate exploitation stunts have been used in advertising the runs of "Brass" throughout the country. One of the heaviest campaigns used was that for the showing at Loew's State theatre, Los Angeles, under the supervision of Dick Spier, director of publicity for West Coast theatres.

The Los Angeles banks and office buildings were flooded with blotters, marriage and divorce heralds were distributed in automobiles and homes, wedding ring novelties were given to thousands of people, and window cards were placed in prominent store windows. Mr. Spier also secured a number of book window displays with dealers selling the novel of Charles G. Norris.

In fully twenty-five theatres in Los Angeles and Hollywood, Mr. Spier had screened a number of novel slides announcing the showing of the picture at Loew's State. Spier also took advantage of the aid offered by the several members of the cast and staged a wedding scene at the Cinderella Roof, which is said to be the biggest dance pavilion on the coast. For this stunt, which was witnessed by hundreds of people, Baby Bruce Guerin played the part of the bridegroom, Monte Blue acted as the minister, Harry Myers was best man, and Miss DuPont played the part of the bridesmaid. The exterior of the building carried a number of 24-sheets and posters advertising the picture; and considerable publicity was secured in the local dailies.

Features Lobby Display

Manager J. G. Evins, of the Lucas theatre, Savannah, Ga., featured an attractive lobby. Forty eighteen-inch gilded ring cut-outs alternating with forty large red hearts entirely around the marquee made a display which all who passed must see. On the end of the marquee a large five-foot sign, made of heavier board, carried the single word, "Brass" in gold letters against a black background. This sign could be seen for blocks.

In the lobby an arrangement of cut-outs and stills rounded up a most attractive display.

HOW ONE THEATRE PUT OVER "THE WHITE FLOWER" IN LOBBY

The Colonial theatre in Bluefield, W. Va., prepared this special lobby display for "The White Flower" (Paramount), using poster cut-outs and hand-painted material

Vocal Prologue Given with "Law of the Lawless"

The presentation of "The Law of the Lawless" at the Rialto theatre, Macon, Ga., was made more interesting by the manner in which Manager George A. McDermit handled it.

A local girl was obtained as a soloist and, dressed in Gypsy costume, she sang the lines of the "Gypsy Love Song" from "The Fortune Teller."

This manner of presentation was particularly in keeping with the theme and was very appropriate.

"Circus Days" Is Tied Up With Elks On Stunt

As the result of a tie-up arranged by Ace Berry, general manager, with the B. P. O. Elks and the National Amusement Park Association on "Circus Days," more than a thousand orphans and wards of various institutions were guests of the Circle theatre, Indianapolis, at a special showing.

Jackie Coogan's picture opened the day for the children, who were later treated to a picnic by the Elks. The orphans were taken from the Indianapolis Orphans' Home, the German Orphans' Home and the Home of the Sisters of the Good Shepherd. A picnic dinner was served at noon, and in the afternoon the orphans were guests of the Riverside Park management, where the picnic was held.

A cordon of policemen headed the group of orphans as they paraded through the principal downtown streets before coming to the theatre. The Indianapolis News newsboys' band marched with them. They bore large signs emphatically praising "Circus Days." Mr. Berry received them and told them of the pleasure Jackie Coogan would take in knowing that so many children in Indianapolis would see his latest and his greatest picture.

Airplane Flight Advertises "The Spoilers" Showing

Joseph A. Jackson, manager of studio publicity for Goldwyn, utilized the first one-day flight covering the length of the Pacific Coast to aid in exploiting "The Spoilers" at the Liberty theatre in Seattle.

Accompanying Lieut. C. C. Mosely, U. S. A., commander of Clover Field, Santa Monica, Calif., was Lieut. E. E. Morrison of the Army Air Service Reserves. In civil life he is photographer for Mae Murray. Jackson prepared a letter which was signed by Milton Sills, Barbara Bedford, Noah Beery, Anna Q. Nilsson, Ford Sterling and Wallace MacDonald inviting Mayor Brown of Seattle to attend the showing of "The Spoilers" at the Liberty. This letter was given to Lieutenant Morrison to deliver to Mayor Brown. The story of the letter made the news dispatches concerning the first one-day flight from Santa Monica to Seattle.

All West Coast newspapers carried the story, mentioning the letter from the leading players in "The Spoilers," and many newspapers east of the Rockies gave it space.

ATTRACTIVE "LOVE PIKER" LOBBY

Display over entrance doors of Ascher's Merrill theatre, Milwaukee, on "The Love Piker" (Cosmopolitan)

Well Balanced Campaign on "Sixty Cents An Hour"

Manager William Bedell, of the Rialto theatre, Atlanta, Ga., started his campaign on "Sixty Cents an Hour" five days in advance by the distribution of heralds, placing them on the desks of hotels and banks and distributing them throughout the downtown office buildings.

Four days in advance gum stickers, printed with the title of the show, were stuck on the windshields of automobiles and on the mirrors of downtown soda fountains. Window cards were distributed also in the best business and residential sections.

A twenty-four sheet cut-out was mounted atop of each marquee. A banner at the base of this carried the title, the names of the two stars, Hiers and Logan, and the slogan, "Its a Paramount Picture." At night spotlights were focused on the display.

A great deal of interest was excited by the parade of Ford cars, in co-operation with the "U-Driv-It" System. The parade was led by a Packard, followed by a truck, with a five-piece band playing popular music, and a train of ten Drive-It-Yourself Fords. Each car carried a banner across the sides and rear, stating that Walter Hiers used a "U-Drive-It" in "Sixty Cents an Hour," at the Rialto. A cut-out of Hiers was held aloft at the front, the middle and at the end of the parade. Discs bearing the title were placed on the wheels of the cars. This parade was executed once each day the first three days of showing.

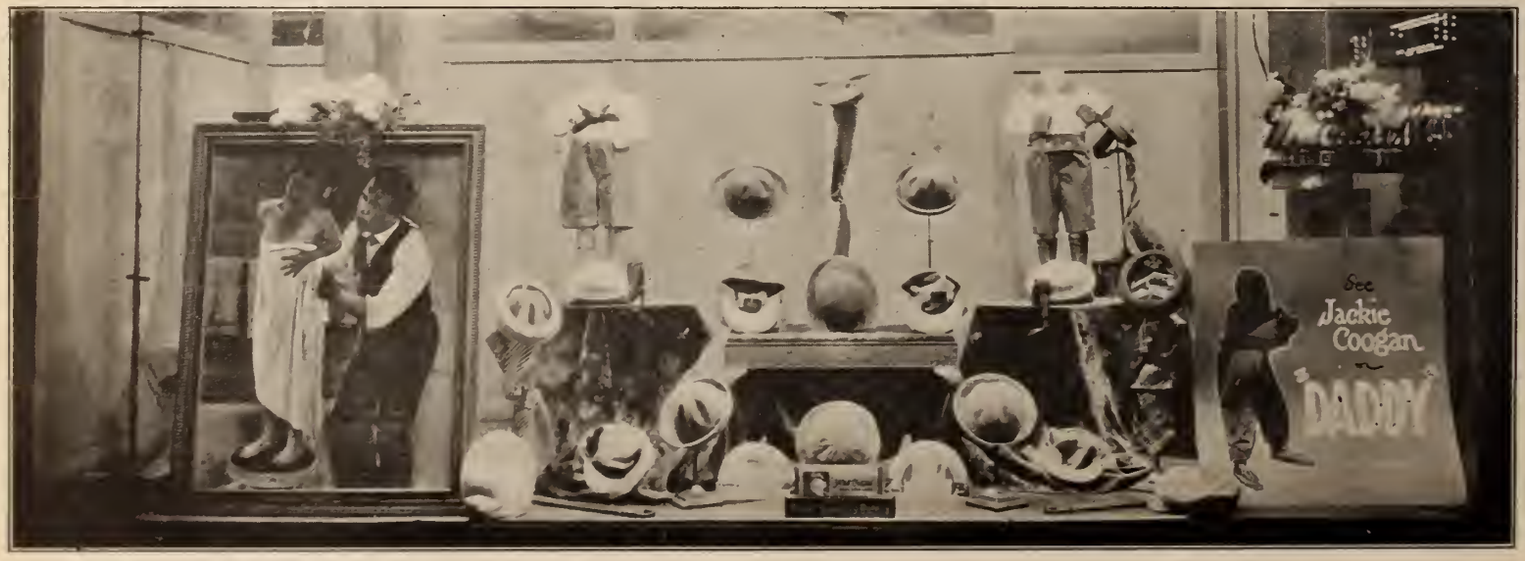
Boy Manager for a Day Is "Penrod and Sam" Stunt

A contest whereby a youngster of 14 or under was to be selected manager of the theatre for a day was the novel exploitation measure used on "Penrod and Sam" by Earle D. Wilson, newly appointed manager of Gordon's Olympia theatre, New Bedford, Mass.

To insure widespread interest in the campaign the selection was opened to all the boys of the city's playgrounds. The playground supervisors offered their candidates, the final selection from each playground devolving upon James K. Doneghy, director of playgrounds.

The lucky twelve were brought before the judge for a final decision, city officials participating to give the function an official tinge. The final judges were the Boy Scout Commissioner and the two newspaper men, the latter insuring good publicity for the theatre.

Thirteen-year-old Carlton Sundin was the winner. For one day he occupied the managerial office, gave out stories, issued passes and finally occupied a box at the evening performance with his invited guests.



New Bedford newsboys were also invited to a special showing.

Art Lobby Display Made on "Children of Jazz"

Manager Harrison "jazzed up" the lobby of the Hippodrome theatre, Waco, Texas, on "Children of Jazz" with a handpainted front which gave the theatre a breezy appearance.

An attractive beaver-board frame cut to fit the entrance carried the title of the picture across the top and on each side was a scene of a couple dancing. In the center of the lobby was a cut-out of Eileen Percy showing the star in a dancing position. Just behind this cut-out was another beaver-board panel on which was painted a small jazz orchestra in action. Attractive lighting effects enhanced the sales appearance of this display considerably.

A prologue was used in connection with the picture. A young society girl of Waco, who was a dancer, took the leading part in the prologue and she was assisted by four of the best local jazz dancers. The girl pulled her dance first, then the two couples stepped out and did some clever foot work. The scene for the prologue was laid in a cabaret. There were plenty of balloons floating in the air and the theatre's orchestra furnished the jazz music.

DISPLAY OF JACKIE COOGAN SUITS TYING UP WITH SHOWING OF "DADDY" AT THEATRE

The management of the Sigma theatre, Lima, Ohio, arranged with a local clothing store for this window display on "Daddy" (First National)

Diversified Ideas on "Main Street"

Wide Variety of Stunts Employed

CAMPAIGNS on "Main Street" have been featured by a wide diversity of stunts, ballyhoos, tie-ups and special publicity measures, and great ingenuity has been shown by exhibitors throughout the country in exploiting this drama of small-town life. A most complete campaign was featured at the Palace theatre, Dallas, Texas, by Bruce Fowler, manager of theatres, and Raymond Willie, house manager.

In advance, huge banners lettered in red on white were placed in four very prominent positions on the corners of buildings in the business district.

Fifty merchants on "Main Street" allowed water color signs to be put on their show windows and the copy read as follows: "Eat on 'Main Street'"—"Trade on 'Main Street'"—"Patronize 'Main Street' Merchants."

Besides these fifty windows there were four special window displays in book stores which advertised the novel in connection with the picture. These windows were decorated with miniature "Main Street" displays and one window carried a special painting made by a local artist which was a reproduction of "Main Street" in the picture. Across the front of the book stores hung cut-out letters which spelled out "Main Street."

Western Union tie-up: 7,000 telegrams were delivered by Western Union boys and the theatre employees to as many homes in Dallas during the engagement. Special cards which read: "Western Union reaches every 'Main Street' in the World," were displayed in the windows of the Western Union offices around town.

One week before play date a special trailer showing scenes from the picture was run on the Palace screen and also at the other theatres in town operated by Southern Enterprises, Inc.

A large shadow-box containing a hand painted reproduction of "Main Street" was placed in the foyer of the theatre one week in advance of play date and during the engagement was displayed in the theatre's entrance.

Special streamers, 12-sheet size, carrying the following copy, were placed along the roads leading into town: "All roads lead to 'Main Street.'"

"NICE PEOPLE" DISPLAY MATERIAL
Manager A. F. Charey of the Palace theatre, Cleburne, Texas, prepared this display on "Nice People" (Paramount)

Since all the street cars touch on "Main Street," special car cards were used during the engagement, the copy as follows: "Take this car for 'Main Street'—Palace now!"

Hyman Exploits Actively

Anticipating that "Main Street" would play his theatre during a hot week, Edward L. Hyman, managing director of the Brooklyn Mark Strand, called Lee S. Ferguson into conference and devised ways and means to combat the hot weather bugaboo.

The teaser campaign was first started through means of the special lamp posts marked "Main Street." These were placed at advantageous points in the lobby without any explanatory cards, to excite curiosity. Then the teaser windshield sticker came next, advising motorists to Be Careful and Watch for "Main Street." Thousands of these were plastered from one end of Brooklyn to the other. Then the Main Street arrow made its appearance, and this carried the name of the theatre and the date. Hundreds were employed on poles, in windows and on trucks and wagons. The Main Street blotter, also dated, was next, thousands being distributed to offices in the business district. The current programs carried several announcement lines, and advance stories were planted in the local dailies.

The Abraham & Straus store, one of the three leading Brooklyn stores, had a front window tie-up display of the book, with one of the lamp posts and proper art cards. The Loeser book department had a special display with lamp post and 30 x 40 colored frame. On the Sunday of the opening one of the newspapers came out with the four-page rotogravure herald as an insert, and the street cars carried the one-sheet announcement cards. The trailer, of course, was employed the week prior to the run.

Presents Petition to Mayor

Manager Geo. A. McDermit, Rialto theatre, Macon, Ga., presented a petition to the mayor to change the name of Cotton avenue (the Rialto is located on this street) to "Main Street." This was being considered seriously until a newspaper man at one of the council meetings scented a press agent story, and then the secret was out. However, the purpose sought was gained, for the story found its way into the papers, at no cost.

Capitalizes on Opposition in "Exciters" Campaign

Manager Barry Burke of the Palace theatre, Fort Worth, Texas, capitalized upon his opposition, the local bathing beaches, to advertise "The Exciters," by billing heavily all roads leading to these places of amusement with paper on "The Exciters." Then, he featured in window displays about the town, cut-outs of Bebe Daniels in her bathing suit.

A tie-up with the Colgate Company resulted in the distribution of several thousand sachets. On the cover of each was an announcement about the picture.

CHICAGO THEATRE'S ELABORATE PROLOGUE IN CONNECTION WITH "GIRL OF THE GOLDEN WEST"
Showing a dramatic moment from the stage prologue presented at the Chicago theatre, Chicago, during the run at that theatre of "The Girl of the Golden West" (First National)

Many Merchant Tie-ups for "Gentleman of Leisure"

H. P. Kingsmore, manager of the Howard theatre, Atlanta, Ga., put over an effective campaign on "A Gentleman of Leisure," featured by a number of co-operative tie-ups

Three thousand stickers in the form of small banners, approximately eighteen inches long by four inches deep, featured a tie-up with "Personality" cigars—"The type which a Gentleman of Leisure always prefers"—and other catch lines. These stickers were distributed by the cigar company to every dealer of cigars, including grocery stores, soda fountains and cigar stands throughout the city where they were placed under the glass cases.

A large baking concern co-operated by placing in each of 5,000 loaves of bread going out daily a slip giving "Hot Weather Hints" and "jazzy" text, which not alone sold their bread, but advised of the coming of Jack Holt in "A Gentleman of Leisure."

A prominent clothing dealer gave willing co-operation on the strength of a tie-up of Jack Holt with Kuppenheimer Clothes. And a full-page tie-up was secured with copy to the effect that Jack Holt, the star in "A Gentleman of Leisure," a most discriminating dresser, often wears Kuppenheimer clothes in the making of his pictures.

Probably the most effective stunt of all was the tie-up with the children who attend the Better Films Committee matinees. Near 1,000 sheets were distributed among them, with text to the effect that the child properly filling it out and obtaining ten names of local people would receive a free ticket to the Howard. This not only advertised the show, but gave an up-to-date mailing list, and the fact that they were distributed to the children who attend the Better Films' morning matinesss assured of reaching the very best people.

LOBBY ON WESTBOUND LIMITED

Stunt in Wall Street Aids "Daytime Wives" Showing

The showing of "Daytime Wives" at the Central theatre, New York City, was recently given an unusual exploitation measure, when the Film Booking Offices sent a group of young girl stenographers to the steps of the sub-treasury building on Wall street to solicit membership in the financial district for the Daytime Wives' league.

For many weeks daily newspapers throughout the country have been carrying news stories of the forming of these leagues among the office workers, not knowing that the whole affair was a press agent stunt to put over the title of a picture.

The meeting on the sub-treasury steps was heralded in the New York papers for days ahead and when the automobile load of girls pulled up a brass band was awaiting them. Tipped off by the newspaper stories the streets were jammed with people. Miss Cherry Chandler, a film actress, mounted the steps and delivered a speech calling for members from the girls in her audience. While she spoke other girls passed through the crowd distributing pamphlets and buttons.

Foot Wear Tie-up Made for Showing of "Trilby"

Andree Lafayette, the French star, who appears in "Trilby," offered the Circle theatre of Indianapolis the opportunity to effect a splendid footwear tie-up. The Walk-Over Boot Shop, 28 North Pennsylvania street, with the Circle theatre proved an attractive medium for the dissemination of publicity of an agreeable nature for both the theatre and for the boot shop.

The entire display windows of the shop were given over to photographs of Andree Lafayette in various poses wearing many different kinds of Walk-Over shoes, slippers and pumps. The Walk-Over shop expressed itself pleased with the tie-up and the results obtained by it. This method was but one of a number which aided to give the French actress a favorable impression on Indianapolis motion picture patrons.

The Walk-Over shop aided the picture materially by buying a 200-inch advertisement in the Sunday issue of the Star. The tie-up was planned by Ace Berry, general manager of the Circle theatre.

Book Window Displays for "Little Old New York"

Window displays of the Marion Davies edition of "Little Old New York" are being used as an exploitation tie-up in conjunction with the run of the picture at the new Cosmopolitan theatre, New York City.

A number of leading book stores are devoting windows to a display of the book embellished with enlarged photographs of Miss Davies in the roles she portrays and scenes from the picture.

The most attractive of these displays is that of Himebaugh & Browne on Fifth avenue. In the center of this display is an attractive model, beautifully framed showing the launching of Robert Fulton's Clermont, this epoch-making event in American history forming one of the episodes in the picture.

Supreme in Comedy and Short Subjects

The day of the All-Comedy program and the All-Short-Subject program has arrived.

The time has come for exhibitors to change their present methods of program building: (1) to give diversity and novelty; (2) to induce an additional day's attendance from the average regular patron who at present only goes twice a week, and (3) to build up a new clientele that under present conditions rarely, if ever, goes to a picture theatre.

A large majority of several hundred newspaper editors, questioned recently as to their preferences, voted for more Short Subjects, saying that as a whole they were better than dramatic features. Instances are legion where a Pathe short picture has been responsible for the biggest part of the pull to the box-office and has received the major portion of the newspaper comment.

Pathe is prepared to give you these business-building programs of a number, kind and quality better than ever before. Alternate them with feature programs!

Dollar for dollar and picture for picture, they are the best value in the business today.

Local Angle Seized Upon in "Go-Getter" Campaign

When Manager George A. McDermit, of the Rialto theatre, Macon, Ga., happened to learn that Peter B. Kyne had dedicated "The Go-Getter" to General Leroy Lyons, former commandant at Camp Wheeler, he decided that this offered an excellent chance to arouse local interest.

The fact also was brought to light that Mrs. Lyons had mailed several copies of the book to her Macon friends as Christmas presents and was the means of breaking onto the society page with two columns and a prominent head line, in the Sunday Telegraph.

Personal letters were sent out over a mailing list which included all women's clubs of the city. Publicity was secured among the ranks of the Rotary, Kiwanis, Lions and Civitan clubs by a letter read at their respective luncheons.

"The Mystery Box" was booked as an added attraction and the lobby was fitted up with a radio broadcasting outfit, and daily concerts were given in the lobby. During rests, attention was called to the picture, broadcasting the following: "Macon is a go-getter city. . . . The best picture of the season is 'The Go-Getter.' . . . At the Rialto. See it and be a 'Go-Getter.'"

Letter Carriers' Band Is "Loyal Lives" Ballyhoo

Charlie Giegerich, special exploitation representative for Whitman Bennett, put over a real ballyhoo for the presentation of "Loyal Lives" at the Central theatre in New York City when he secured the New York Letter Carriers' Band of fifty pieces and had it play in front of the Central theatre at 8 o'clock in the evening, when the world's busiest thoroughfare is most crowded.

Traffic was blocked, but the stunt went over with a bang, and the picture of life in the United States mail service received most generous publicity.

All of the officials from the general post-office were present to witness the first screening of the picture.

LONDON ADOPTS EXPLOITATION

A further example of the way in which English theatres are adopting American exploitation is seen in this bus advertising for "Shadows" (Preferred) at the New Gallery Kinema, London.

Photographers' Contest on "Mary of the Movies"

An amateur photographers' contest, conducted by a local newspaper, tied up well with the showing of "Mary of the Movies" at the Strand theatre, Madison, Wis.

The winner of a beauty contest, Edith May, a Wisconsin girl, was discovered by Frank Desormeaux, manager of the Strand theatre, to resemble Mary Mack, star of the exploited film. Before Miss Mack's double was brought to Madison, front page announcements of her arrival were made and the chance given to amateur photographers to snap her with the mayor at the state capitol, or at different business houses which co-operated.

The crowd of aspiring photographers, with leveled cameras, darting about and following the young lady and her escorts, afforded plenty of publicity and several feature stories in the newspaper. The photographs were in and winning contestants decided when the film arrived. First prize, awarded to Clarence Korrison, was $50, with the secondary prizes amounting to $87. Additional tie-ups were made with two department stores, which gave bead bag and sweater prizes; a furniture company and a photographer's studio.

Library Co-operates with "Only 38" Showing

Publicity was given the showing of "Only 38" at the Rex theatre, Sumter, S. C., by a tie-up with the public library arranged by Manager Oscar White.

The chairman of the library committee co-operated by writing a letter for the press stating that the picture would be shown on a certain date and that all who would bring a book suitable for the library would be admitted free on Monday afternoon between the hours of 2 and 6. Quite a number of books were thus secured, which were displayed on a table placed in the lobby, themselves attracting attention.

Through the co-operation of a local baker, a huge cake was made possible for the lobby, proving the center of attraction. It was a camouflage cake, of course, since it was nothing more or less than a cheese box iced over in white, with the title, "Only 38" iced in pink. Thirty-eight candles were placed around the cake, making a most effective display. Everyone thought it a real cake. There was no cost attached to it, the baker furnishing it gratis.

Newsboys Parade; Masks to Boost "Sherlock Holmes"

A newsboy parade was utilized in Woonsocket, R. I., by Joe Donahue, manager of the Park theatre, and Buddy Stuart, Goldwyn Cosmopolitan exploitation man, for the showing of "Sherlock Holmes." The Woonsocket Call-Reporter tied up with the theatre management on a special matinee for newsboys. The boys marched from the newspaper office to the theatre carrying banners.

A thousand of the masks prepared by Goldwyn's exploitation department for use with "Sherlock Holmes" were distributed among the children at Woonsocket. Besides the appearance of these masks on the street at various times, the newsboys wore them in their parade.

SHOWING HOW ONE BOOK STORE GAVE ITS ENTIRE WIN DOW TO A DISPLAY TYING UP WITH "THE CHRISTIAN"

When "The Christian" (Goldwyn) played at the Luna theatre, Lafayette, Ind., the management was able to obtain this window display from a local book store

Live Ideas on "Three Wise Fools"

What Other Managers Have Done Along Exploitation Lines on This Picture

LENDING itself well to exploitation "Three Wise Fools" is receiving a wide variety ot advertising effort at the present time, and exhibitors have shown no little ingenuity in putting the picture over.

Manager Edward Trinz of the Elite theatre, Waukegan, Ill., and Goldwynner Walter D. Nealand, used a man in clown costume as a street ballyhoo. The man carried a huge sign on his back; it read "Three Wise Fools." For several days the clown paraded the business streets of the city.

The reviews of this picture from the Chicago newspapers were placed on a big frame in the lobby. Its value was proved by the number of patrons of the preceding picture who stopped to read the reviews.

The town was well billed for this production and the newspaper advertising, which was somewhat increased, called attention to the big hit which it had made at the Chicago theatre, Chicago.

Many Shops Give Tie-ups

Fifteen of the biggest shops in Toronto were induced by Goldwyn Cosmopolitan Exploiteer Will J. Stewart to give window displays in connection with the showing at the Hippodrome of "Three Wise Fools."

These tie-ups were arranged with the two Clubb & Sons' tobacco stores, the two Neilsons, Ltd., chocolate shops, in Chapman Bros. jewelry store, De Luxe Millinery Shop, Rigoletti's cigar store, on the music counter of T. Eaton Co. and R. Simpson, in the phonograph shops of R. S. Williams and Whaley Royce, and in the piano store of Heintzman Company.

Break Into Newspaper Column

In exploiting "Three Wise Fools" at the Century theatre in Baltimore, Jack A. Pegler, Goldwyn Cosmopolitan exploitation man, broke into the Enquiring Reporter column of the Evening News. The question propounded to five bachelors was if they considered themselves "wise fools" for not having married. The following day the same question was propounded to spinsters.

Permission was obtained from the circulation managers of the News and the American to place specially printed posters for "Three Wise Fools" on the sides of their delivery wagons. The radio broadcasting station of the American and the News broadcasted a synopsis of the picture on Wednesday evening.

United Cigar Store Hook-up

For the showing at the Chicago theatre in Chicago, Mr. Hollander of that theatre, and Walter D. Nealand, exploitation man, arranged two big city-wide tie-ups with the United Cigar stores.

One tie-up was with the New Vintage Ricoro cigar and the other with the Herbert Tareyton London Smoking Mixture. A special poster, twenty inches high by twelve inches wide, was printed on pink stock. The Ricoro tie-up contained a reproduction of a still showing William H. Crane, Claude Gillingwater and Alec Francis as they appear in "Three Wise Fools," smoking cigars. The Tareyton tie-up shows them smoking long-stemmed pipes.

Railroad Takes Advertising in "Dulcy" Campaign

Through the fact that one of the shots of "Dulcy" shows the star leaving on a transcontinental observation car of the Santa Fe Limited, the Chicago theatre, Chicago, got a tie-up with the railroad.

In addition to possible future window tie-ups, the combination brought immediate benefits to the theatre. The railroad took some of the stills from the picture showing the leave-taking and ran them as a quarter-page advertisement in the Chicago Daily Journal. The caption gave all credit to "Dulcy" which was scheduled to open the following week at the Chicago. The theatre had 24 inches of advertising for which it didn't pay a cent.

SOMETHING A LITTLE DIFFERENT IN "CHILDREN OF JAZZ" DISPLAYS

Manager F. J. Miller of the Modjeska theatre, Augusta, Ga., was responsible for this somewhat unusual lobby display piece which was used at that theatre in connection with the showing of "Children of Jazz" (Paramount)

SOMETHING NEW UNDER SUN

Stunt worked by Charlie Giegerich for "Loyal Lives" at the Central, New York City, when mailing cards were left atop mail boxes as shown, advertising "Loyal Lives" (Vitagraph)

Nashville Firemen Tie-up with "Third Alarm"

Manager Dewey Mousson of the Knickerbocker theatre, Nashville, Tenn., opened his campaign on "The Third Alarm" by giving a private screening for the mayor, the fire chief and all firemen off duty, following which they voted to accept Manager Mousson's offer of a percentage on all tickets sold by the fire department.

The city was posted with "The Third Alarm" one-sheets, cards and the like two weeks in advance, tickets were sent to the firemen and newspaper ads and readers kept the public well informed that the picture was coming to Nashville.

Three days before the opening, 200 safety zone signs over the heart of the city caught the eyes of walking pedestrians. Ticket boxes were placed on the most prominent corners of the city, street cars carried advertisements on the front of every car, then additional prizes were offered to the four firemen selling the most tickets.

An old, discarded horse-drawn engine was put upon the streets with firemen driving and firemen working the steam in the boiler. This created talk, for it had been five years or more since horse-drawn engines had been in service. Then, on the opening day, the engine made a run to the theatre. Firemen were placed in all ticket boxes (except the theatre) at the prominent corners, and others sold upon the streets. The horse-drawn engine paraded the city every day of the showing and a fake fire was held across the street from the entrance of the theatre on Thursday night.

Forest Fire Front Made Up on "Scars of Jealousy"

A forest fire scene was used to decorate the front of the Royal Victoria theatre, Victoria, B. C., during the run of "Scars of Jealousy." The effect was produced by the use of the twenty-four sheet cut-out showing the forest fire scene and electric lights covered with red globes. A red spot light, diffusing its rays on this scene heightened the atmopshere.

Music Lovers' Night, a weekly feature at the Victoria, showed an augmented orchestra.

Floral Tie-ups Feature of "White Flower" Campaign

Manager A. L. Snell, of the Imperial theatre, Gadsden, Ala., announced, through slides on the screen and by word-of-mouth, that anyone presenting a white flower between 2 and 3 P. M. on a certain day would be admitted free to see "The White Flower."

By this means a very pretty assortment of flowers was accumulated, these being later distributed among the local hospitals.

Another "White Flower" tie-up was that with the leading florist, who dressed up an entire window with white flowers and stills from the picture.

Sidewalks were painted, "See Betty Compson in 'The White Flower' at Imperial theatre."

A "beach" setting was worked up in the lobby against a background of cane, brought from a river bank nearby.

A letter from a former resident who had seen the picture in the making recommended that all who could should see it. This was displayed in frame in the lobby. The picture was enhanced and the Hawaiian environment increased by a girl in native costume, who sang Hawaiian melodies at various parts of the picture.

Bathing Suit Hook-up Made to Boost "Exciters"

Fort Smith, Ark.—The leading department store of Fort Smith assisted Manager Hugo Plath of the Palace theatre in advertising "The Exciters" and at the same time increased their sales of bathing suits and bathing accessories considerably by donating a large central display window to the theatre. This window was decorated with cut-outs of Bebe Daniels and bathing beauties.

The title of the picture, "The Exciters," was played up prominently and special mention was made in the window about a bathing beauty contest which the theatre held in conjunction with the local swimming pools during the run of this picture.

The newspapers joined in with a helping hand with a full-page tie-up with local merchants which helped to both popularize the contest and boost business at the theatre.

"WONDERS OF THE SEA" LOBBY

This diving suit was used as an interesting display on "Wonders of the Sea" (F. B. O.) by Manager W. G. Sturdivant of the Hoyburn theatre, Evanston, Ill.

Spotlight Atop Theatre Is "Souls for Sale" Stunt

Homer Gill, Goldwyn Cosmopolitan exploitation man, and E. S. Van Hinning, manager of the Kelley theatre in Iola, Kan., used a spotlight on top of the theatre to bring the showing of "Souls for Sale" to the attention of the public. The light was shot straight upward and, as there was no moon, it was visible for a great distance. The beam of light attracted almost as much attention as would the beam from a monster searchlight in a large city.

A four-page paper, "Hollywood Lights," was printed and distributed from house to house. This carried various publicity stories about "Souls for Sale," cast, director, the making of the picture, etc., and proved particularly valuable.

A good book display was obtained in the window of the local book dealer and cut-outs from photographs were placed in the windows of a half dozen other merchants. The newspaper advertising space was slightly increased for the showing.

Full Page Co-operative Ad on "What Wives Want"

A full page co-operative tie-up advertisement in the Sunday newspapers was one of the stunts used to good advantage by Robert Bender, Universal exploiter, in putting over a run of "What Wives Want," at the Columbia theatre, Seattle.

Before the run began, Mr. Bender made arrangements with the newspapers for the ads, and the page was divided up into a large number of small blocks. Across the top, in red letters, ran the words: "What Wives Want," followed by a paragraph of descriptive reading matter telling a little about the picture, where it was playing, etc. The rest of the page was taken up by the small advertisements, including displays by jewelers, furriers, specialty shops and other business institutions catering to women's trade. Every ad mentioned the words "What Wives Want."

Window tie-ups with firms in the city were also used by Mr. Bender for the picture. Jewelry stores, department stores, bakeries and clothiers again co-operated with the theatre by displaying a novel line of goods in their windows, along with stills and other advertising and publicity matter on the photoplay.

"Woman with Four Faces" Is Given Cosmetic Tie-up

Manager John P. Read of the Gem theatre, Palestine, Texas, arranged with a local drug store to advertise "The Woman With Four Faces" in connection with special cosmetics and aids to beauty. Large cut-outs of Betty Compson were on display in this window, also plenty of black and white star stills and attractively written cards.

Slides calling the attention to the crook possibilities of four faces in aiding crime were run on the screen several days in advance of the play date. There was also a neat foyer display that could be seen by all patrons leaving the theatre. On the front of the theatre, during the engagement, was a cut-out made of Betty Compson, which was taken from the three-sheet.

JUNGLE ATMOSPHERE IN ELABORATE HUNTING BIG GAME IN AFRICA" LOBBY DISPLAY

Opinions on Current Short Subjects

" High Kickers "

(Universal—Two Reels)

THAT exponent of feminine pulchritude, the bathing girl beauty, is with us again. The brand of entertainment which was made famous by Mack Sennett and the Sunshine producers has returned to the screen, this time under the banner of Century Comedies and with the diverting title of the Gorham Follies Girls. There are two featured players—Doris Eaton, former Ziegfeld star, and Jack Cooper. In the present number Doris starts off as a slavey in a boarding house; but, of course, her feet simply won't behave when the beauty chorus, rehearsing at the hotel, get into action. And when the chorus continue their practice steps on the beach, Doris simply must follow and imitate them step for step, a procedure which her tight-fitting skirt makes extremely difficult. Of course, she eventually impresses the dancing director and lands with the chorus. While Doris and the girls are supplying the looks, Jack Cooper is furnishing the comedy gags. Most of these are of stereotyped character and are concerned with the mishandling of a still camera. A thrill is injected into one of the comedy moments by showing Cooper falling off a steep cliff while in the act of taking a picture. Good entertainment of its kind. —E. F. SUPPLE.

" Sing Sing "

(Universal—Two Reels)

THE method of comedy resorted to here is the well-known situation of two tramps posing as gentlemen at a society function and getting away with it—at least for a space. Neely Edwards in the role of Nervy Ned gains entrée to a swell musicale, posing as a noted opera singer. When called upon to sing, he deceives his audience into believing that he is actually rendering a number by standing and gesticulating before a curtain behind which his valet (Bert Roach) is operating a talking machine. Ned and his valet are about to pocket the thousand, which represents their entertainment fee, when the real singer arrives and exposes them. A sequence showing the collapse of the walls of the jail when the singer demonstrates his lung power for the prisoners is extremely funny. On the whole, a diverting one-reel comedy.—E. F. SUPPLE.

" Short Orders "

STAN LAUREL is featured in this subject, which is of a conventional comedy pattern. The action is laid in a restaurant and presents Laurel in the double role of waiter and assistant to the chef. There is the petrified steak that puts the cutlery out of commission and the jumping Limburger which must be chained while being cut. Many of the gags have been seen before in comedy farce of this sort, but there are also a few novel touches introduced These together with the effective comedy work of Laurel, whose unfailing seriousness of mien adds to the incongruity of the situation, makes this an entertaining one-reeler of the slapstick type.—E. F. SUPPLE.

(Pathe—Two Reels)

BEN TURPIN in this subject adds to the fun that he started as the love-stricken youth in " Where's My Wandering Boy This Evening? " The same supporting cast is seen here that abetted the cross-eyed comedian in the preceding effort——Dot Farley, Priscilla Bonner, Jim Finlayson, Madeline Hurlock (who continues as the city " vamp "), and Mack Swain. The action is presented as a delusion of the delirious rustic lover and brings him to the city apartment of the siren, where his persistent attentions are rendered more ridiculous by the cold responses of the cruel beauty and the sudden arrival of her corpulent husband. The action, which is filled with laugh-provoking touches of a pathetically comic nature, culminates in an original travesty on the famous poem, " The Face on the Barroom Floor," with Turpin in the role of the broken-hearted outcast. These sequences are particularly amusing. If your patrons enjoyed the brand of humor supplied them by " Where's My Wandering Boy This Evening " and its star of the zig-zag orbs, they will be sure to find this sequel to his love adventures equally laughable. —E. F. SUPPLE.

" Hold Everything "

(Educational—Two Reels)

"HOLD EVERYTHING" is a thoroughly entertaining comedy, replete from start to finish with lively incident and laughable gags. Bobby Vernon and Vera Steadman appear in the featured roles. There is an amusing story unfolded, too, in which Bobby steals a taxi-bandit's car containing a lot of loot; with both the bandit and the police in pursuit of the stolen car, Bobby has a busy time keeping out of their individual and collective reaches. Later, a pretty girl boards Bobby's taxi as a passenger, and the problem becomes more complicated than ever for him, especially as he is determined to maintain his acquaintanceship with his fair passenger at all costs. The girl is a philanthropist bound on an errand of mercy for the Old Ladies' Home. When Bobby Vernon turns loose " Aggravating Mamma " on the talking machine and gets the " flappers of '61 " prancing like 1923 debutantes we guarantee even those members of your audience will laugh loud and hearty who may not have even smiled for the past twenty years. And there's rattling fine actionful finish to this one, which tops off the laughs in entertaining fashion.—E. F. SUPPLE.

" Navy Blues "

(Educational—Two Reels)

AN impressive feature of this subject is the really wonderful cooperation extended by the United States Navy—or at least that portion of it found aboard the U. S. Battleship California—to the Christie staff and players in the production of the comedy. Besides, there is a real interesting story of a farcical order, cleverly conceived and excellently constructed, with Dorothy Devore in as amusing role as we have seen for some time. This is not the sort of comedy calculated to bring the house down with shrieks of laughter over some slapstick perversity; it will probably provoke a smile more often than a laugh. However, it is entertainment for all its lack of hilarity, and entertainment of a compelling kind. The story opens with a navy wedding in which the girl (Miss Devore) becomes the bride of a lieutenant. Just as the honeymoon is about to start the lieutenant is ordered to sail with his fleet; and wifey, who has donned a sailor's uniform to escape detection by the wedding guests after the ceremony, finds herself mistaken for a " gob " and hustled aboard one of the battleships along with the rest of the sailors by a petty officer. How she steals the admiral's lunch during formal inspection, escapes from the first warship to the one to which her husband is attached, and then proceeds to upset the rigid discipline of officers and crew is told in highly entertaining fashion. E. F. SUPPLE.

" The Cat That Failed "

(Pathe—One Reel)

IN this comedy offering from the facile pen of Cartoonist Paul Terry, Henry Cat takes a youthful member of the mouse family out ostensibly to play with him. Once out of range of the parental eyes, however, and the mouse discovers that Henry took him along only to do the dirty work. Finally, Henry Cat shows how really villainous he is by kidnapping the mouse and holding him for ransom on a desert island. But Mamma Mouse hires a canine Sherlocko to restore her child, and Henry is eventually foiled by clever detective work, while Mamma Mouse learns that " It Is Never Safe to Trust the Cruel."—E. F. SUPPLE.

" Pathe Review No. 35 "

(Pathe—One Reel)

PUPPIES always possess a distinctive appeal of their own, and the current number offers several batches of these fur-coated, pug-nosed creatures that will win the men and women folks alike. This study in animal youngsters appears in "Fur-Coat Babies." Next in sequence is an instructive exposition of the Japanese art of making wood block prints. A series of views of the wild tribesment of Formosa demonstrates in entertaining fashion how closely the Indians of the Orient resemble the Redmen of America. The Pathecolor section of this number contains some of the most striking views of Niagara Falls that we have ever seen. The touch of color brings out more effectively than any other medium all the solemn grandeur of America's most famous falls.—E. F. SUPPLE.

Hal Roach Outlines Production Plans

One and Two-Reel Releases Every Week; Two Features a Year; On Key City Tour

HAL ROACH, who has been in New York City for the past week conferring with Pathe executives on his future production schedule, favored us during the week with an outline of his coming program of activities on the West Coast. Briefly stated, this schedule will provide for the release of one two-reeler and one single reeler every week and two features a year, declared the affable Hal. Actual production work is not alone to claim the attention of Mr. Roach, however, as he contemplates a nation-wide tour of exchange centers as accessory to the prosecution of his production plans. This tour began on Wednesday of this week with a trip to New Haven, Conn., and Boston, to be followed by a jump to Buffalo and thence to points in the Middle West.

"I believe that we producers do not keep in as close touch with the exhibitors of the country as we ought to," said Mr. Roach, "and it is the purpose of my tour of the exchange centers to meet as many exhibitors personally as possible, to find out just what they need in the way of short-subject entertainment to meet the demand of their patrons, and to tell them that I shall appreciate any suggestions they may be kind enough to afford me either now or in the future.

"Another object of my trip is to boost the motion-picture industry in general. The two grave faults confronting the industry today are too many vacant seats in our picture houses and over-production. Whatever I can do to fill those vacant seats by boosting the industry in general I consider will be time and effort very well spent. If I can advance the prestige and prosperity of the business as a whole, I figure it is up to me personally to pitch in and to meet the other fellow's competition, accepting the results as they come to me individually."

Mr. Roach has a new comedy series which, he says, will be slightly different in the way of comedy fare from anything now current on the screen. These two-reelers bear the general title of "The Spat Family Comedies" and present a family group of husband, wife, and wife's brother in a series of highly laughable adventures. The featured roles are played by Frank Butler, Sidney Dalbrook, and Laura Rossing. The first of the "Spat Family" series has been given preview showings at Loew's, Los Angeles, the Strand in Pasadena, and the Strand at Ocean Point, and has won favorable receptions in each instance, according to wires from these managements.

Mr. Roach declared that Will Rogers was making highly satisfactory progress on his new series of two-reelers and that two of the group were already completed. Besides the "Spat Family" and Will Rogers comedy series, the "Our Gang" group and Stan Laurel series will be continued in two-rel lengths. The one-reelers will include a group of comedies starring Snub Pollard and the "Dippy Doo Dads" series.

Of the features, one, "The Call of the Wild," based on Jack London's famous story, is already finished. This subject was recently given a two weeks' showing at the California, Los Angeles, and is now playing an extended run at Miller's. It will be released by Pathe about the middle of September. The other feature, titled "Whisk Away," is a story of a wild stallion, written by Mr. Roach, and features "Rex," an equestrian find of Mr. Roach's which, the producer declares, will prove a sensation on the screen. The subject is now being filmed in the northwestern part of Colorado and will probably be completed in about a month.—E. F. S.

First of Century's New Dog Comedy Series Under Way

"Pal Puts It Over," announced recently as the first of the new dog comedies for Century, is now in the early stages of production under the direction of Al Herman.

This comedy, which will be the first of the ten to be produced with "Pal" the canine comedian, was written by Herman in collaboration with Harry Lucenay, Pal's trainer and owner.

The supporting cast will be made up of well-known Century players, among whom are Marjorie Marcel, Ernie Adams and Fred Spencer. The action of the play, as in "Lots of Nerve," will give Pal the bulk of the story.

Col. Selig Adds Second Producing Unit to Studio

In order to catch up to schedule on the production of two-reel featurettes for the Export & Import Film Company, Inc., Col. Selig has added a second production unit to his operating staff at the Selig studios. Selig reports that the third of the series of twelve two-reelers has just been completed and will be shipped East immediately.

Educational to Issue Juvenile Series

"Yankee Spirit," Set for September Release, Introduces New Kid Comedies

THE first issue of the two-reel series of Juvenile Comedies, featuring Bennie Alexander, has been scheduled for release early in September by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc. "Yankee Spirit" is the title of the initial comedy number in this group. Educational's executives point to the new series as "a real innovation in the comedy field" and express the conviction that in addition to the entertainment qualities embodied the subjects will offer opportunities for ready and profitable tie-ups with civic and welfare organizations and especially those concerned with the care of youngsters. The comedies are said to breathe the spirit of America's boyhood and to exemplify in a highly entertaining fashion the manliness that such organizations as the Boy Scouts of America aim to inculcate.

Heading the long list of clever kid actors are Bennie Alexander and Ernest Butterworth. Bennie's most recent triumph was in the popular First National production, "Penrod and Sam," but this youngster, who is now ten years old, has been recognized for years as one of the cleverest child actors of the stage or screen. He was a D. W. Griffith discovery at the old Fine Arts studio, where the Juvenile Comedies are now being made.

Ernest Butterworth, who plays the tough kid in "Yankee Spirit," is another screen "vet." He has been a veritable globe trotter, being born to the profession of acting in Ireland and accompanying his parents into many lands before they settled in California. He has appeared with Mary Pickford and Bill Hart in many of their productions.

Supporting these boy stars are Tom Hicks, the little fat boy from Texas, who weighs "only" 125 pounds at the age of seven; Roger Keene and Billy Williams. George Ovey, featured in many screen comedies a few years ago, makes his return to pictures as the father, who proves to be a little man with a large following. The four "dastardly" crooks who are defeated by the Boy Scouts are portrayed by the famous acrobatic teams of Matzetti Brothers and Yacanelli Brothers.

Norman Taurog, who was responsible for the direction of many of Larry Semon's comedies, directed "Yankee Spirit."

U. S. Navy Cooperates with Christie Comedy Company

In getting off to a flying start on the new series of Christie Comedies for distribution by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., the Christie Film Company enjoyed the co-operation of the United States Navy Department in the filming of a deep sea story called "Navy Blues." The Navy Department extended to the Christie fun-makers courtesies and privileges to an unusual extent in the U. S. Navy, granting the freedom of the decks on the U. S. S. California, to Director Harold Beaudine and a large company of comedians, headed by Dorothy Devore.

Beaudine and his company spent twenty-one days on the Pacific Fleet flagship on the Pacific Ocean making the scenes for this two-reel comedy, which is one of the most spectacular comedy productions ever made by the Christie company. Every scene from "Navy Blues" was made under the supervision of Navy officers, and the finished comedy has been approved by the Navy Department at Washington.

"When Odds Are Even" is New Fox Title

"Toilers of the Equator" Fox's Sept. 16 Release

"Toilers of the Equator," the Fox Educational entertainment to be released September 16th, is an exposition of the coffee-raising and hemp-producing industries in Africa. Under the blazing sun of British East Africa the Kenya colony toils, and, despite the fact that the natives are counted among the most civilized on the continent, they cling to many of their crude century-old customs.

The film shows the amazing manner in which the ears are deformed by heavy ornaments from childhood. The subject portrays the peculiar ceremony of the native dance. But these oddities do not comprise the entire reel. The coffee groves yield a high grade bean for the world's favorite beverage. Scenes in the the film show the growth, harvesting and shipment of this commodity.

Pathe Acquires Historical Series

Will Distribute Thirty-Three Three-Real Subjects Sponsored by Yale

CHRONICLES of America Pictures Corporation will produce and Pathe Exchange, Inc., will release 33 short-subject films dealing with the epoch-making events in American history. The first in the series, titled "Columbus," will be released about the middle of October.

The Extension Department of Yale University, which has published 50 printed volumes of the "Chronicles of America," will sponsor the production of the Chronicles in film form. These film productions will follow the same standards that have made the books historical authorities among scholars and students of history, it is stated.

These historical films, which will average three reels in length, will bear the official seal and stamp of Yale University as to their scholarship, their historical accuracy and their human interest value. They will be released by Pathe one every four weeks.

The production of these films is the result of eight years of concentrated effort to give the people of the United States history in new form, to make it live and to bring forth all of its dramatic highlights, yet of genuine interest. In conjunction with these films is the fact that the original idea of the Chronicles of America was inspired by an address by Theodore Roosevelt, whose suggestion led Yale University to carry it out.

This series of 33 will cover the important events from Columbus down to Appomattox. Those responsible for the production of the films are leaving no stone unturned to give the first historical, accurate and dramatic true story of America showing the events that have built the nation from pioneer days to leadership in world affairs.

On the average, it has taken 17 months to complete each, and every continuity of the 33 films in the series. From synopsis form to the straight story continuity and then the final production continuity, historical specialists, research workers and the production staff co-operated in visualizing the entire film play before a crank was turned.

Pathe plans to release these historical subjects one every four weeks, and to give to the exhibitors with each subject a complete line of exploitation material. Distinctive departures will be made in publicizing and advertising the reels, it is stated.

Strong Supporting Cast for Hamilton in "Optimist"

A feature of Lloyd Hamilton's first comedy of his new series of six for Educational release, which bears the title of "The Optimist," will be the strong supporting cast appearing with the comedian. Ruth Hiatt has the leading role in this subject and also appearing in a prominent part is De Lorice, who is expected to set a new style in vampires.

Two of Lloyd Hamilton's chief aides are "doubling in brass," as it were. These ar Lloyd Bacon and Hank Mann, who are co-operating as his scenario and "gag" writers. Lovers of Hamilton Comedies will remember Lloyd Bacon not only as a director of "The Educator," but as an excellent comedy actor. Both have prominent roles in the picture.

Two stage and screen actors of considerable note, Andrew Arbuckle and Percy Hildebrand, are also in the cast. Gil Pratt, well known director of feature comedies, is the director.

Fox Educational Scheduled for September 2nd

The Fox educational entertainment to be released September 2 is a reel called "Mysteries of Yucatan." This is the first motion picture record ever made of the vast ruins of the New World, and was obtained by a special expedition sent into the wilderness of Central America. Explorations in Mexico reveal discoveries which are declared to rival in importance those of the Nile country. The poster made for this reel features all the salient points in the picture.

New Novelties Prepared for Pathe Releases

The "Our Gang" hat now takes its place with the Harold Lloyd goggles and Turpinesque mustache and "cock-eyed" spectacles in Pathe's list of effective accessories. The "Our Gang" hat is a striking bit of headgear, with its splashes of red ink, "Our Gang" photos and amusing inscriptions. Space is left for the insertion of the name of the theatre playing one of the "Our Gang" comedies.

A novelty feather dart carrying the slogan "'Why Worry?' Tickle Away Your Troubles!" and providing for the exhibitor's imprint has been prepared for the release of Harold Lloyd's new feature comedy, "Why Worry?" A wooden whistle shaped like a dog has been prepared for "The Call of the Wild," based on Jack London's famous dog story.

Three single-reelers, part of the "Secrets of Life" series to be released by Principal Pictures Corporation, were given a preview showing recently at the Ambassador Hotel theatre in Los Angeles. This comedy, directed by Al Herman, will start the Follies Girls series of Century Comedies. The new title came after discussion ensued for a title that would appeal to mixed audiences. "Fashion Follies" was chosen, for it covers "sea girls" as well as the "fashion revue" sequences of the play.

A release date is being decided upon, as soon as titles for the other pictures of this series are chosen and passed by Century officials.

This musical interpretation was given with "My Country" during a two weeks' run last year. Following this showing Mr. Rothafel also included this Wilderness Tale in the special program provided for the delegates to the American Bankers' Association Convention.

Richmond Dramatic Critic Compliments News Reels

Miss Helen DeMotte, special dramtic critic and film reviewer of the Richmond, Virginia, News Leader, says in a lengthy article, early this week, that she wishes to compliment the enterprise of Fox, Pathe and Kinograms on their Harding memorial and funeral film sketches. She admits that she visited three Richmond theatres on Saturday, August 11th, to see how the news reel people handled the situation. Her newspaper article is quite fulsome in its praise of the three.

Paramount Announces New Policy

Public to Fix Exhibition Values

"THE time has gone by in this industry when there can be any compromise between the good picture and the bad. The time has gone by when exhibitors should be asked to or should buy on a plan that no longer fits the needs of today."

The current announcement by Paramount of its new plan selling its product constitutes perhaps the longest step forward ever taken in all the history of the distribution of motion pictures. It is more than the turning of the right angle which marks the course of a new road leading straight away from the old. It is the arrival at a goal. Seemingly the most radical and revolutionary change of policy that the industry has yet experienced, nevertheless it is the logical and inevitable result of a course laid straight to definite achievement, Paramount points out.

Let us go back to the beginning.

The distribution of motion pictures as a commercial product had its inception when the first little arcade down on Fourteenth street aroused sufficient public curiosity through its exhibition of "The Great Train Robbery"—or was it an earlier film?—to excite the envy and cupidity of other speculators in entertainment. Store shows sprang up like mushrooms all over New York City, soon to be followed by similar bandboxes of amusement in other cities.

The new form of entertainment swept over the country like a tidal wave, and it was not long before the numerous companies then engaged in the manufacture of pictures sought a solution of the rapidly increasing problem of distribution in the formation of the General Film Company. Through this clearing house, or rather through its various branches, films were distributed at a flat rental, so many reels for so much. Exhibitors had to take what they were sent, regardless of the merit of the product.

This condition prevailed until the formation by Adolph Zukor of the Famous Players Film Company and the placing of "Queen Elizabeth" on the market. This production was sold on what was soon to be widely known as the State Rights plan. The State Rights buyers in turn sold the picture to exhibitors in their respective territories for whatever they could get. This virtually forced General Film to revise its feature policy to the extent of setting an individual price on each picture, the final rental figure being determined by the age of the film at the time of booking.

The success of "Queen Elizabeth" made the position of Famous Players secure. Production was started on a large scale and the company soon had thirty pictures to offer through its State Rights distributors. These thirty productions were sold in block at a uniform price regardless of the size of the theatre or the size of the city.

By this time Jesse L. Lasky, Cecil B. DeMille and their associates had the Jesse Lasky Feature Play Company well under way. This company's product was marketed in practically the same manner that Famous Players had followed and was distributed on the State Rights plan for the most part through the same men who were handling the Famous Players pictures.

The need of exhibitors for a permanent and dependable source of supply and the desirability of a permanent outlet for the product of the Famous Players and Lasky companies led to the formation, in 1914, of the Paramount Pictures Corporation. Long term contracts were made with Famous Players, Lasky and Bosworth, Inc., and thus was established the largest and most successful company ever engaged exclusively in the distribution of pictures. Franchises were held by the most prominent of the former State Rights distributors of Famous Players and Lasky features.

On August 31, 1914, Paramount, blazing another new trail, inaugurated a policy which was to endure for three years and which marked another milestone in distribution progress. Contracts were entered into with exhibitors on the basis of a full year's output at a flat rental per week, each contract carrying a thirty-day cancellation provision. Two features were released every week and a total of 306 features were issued under this plan. This was a long step forward, but the fact that exhibitors were still required to play pictures contracted for without advance knowledge of their character or merit was still a bar to complete amity between exhibitors and distributors. The uniform excellence of the Paramount output, however, promoted satisfaction to the extent that Paramount prestige was firmly established for all time.

But how were exhibitors to be relieved of the necessity of buying pictures of undetermined merit? That question was answered, partially at least, by the introduction of the Star Series system, another innovation for the benefit of exhibitors, devised to distribute the pictures starring Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks and George M. Cohan. At last exhibitors were able to buy in advance a proved box-office asset represented by the personality of a famous star. They were able to contract for blocks of pictures starring individuals of their choice, each block by itself. They could take all of a certain star's pictures or none at all, as they chose.

This was in 1916, the year that saw the formation of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, of which the Paramount and Artcraft distributing organizations soon became a part. For two years, starting in September, 1917, all Paramount and Artcraft pictures were sold by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation thus in series with this exception: Fifty-two outstanding successes previously released were re-issued, one a week throughout the year 1918-19, and sold in block on their proved exhibition merit.

In 1919, after months of careful planning, the Selective Booking policy, another departure in the selling of pictures, was announced, and came into full effect with the first releases of September of that year. Under this system exhibitors were able to pick whatever pictures they desired to, each picture being sold individually at its own price. For the first year under this plan sales covered the full year's output, but later the pictures were sold in periods ranging from three to six months.

Radical as this advanced policy seemed at the time, Paramount went even further in its assistance to exhibitors by establishing the Paramount exploitation department, the services of which were placed at the disposal of exhibitors to assist them in getting the maximum of revenue from the pictures they had booked.

In May, 1922, the industry was startled by Paramount's announcement of the "Famous Forty-One." It was the most revolutionary thing ever laid before the motion picture trade. Behind it lay a marvelous story of production achievement. Forty-one productions had been planned to the last detail as to stories, directors, stars, scenario writers and players. Many of them had been entirely completed, others were well along in production. These forty-one were to be the Paramount pictures released during the first six months of the season 1922-23. Similarly, the "Super Thirty-Nine" filled the schedule for the balance of the season. At last the exhibitor knew approximately what he was going to get.

And now comes the last word. From November 1 on, no price will be placed upon a Paramount picture, and no exhibitor will be asked to book it until the exhibition value has been proved by the public. Mere screening of a picture is held to be not enough, as then the exhibition value is a matter of individual opinion. But by showing the picture to the public the real box-office value is determined by the ruler of both the exhibitor and the distributor—the public itself. Here at last is the goal toward which Paramount has been steadily advancing from the very beginning, declared to be the goal of mutual understanding between exhibitor and distributor where each may have the satisfaction of knowing that he is both giving and receiving a fair deal.

To quote again from the statement: "We shall not expect for any picture more than it is worth. But after we have demonstrated it, neither shall we expect the exhibitor to try to buy it for less than its true value to him." Surely this is going to make it "more possible for good pictures to succeed and less possible for bad pictures to be made."

Twenty New Paramounts Are Announced

"His Children's Children"

From one of the most sensational pieces of literature published in many seasons Sam Wood has produced one of the most sensational pictures Paramount has ever placed in the hands of exhibitors.

Arthur Train, a prominent New York attorney, jumped into the limelight overnight with "His Children's Children." The book, from his standpoint, is not a work of fiction. He wrote the novel out of personal experiences he had pieced together from his years of law practice in New York City. The characters he wrote of were characters he had encountered.

It is a story of New York's degenerating generations, the life story of a family from the first to the third generation—a tale of moral and mental decay, but told, it is stated, in a clean, gripping, vivid manner. Not only one of the most sensational and melodramatic novels of recent times, it is probably the truest indictment of New York society ever penned. "New York's 'Vanity Fair'" is what it has been called by Dr. Henry Van Dyke.

Monte M. Katterjohn adapted the story and Sam Wood spent a month in picking the cast. And look who's here! Bebe Daniels, James Rennie, Dorothy Mackaill, George Fawcett, Mary Eaton, Mahlon Hamilton, Hale Hamilton, Warner Oland, Lawrence D'Orsay, John Davidson, Roger Lytton, Sally Crute, H. Cooper Cliffe, Henry Sedley and Joe Burke.

Pola Negri in "The Spanish Dancer"

Many people are anxious to see Pola Negri again in a story where full play may be given to the fire and wild abandon that flames from her personality on the screen. "The Spanish Dancer" is declared to be such a story. Here is the Pola Negri whose equal cannot be found on the screen today in the very sort of character that made her famous, in a picture made in America with an American cast. Produced by Herbert Brenon, who, after a considerable period spent abroad, recently renewed his fame as a director with "The Woman With Four Faces." "The Spanish Dancer," Paramount believes, is destined to be one of the biggest box-office bets of the decade.

This story, originally called "Don Cesar de Bazan," written by Adolphe D'Ennery and P. S. T. Dumenier and played on the stage by Richard Mansfield and other great stars, is one of the most colorfully romantic love tales of Old Spain ever written. As a matter of fact, in its original version it was a story of Maritana, the street singer, more than that of Don Cesar, so it loaned itself admirably to adaptation for Miss Negri by June Mathis and Beulah Marie Dix.

Naturally Antonio Moreno, himself a Spaniard, was Miss Negri's, Mr. Lasky's and Mr. Brenon's choice for the handsome, dashing hero. And the rest of the supporting cast! Here we see Wallace Beery, Kathlyn Williams, Gareth Hughes, Adolphe Menjou, Edward Kipling, Dawn O'Day, Charles Stevenson and Robert Agnew.

Glenn Hunter in "West of the Water Tower"

The anonymous novel, "West of the Water Tower," published by Harper's in the early weeks of summer, hit the country like a literary bombshell. It was as big a sensation as the first stories of Elinor Glyn, and as true and

"A Development of the Needs of Today"

EACH year has seen new elements enter into the problem of motion picture production and distribution.

The new season we are just entering on is no exception. Policies and principles that were useful and effective in the past do not fit the present needs of the business.

This industry cannot stand still. Progress and growth mean its life.

The new Paramount pictures sales plan is a development that has come from the experience of the past and what we believe to be the needs of the future.

I believe this plan of the demonstration of a picture's public appeal before establishing its exhibition value is truly a progressive step, the forward step that is this new year's necessity.

I welcome it because it affords an incentive to us all. To be willing to rise or fall on the actual and proven results of pictures at the box-office can be nothing but an inspiration that actually must result in really better pictures.

I welcome it, too, because I believe it is the sort of plan exhibitors want. It has been developed from a careful study of the needs not only of the business as a whole but with special stress on the actual and particular needs of exhibitors today.

I hope and believe it will meet with their approval. And I am confident its working out will prove a benefit to all.

ADOLPH ZUKOR.

as bitter an indictment of American town life as the memorable "Spoon River Anthology" of Edgar Lee Masters. It took the breath away because of its uncompromising array of life's facts—its story of the small town's prize smart boy, his rapid rise to favor, his love for the prettiest and richest girl, her dauntless defiance of the town's scorn—and the hopeless predicament of both these ill-starred lovers at the denouement. But, after all, the ending is happy, yet logical and convincing.

Nothing like it has been written in years, and Paramount, realizing that in young Glen Hunter it had secured a new star of the first magnitude, hastened to buy the motion picture rights of this sensational novel. Hunter is by all odds the best pick in America to play the part of the boy and get it over in a big, human way. Anyone who has seen him in "Merton of the Movies" knows what that indescribable heart tug is that he gets into his characterization.

May McAvoy is the girl. Ernest Torrence, of "The Covered Wagon" and "Tol'able David" fame, plays the father of the boy, a typical old-fashioned country minister, and George Fawcett will be seen as the girl's father, the town's richest man and an atheist. Lucien Hubbard has written the scenario and the picture will be a Rollin Sturgeon production.

William S. Hart in "Wild Bill Hickok"

Bill Hart is back—and for exhibitors and picture fans that's just about the best news of the year. And if there were anything additional needed to bring people into the theatres it would be the news that Bill's first picture in two years is the same type of story that has made the two-gun star famous.

Ever since his retirement Bill has been working on this story, and it is the story that he has wanted to work into a screen drama ever since he became a picture star. He has polished this yarn until it is said to be a shining gem of film dramatic art, and Albert Shelby Le Vino has placed it in its continuity setting. Cliff Smith is directing the picture, and Bill, having abandoned his own studio, is now working at the Lasky studio, surrounded by a wonderful equipment of sets and casts and expert technical men.

Bill is at his supreme best in glorified Westerns in which he is given a chance to ride and shoot and love. "Wild Bill Hickok" is that kind of a story—and more. It has many of the qualities of "The Covered Wagon," says the announcement. It is a slice out of real American history on the Western border in the riotous, fighting days of 1866-72. And there are real romantic characters out of frontier history—"Bat" Masterson, Wyatt Earp, Chalk Beeson, Charlie Bennett, Bill Tighlman, Luke Short, Doc Holliday and the most notorious woman of the day, "Calamity Jane." Ethel Grey Terry is Bill's leading woman, the same girl who played opposite him in "Travelin' On."

"The Light That Failed"

George Melford has just finished "The Light That Failed" and everybody around the Lasky studio enthusiastically agree with the producer that it is the greatest picture he ever made. This certainly is saying something, in the light of "Behold My Wife!" and "The Sheik," but, with all due respect to Mr. Melford, let it be said that he never before had such marvelous material to work with, both in respect to story and cast, as in this production.

Rudyard Kipling is the biggest, best known name in English literature today, and "The Light That Failed" is one of the finest stories he ever wrote. The story gets into the very soul of a lovable young artist, carries it from the heights of fame to the depths of despair which only blindness can cause, and then carries it back up again. Two women—one a bewitching, reckless creature of passion; the other a well-bred daughter of the rich—love him. And the drawing rooms of London society, the low dives of Port Said, the shot-ridden sands of the Sahara, where the "Tommies" fought the sheik's tribesmen, and the Bohemian studio life of Soho form the colorful background.

The cast: Jacquelin Logan; Percy Marmont, star of "If Winter Comes" and scores of other big pictures; Sigrid Holmquist, last seen with Jack Holt in "A Gentleman of Leisure;" David Torrence, brother of Ernest and himself seen in "The Inside of the Cup;" Luke Cosgrave, who, Paramount declares, is going to be one of the most talked-about actors in the country as soon as "Hollywood" gets circulated a little; Mabel Van Buren, Mary Jane Irving, Peggy Shaffer and Winston Miller. The adaptation was written by F. McGrew Willis.

"Challenge for Making of Better Pictures"

I WONDER if we all thoroughly realize the rapidity with which our business is changing.

Last spring we decided to make only fifty-two pictures this season, a reduction from eighty-two of last year. Thus in one word the burden of producing thirty pictures was removed from the shoulders of the production department. I thought the millennium had come, because the new policy gave us the chance to make only the biggest and best pictures possible, make them as individual units and make them with the time, care and attention that good pictures demand.

Now comes another equally amazing turn of the wheel. Made under ideal conditions, Paramount pictures will now be taken directly before the public and will rise or fall on the public's verdict.

Never has any producing organization received such a ringing challenge. And, in all modesty, I want to say that never has any producing organization been so complimented. I am grateful to Mr. Zukor and Mr. Kent for the supreme faith which they are showing in the Paramount production forces, and I know that, put on our mettle in this way, we shall be inspired to make pictures better than ever before in our history.

Our directors and artists will all realize that just as the public stamps each of our pictures with its approval or disapproval, so their own work will be stamped—not by us, not by the exhibitor, but by the public itself.

It will be ruthless for the mediocre; but it will be inspiring to the worthy, and I for one am proud to be a part of an organization that has the courage to make a move which means the dawn of a new day in the production of motion pictures.

"Big Brother"

One of the biggest stories ever written by an author is running right now in Hearst's Magazine. It is "Big Brother," by Rex Beach, author of "The Ne'er-Do-Well" and "The Spoilers." One is held spellbound by its breathless action, its great theme, for it has something found in only one of a thousand stories—a soul.

"Big Brother" is the story of a gangster's regeneration through the influence of a girl and the boy he has sworn to protect.

Everybody has heard of the Big Brother Movement—the great organization of business men, from clerks to millionaires, in every country of the world, Protestants, Catholics,

Variety of Appeal in New Paramount Pictures

Jews pledged to help protect and rear boys and youths in the slum sections of our great cities, especially those subjected to vicious influences, the children of the streets who don't otherwise get a chance. A convention of the Big Brother Movement was held in Washington. Rex Beach went. He had no intention of writing anything. But before he had been there long the great, unselfish purpose of this movement gripped him. He received the inspiration for his greatest story—greatest because he wrote it with his heart—"Big Brother."

Paul Sloane, adaptor of "Over the Hill," and Monte M. Katterjohn wrote the scenario. Sam Wood is directing and the cast is headed by that ideal portrayor of crook roles, Tom Moore, and Lois Wilson.

"Everyday Love"

"Everyday Love" was produced by William de Mille from Julian Street's best-selling novel, "Rita Coventry." Street is a highly successful Saturday Evening Post novelist. Doubleday, Page & Co. published the book, and it has had a tremendous sale—so tremendous that a Broadway stage success was written from it by Hubert Henry Osborne almost as soon as it hit the bookstores, all within the past year. Clara Beranger wrote the screen play.

This is a story of love and the artistic temperament. It takes one right into the intimate private life of a hot-blooded, hot-tempered opera singer who has as many lovers as she has gowns. Nita Naldi plays the singer, and the chap who falls into her silken love net is Jack Holt. Featured in support are Theodore Kosloff and Robert Edeson.

Like all other William de Mille pictures, this production glows with class. Millionaire ladies sitting in the diamond horeshoe at the Metropolitan, back-stage with the temperamental and beautiful opera singer and love-making within her boudoir, the clash of two beautiful women —that's the atmosphere of "Everyday Love."

"The beauty of William de Mille pictures is that they appeal to the masses and classes alike. They get the regular movie patrons and the highbrows who don't go to pictures regularly. They have a distinctive appeal, different from that of any other director," says the announcement.

"Everyday Love" is a sample of William de Mille at his supreme best. It is wonderful material and de Mille has made the picture so as to get every bit of colorful romance and appeal out of the story that it contains.

"Pied Piper Malone"

Thomas Meighan is a wonder at getting famous authors to write stories for him and doing it for phenomenal success for all concerned. Consider the George Ade-Meighan successes, "Our Leading Citizen" and "Back Home and Broke." Now Tom has induced Booth Tarkington, most famous of all living American authors, to write him an original story for the screen.

Nothing as brilliantly new, as ideally suited to its star or as altogether unusual and sure-fire as "Pied Piper Malone" has been turned out for motion pictures in years, says the announcement. Meighan is so delighted with it that he won't let anything be said about the story until the very last minute, lest somebody else grab the idea. So for the moment let it be said merely that it takes a new slant on Meighan's fondness for and popularity with children and let it go at that.

The main part of the picture is to be filmed at Kennebunkport, Maine, the production start-

"Buying and Selling on Proved Results"

WHEN Mr. Zukor, Mr. Lasky and myself worked out the new Paramount sales policy the thought came to me that never in all my experience as a salesman had I been given such a clean-cut selling plan as this one which we are now announcing.

Especially is it clean-cut and equitable when viewed in the light of conditions that prevail this season, when an unusually large number of ambitious pictures, made at the peak of production cost, will clamor for playing time at rentals that must of necessity reflect the cost of production.

Many of these pictures will be bought on faith alone. Paramount pictures in the past, to a certain extent, have been bought on the strength of the exhibitor's faith in the Paramount organization to deliver the product promised. But this year we are not asking the exhibitor to buy on faith. We will ask him to buy on proved results.

We are not going to decide on the box-office value of our product. The exhibitor is not going to decide. The public, the ruler of both of us, will decide. And until the public, after a fair test, has registered its verdict neither we nor the exhibitor will know what any given picture is worth. But when the public speaks then we'll both know.

I said it was the cleanest selling proposition I ever handled. But it's even a better buying proposition, and if this new plan isn't welcomed by exhibitors everywhere I shall be one of the most surprised men in this business.

ing just as soon as Meighan finishes his present picture on the Coast. This is the picturesque New England town where Tarkington spends his summers, and he will be right on the job every day, seeing that Meighan films the story as it was written and suggesting new ideas all the time.

Tom Geraghty, scenarist for "Back Home and Broke" and "Hollywood," has written the continuity. Alfred E. Green, who directed "The Bachelor Daddy," "Back Home and Broke" and "Our Leading Citizen," is the director. Lois Wilson, endeared to everybody as the ideal type of fresh, pretty, wholesome American womanhood, is Tom's sweetheart in the picture.

"Stephen Steps Out"

"Paramount didn't sign Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., chiefly because he is his father's son, although that fact will loom up big at the box office, of course. Young Doug is more than that. One can't look at him five minutes without falling for him. He is just all boy—clean, healthy, breezy—the American boy. When he went out to Hollywood to start his first picture he captivated the heart of everybody. And the screen catches and radiates his wonderful personality, for he is a fine actor," the announcement declares.

But just so there wouldn't be any doubt of it, Mr. Lasky bought Richard Harding Davis's story, "The Grand Cross of the Crescent," for young Fairbanks' first starring vehicle, assigned Edfrid Bingham to adapt it with the title, "Stephen Steps Out," and named Joseph Henabery to direct. In the story the boy is the son of a self-made millionaire who has endowed a preparatory school to which he sends his young hopeful. There the boy is denied his diploma because he has flunked a course n Turkish history. The father is enraged and has the old professor fired. Now the boy, feeling sorry for the teacher, goes over to Turkey, gets possession of a Grand Cross of the Crescent and brings it back and has it presented to his former instructor, thereby winning back for him his old position, forms a typical Richard Harding Davis adventure tale.

See who is in the cast: Theodore Roberts, as the professor; Noah Beery, as the father; Harry Myers, who made such a hit in "The Connecticut Yankee;" Forrest Robinson and Frank Currier.

"Bill" Hart Is Back!

WILLIAM S. HART, after more than two years' absence from the screen, is back at work for Paramount. This is great news for the millions of Hart admirers who had feared that "Travelin' On" would be the last picture in which they were to see their favorite star.

William S. Hart occupies a unique position in the motion picture profession. From the beginning of his screen career he has been identified almost entirely with pictures that revive the traditions and customs of the old West. His pictures have taught the whole world the romance, the struggles and the hardihood of the pioneers. Always clean, always teaching the lesson of clean living and chivalry to women, Bill Hart's pictures have been among the most popular productions both in America and abroad.

His new contract with Paramount calls for four pictures a year and he is already engaged at the Lasky studio on the production of the first of the series, "Wild Bill Hickok."

"The Call of the Canyon"

"Prodigal Daughters" and "To the Last Man" rolled into one, with a dash of patriotism to season it with—that's Zane Grey's "The Call of the Canyon."

It is a contrast of East and West. It shows the fast-living, dancing, gambling young generation brought into contact with and sobered by the mighty realities of Nature—the mountains and streams, the clean life of outdoors.

"The Call of the Canyon" is the second Zane Grey story to be produced by Paramount. It ran as a serial in the Ladies Home Journal a year ago and has since been published as a novel. It is being filmed right on the locale described in the book—amid the mountain grandeur and cactus-studded canyons of Arizona, God's own country. Victor Fleming, who made "The Law of the Lawless" and "To the Last Man," is the producer and Doris Schroeder wrote the scenario.

In this picture, Lois Wilson appears as the society girl who finds her own soul. She has a part of varied phase and is equally at home in the marathon dance with which the picture opens and in her tense scene with Noah Beery in the cabin in the lonely reaches of the Arizona desert, with the standstorm howling outside. Incidentally, that cabin scene, taken bodily from the book, is said to be different from anything of its sort ever screened.

Others in the cast are Richard Dix, Walter McGrail, Ricardo Cortez, Robert Agnew and Alma Bennett.

"Around the World in the Speejacks"

In the history books of the future the name of A. Y. Gowen, Chicago business man, ought to have a place beside those of Columbus, Magellan and Peary. Gowen, in a 98-foot motor boat, sailed completely around the world and, unlike Columbus and Magellan and Peary, he took along with him an expert cameraman.

And so Paramount is able to offer to the public "Around the World in the Speejacks" in 6,000 feet of film entertainment, and if one ever doubted the old saying that truth is stranger than fiction, here is the proof that the saying is true. It has all the marvelous atmosphere of strange reality that "Nanook of the North" possesses and the advantage, claims Paramount, over "Nanook" of having a breezy American for a hero and a pretty American woman for a heroine.

Gowen and his wife and their party of six sailed out of New York in the "Speejacks," a tiny speck on the surface of the mighty Atlantic. They voyaged through the Panama Canal, across the South Pacific to Tahiti, Samoa, Fiji, Australia, New Guinea, Java, the Malay Archipelago, then across the Indian Ocean to the Gulf of Aden and the Red Sea, visited Egypt, Greece and Italy and then passed through the Gibraltar and out across the Atlantic back to New York.

Here is a record of a year and a half of dangerous adventuring, of risking of lives in storm and wind, of visiting strange and fascinating lands and peoples.

"Best Sellers" Announced for Early Release

THREE of the six best sellers of current fiction, listed in a recent issue of the New York Tribune, are among the stories picturized by Paramount and announced for early release.

They are:

"His Children's Children," by Arthur Train, published by Scribners.

"West of the Water Tower," by an anonymous author, published by Harper & Bros.

"North of 36," by Emerson Hough, published by D. Appleton & Company.

In addition to these the new Paramount list includes "Big Brother," Rex Beach's sensationally successful story, now running serially in Hearst's Magazine; May Edginton's "Triumph," which ran in the Saturday Evening Post; Julian Street's greatest novel, "Rita Coventry," filmed by William de Mille under the title "Everyday Love;" Rudyard Kipling's literary classic, "The Light That Failed;" "Zane Grey's immensely popular "The Call of the Canyon" and "The Heritage of the Desert," and "Argentine Love," by Vicente Blasco Ibanez.

Cecil B. DeMille's "Triumph"

After completion of his production of "The Ten Commandments," Cecil B. DeMille will produce "Triumph," a picture announced as along the lines of the ones in which he achieved his first and greatest previous successes.

"Triumph" is a modern love-drama with a big theme. From first to last the story is developed in modern fashion, with no flashbacks or ancient spectacle. There will be lavish scenes, it is true, and the production will be made with all the well-known DeMille splendor. Mr. DeMille will devote just as much care and attention to this modern love story as he has to his work just being completed.

The story, by May Edginton, ran serially in the Saturday Evening Post last Spring. Jeannie Macpherson, author or adaptor of practically all of Mr. DeMille's productions is, now at work on the scenario. Leatrice Joy and Rod La Rocque have already been picked to head the cast and more big names will be added later. The former has done her best work in Cecil B. DeMille pictures and the latter, now working for the first time under this producer's direction in "The Ten Commandments," is receiving highest praise from all those who have seen parts of the picture to date.

Glenn Hunter, star of stage and screen, and May McAvoy will be seen in "West of the Water Tower," a Paramount picture from which these scenes were taken.

Wide Range of Themes in New Paramounts

The theme of "Triumph" is that it is wrong to have something for nothing. If there is to be a reaping there must be a sowing, and those who do nothing cannot expect a harvest. The gaining of a fortune ruined a strong man and the losing of the same fortune was the making of the man who lost it.

"The Humming Bird"

After "Zaza," the public, Paramount believes, is going to be crazy to see Gloria Swanson in "Zaza" roles. "The Humming Bird" presents her in a "Zaza" type of picture, but with a plot totally different from "Zaza."

Gloria in this picture is a saucy, breezy French girl raised as a thief and leader of a gang of Apache cutthroats in the slums of Paris, who is regenerated through her love for a young American millionaire. The Apache quarter of Paris, Gloria's daring Apache dances, French dives and underworld characters, life in an artist's studio in the Latin Quarter, the ballrooms of Fifth Avenue society and the climax in a rum-runner's den on the New York waterfront—these are some of the entertaining features.

"The Humming Bird" was written by Maude Fulton, an actress, and produced successfully as a stage play on Broadway. Allan Dwan, producer of "Robin Hood," "Zaza" and other big pictures, has directed it for the screen. Julian Johnson, head of the Paramount scenario department, wrote the continuity, giving it his personal attention because he confidently believes it to be the greatest story Miss Swanson has ever put upon the screen.

In "The Humming Bird" the public is offered a new Gloria—a Gloria wearing gorgeous gowns and alluring as ever in the passionate love scenes, but also a Gloria as full of pep and fascinating as Lenore Ulric's "Kiki" (whom her "Toinette" in this story somewhat resembles), marvelously graceful and fiery in the Apache dances, a tigress in the scenes where she battles for the life of the man she loves.

"Flaming Barriers"

George Melford is producing "Flaming Barriers." Byron Morgan, author of "The Roaring Road," "Excuse My Dust," "Across the Continent" and all the other Wallace Reid automobile pictures, wrote the story. Jack Cunningham, who adapted "The Covered Wagon," wrote the scenario. Let anyone read a fifty-word synopsis of the story and then consider the above collaborators and it will not be hard to imagine how this production is going to look on the screen.

"Flaming Barriers" is a story of factories where great trucks are born to thunder over the streets and highways; a story of spectacular, modern, motor-driven fire engines; a story of forests and entrapped pleasure-seekers who ride across burning bridges to safety, all because a girl believes in her inventive father and the gigantic pieces of fire-fighting apparatus which his genius has conceived and built.

And in the midst of this romance of business success and throughout all the action in the great outdoors, there develops a love story, coupled with human characterizations.

The cast, too, is something to talk about. It is filled with names that will go up in the electric lights and draw. Jacqueline Logan is the girl and Theodore Roberts plays the father. Antonio Moreno is the hero and Robert McKim plays the heavy. Sigrid Holmquist will be seen as Jackie Logan's rival and Walter Hiers is cast in the role of an efficiency expert.

DeMille Completes "Ten Commandments"

CECIL B. DEMILLE'S production, "The Ten Commandments," has been finished. Final shots were made on Saturday, August 18. In point of time required, size of sets and number of persons participating this is the greatest production ever made by the Paramount organization. Production work started on May 21 after a period of several months of preparation during which it was necessary for two women to circle the globe to get data, costumes, etc.

Spectacles on a big scale were incorporated into the Biblical prologue of the modern story by Jeanie Macpherson. For several weeks 2,500 players and hundreds of technical assistants were camped on the sand dunes at Guadelupe, Cal., where scenes were made showing the Egyptian oppression of the Children of Israel. The set used was larger than any ever before constructed, it is said.

Later scenes were made near Los Angeles on massive sets and at various points on the Coast.

Many All-Star Casts in New Productions

"There's a Fortune in It"

The name of James Cruze has come to mean a lot in the motion picture business and particularly in the field of comedy. Look back to the success scored by "The Lottery Man" and "The Dictator," to the comedy scenes in "The Old Homestead" and the screamingly funny by-play in "The Covered Wagon," not to mention "Hollywood."

"There's a Fortune in It," the latest Cruze production, was written by William DeMille, who had a world-wide reputation as a playwright long before he ever thought of being a motion picture director. It was produced as a stage play under its original title, "After Five." It is a story in which the laughs depend upon rapid-fire action, a gag a minute, humor broad enough for everybody to see and enjoy. The scenes are laid in fashionable New York, Wall Street and an Adirondack camp.

The hero of the story is a young man who is made the guardian of a pretty girl when her brother, chum of the hero, dies. Against the girl's advice he invests her fortune in stocks. The stocks start to go down and our hero, panic-stricken, gets himself insured for $150,000 to cover the girl's probable losses. Then he goes out to get himself killed in an "accident."

Walter Woods adapted the DeMille play and Agnes Ayres, Bebe Daniels, Wallace Beery and Edward Horton are featured in the cast.

"My Man"

A year and a half ago David Belasco put on a French play in New York. It ran for a year and a half and was an absolute knockout. It was only taken off to give its star, Lenore Ulric, a much needed rest.

Andre Picard, a Parisian playwright, wrote "Kiki." At once there was a mad scramble on the part of theatrical and film producers to secure others of his plays. Belasco wouldn't release "Kiki" for pictures, but Paramount was able to get from Picard, "My Man," which made a tremendous sensation in Paris when produced under its original title, "Mon Homme."

"Kiki" was the talk of New York on account of its heroine, a saucy, profane, passionate, rough and tumble, bewitched devil-girl of the Paris streets. "My Man" has the same kind of a girl in it—and imagine Pola Negri playing her!

In "My Man" Miss Negri plays a ruthless, daring, lawless girl, leader of a pack of desperate thieves in the slums of Paris. After a series of unexpected twists and turns of plot she is found half tamed, the leader of smart society, a woman of title and wealth, but still bound by heart ties to the life she has left and to the wolf pack that is pledged to war on society. From now to the end of the story the plot provides one thrill after another in a series of stirring scenes.

Herbert Brenon, who made "The Spanish Dancer" and "The Woman with Four Faces," is producing this picture and the cast includes Charles de Roche and Lewis Stone, among others.

"Argentine Love"

Vicente Blasco Ibanez, author of "Argentine Love," is the Spanish genius who wrote "The Four Horsemen," "Blood and Sand" and "Enemies of Women." His greatest literary success was "The Four Horsemen" and the most colorful and popular part of it embraced the Argentine episodes, where he was able to get color, romance, plot and characterization that were absolutely the most vital part of his story.

In "Argentine Love" he has an entire theme in which he is admittedly a past master.

Add to this the fact that Gloria Swanson is in the role of the beautiful Argentine, loved by two handsome, hot-blooded young cavaliers of a most colorful city.

In this production, Allan Dwan, who has been chosen to direct, has his opportunity to duplicate "Robin Hood" in his handling of a real romance, set in gorgeous surroundings.

Further details on this production will be announced later.

"The Stranger"

Paramount is predicting that when "The Stranger" is shown, the public will say that screen history has been made again. Once in a great while somebody takes all the old elements—love, romance, pathos, laughs, thrills—and makes a different kind of picture out of them. Sometimes it turns out to be a great picture and everyone tries to make one like it. "The Covered Wagon" is one like that. So was "The Miracle Man."

This picture, on which all are banking so heavily, is an adaptation of the novel, "The First and the Last," by John Galsworthy. The fact that it is a picturization of a story by the greatest living English author is of the greatest importance. For there is no living author who can unfold a tale with more amazing insight into the human heart than Galsworthy. For development of plot combined with heart-interest he has no peer.

Joseph Henabery, the man who made "The Call of the North," "While Satan Sleeps" and "Brewster's Millions," will direct "The Stranger." Here, he feels, is his big chance to get out the big picture that has been inside his mind, waiting to be made. The story has been adapted by Bertram Milhauser, writer and director of many years' training.

There is just one actress in Paramount who can play the pathetic, beautiful, heroic girl in this picture, and that's Leatrice Joy, the same Leatrice Joy of "Manslaughter." Featured with her will be Richard Dix and Lewis Stone. Tully Marshall will be in it, too.

"When Knights Were Bold"

Anybody who has seen "Merton of the Movies" knows that Glenn Hunter is a comedian of a distinctive type, one who can work up a marvelous amount of sympathy so that audiences take him right to their hearts, even while they're laughing at him all the time.

To pick the type of story that will fit a personality like that is not the easiest thing in the world. So it was with a feeling of good luck that Paramount got hold of the story for Glenn Hunter to follow, "West of the Water Tower." It is "When Knights Were Bold," the stage comedy by Charles Marlowe, in which Francis Wilson attained huge success.

"When Knights Were Bold" is the story of a young man, thoroughly modern, who goes after the object of his heart in the manner which the knights of old used to adopt. In sleep he is transported back to the year 1196 and as his dream fades and he awakes he re-enacts the scenes of his dream to the utmost confusion of the other persons in the story and to his eventual and complete success. It is the type of story that made the stage play, "Captain Applejack," so popular.

For such a story titles play an important part. To insure that they shall properly represent the spirit of the tale, Paramount has engaged Ralph Spence to edit and title the picture. Spence is the man who made "A Connecticut Yankee," one of the funniest of screen comedies. He wrote most of the comedy scenes in this year's Ziegfeld's "Follies" and is one of the best comedy writers of the present day.

"The Heritage of the Desert"

Zane Grey's "The Heritage of the Desert" is an action romance of the West. It is the story of a courageous man's fight against a powerful, unscrupulous rival for a girl. The fact that the hero's life is saved by the father of one of his enemies makes the drama even more tense. The plot is worked out against a colorful, sweeping background of hand-to-hand encounters, gun fights, cattle rustling, Mormon ideas of love and honor, Indian attacks, broncho-busting and a score of other thrills.

As this is being written Mr. Lasky has just telegraphed Mr. Zukor that the first Zane Grey production "To the Last Man," is, in his opinion, "the greatest outdoor Western picture ever made." Grey has an eager public that numbers millions, and these millions demand the real thing if their favorite author's works are to be made into motion pictures. So Paramount is transporting the casts and technical people and virtually a whole studio hundreds of miles from Los Angeles, right out into the raw, picturesque canyon and desert country where the plots are laid.

Doris Schroeder has written the scenario of "The Heritage of the Desert" and Lois Wilson, Rod La Rocque and Neah Beery are featured in the cast. The director, Irvin Willat, has pledged himself to rival, if not surpass, Victor Fleming's "To the Last Man."

Paramounts Now Current in the Theatres

JAMES CRUZE'S production, "Hollywood," which has just completed a run of three weeks at the Rivoli theatre New York, has proved a boxoffice sensation everywhere it has played. Allan Dwan's special production, "Lawful Larceny," also has scored a big success, as has Gloria Swanson in "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife." Great as its success has been, however, reports from the studio indicate Miss Swanson's next picture, "Zaza," produced by Allan Dwan, will be even more satisfying to the boxoffice, says Paramount.

Pola Negri's latest picture, "The Cheat," will open Sunday at the Rivoli theatre, New York, as one of the pictures to inaugurate the Greater Movie Season. Likewise, the first Zane Grey picture for Paramount, "To the Last Man," will be shown Sunday at the Rialto.

Reports from Los Angeles are that James Cruze's latest production, "Ruggles of Red Gap," from Harry Leon Wilson's well known book, is going to duplicate the success of "Hollywood," and William de Mille has just finished producing "The Marriage Maker," from Edward Knoblock's play, "The Faun."

George Melford is represented in the first group with "Salomy Jane," from Bret Harte's story, and Thomas Meighan is now in the middle of production of "Woman-Proof," an original story by George Ade. "The Silent Partner," featuring Leatrice Joy and Owen Moore, is at the Rivoli theatre, New York, this week.

Probably never again will Paramount or any other company have the opportunity of making a masterpiece such as presents itself in "North of 36." It is the late Emerson Hough's last novel, of which George Horace Lorrimer, the editor of the Saturday Evening Post, said, "It is one of the most popular serial stories we have run in many, many months.

In producing this picture, the Paramount Production department has set for itself the gigantic task of rivalling, if not surpassing, "The Covered Wagon," by the same author.

To begin with, consider the cast. Jack Holt, in the lead; Ernest Torrence, now famous as "Bill" Jackson of "The Covered Wagon," as the ranch foreman; Lila Lee as the girl, Wallace Beery as the heavy, and numerous other artists of almost equal prominence appear.

James Cruze, who made film history with "The Covered Wagon," has been selected to direct it.

Briefly, the story runs something like this: Immediately following the Civil War, Texas faced its greatest problem: the scattered inhabitants were land poor and cattle poor; a square mile of territory could be purchased for fourteen dollars; cattle were as thick as flies but there were no railroads, no market, no law.

It is this blazing of the first trail, hundreds of miles to the North, that forms the background of the story. Every mile of the course is filled with adventure, romance, and danger. Already numerous spectacular features, such as the stampede of six thousand head of long horns, are being planned and in addition it is promised there will be numerous comedy and essentially human touches of the character which made "The Covered Wagon" such an enthralling photoplay.

Pre-release Reviews of Features

The Man Who Won

(Fox—5050 Feet)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

HERE is a simple Western story told in a simple, straightforward way without an unnecessary extra foot of film, without the complexity of numerous counter plots and devoid of attempts at alleged humor, which usually characterize these Westerns. The story starts unfolding from the first foot and continuously carries the action until the end.

There is nothing out of the ordinary in the plot, but it does hold the attention and will keep an audience somewhat on the anxious seat throughout. Dustin Farnum is an unassuming hero, who does his work naturally and well and, therefore, will be appreciated. In fact, the whole cast has the happy faculty of not overacting. Jacqueline Gadsden has a rather unsympathetic role in the feminine lead, but she does it well, as does Ralph Cloninger in the role of the wronged husband and Lloyd Whitlock as the heavy.

The story has to do with the unsatisfied wife of a poor young prospector. Attracted by the wiles of the villain, she leaves her husband and two young children, but only on the promise that the children will be brought to her later. The attempt to kidnap them is frustrated by the hero, through whose clever plotting the erring wife is also restored to the husband just as an oil gusher bursts forth on his supposedly worthless claim. The hero forfeits his life through the rescue after willing his fortune to the two children.

THEME. A wife and mother of two small children unsatisfied with her poverty is won by the wiles and promises of the wealthy villain. She is reluctantly restored to her family and realizes her folly at the climax of the story.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The battle of the hero and the outlaws in the effort of the former to drive the stagecoach through with its treasure of gold dust. The fight between the wronged husband and the villain. The pathetic scenes with the abandoned children. The splendid work of the entire cast.

DIRECTION. William Wellman has done his work exceptionally well. There is no overacting in any role. The story moves smoothly and the fist and gun fight scenes could hardly be improved upon.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. The name and acting of Dustin Farnum should be emphasized as well as the extremely melodramatic situations. The fight scenes offer good possibilities, as do the simplicity of the story and the capable manner in which it is acted.

DRAWING POWER. Wherever the Western is liked this one can hardly miss.

SUMMARY. An exceptionally good Western drama with plenty of fast action and without the usual hokum and alleged humor.

SYNOPSIS. Dissatisfied wife of an unfortunate prospector is lured from her home and two children by the wealthy villain, who promises to restore her children to her later. Drifting

(Universal—Seven Reels)

(Reviewed by Frank Shelton)

THIS is an adaptation of a Broadway play in which Alice Brady and Robert Warwick appeared, which fact is conceded to have contributed materially to its considerable success.

In transferring the story to the screen, much of the color of the original has been lost, and in consequence there remains only an obvious melodrama, very well done as to settings, atmosphere, and in certain individual sequences, especially the last two reels, but lacking to a great extent in audience appeal.

The story presents the star in a most unfavorable light. She is an ill-tempered, cold-blooded crook,—an opium smuggler—until the last few hundred feet of film, when a "throughlove" transformation and reformation is effected.

The only part in the whole picture that will get much sympathy is that of the Chinese girl played by Anna May Wong, who incidentally makes the most of her opportunities. Matt Moore, as the hero, is not very well suited to the role.

The first two-thirds of the picture is decidedly slow and abounds in titles of two varieties, rather cheap underworld slang and extraavgantly phrased descriptions.

The last two or three reels pick up, however, and the finish is first class picture melodrama, with a he-man fight, soldiers riding to the rescue and all the sure-fire, orthodox trimmings.

It would seem that a judicious trimming of the early sequences would materially aid the production's chances with audiences. Some reason for the heroine's being mixed up in opium smuggling other than a hard-boiled mercenary one, would also help. As it is, the picture will not add to Miss Dean's popularity.

THEME. Melodrama with a Chinese locale dealing with the dope game and the efforts of those against it to kill it and those in it to get away with the big stakes.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The attack and burning of the Village of Hang Chow. The knife fight between Captain Jarvis and Jules Repin. The attractive Chinese exteriors and interiors. The beautiful photography. The artistic lighting effects. The good cast.

DIRECTION. As a whole, good, but action has been allowed to drag in the early reels and some of the extras are badly miscast. The director, however, has worked his picture up to a fine and thrilling climax.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Put a man on the street dressed in full Chinese costume with appropriate advertising. Dress your lobby with Chinese lanterns and other Far East decorations. Might have the girl ushers don Chinese costumes. A prologue dealing with a dope house interior and a soloist singing an appropriate song would be a colorful bit.

DRAWING POWER. A good attraction for house whose patrons like melodrama.

SUMMARY. Would have been much better as a five reel picture. As such action could be speeded up much to advantage of the whole feature. The acting is fine throughout. The picture is saved by a thrilling climax.

THE CAST

Cassie Cook	Priscilla Dean
Polly Voo	Rose Dione
Jules Repin	Wallace Beery
Dr. Li	William V. Mong
Chang Wong	Frank Lanning
Ming Wong	Anna May Wong
Captain Jarvis	Matt Moore
Jay Burke	J. Farrel McDonald
Little Bruce	Bruce Guerin

By Tod Browning and A. P. Younger. Directed by Tod Browning. Photographed by William Fildew. Titles by Gardner Bradford. Film editor, Errol Taggart.

SYNOPSIS. Cassie Cook and Jules Repin are in China to "clean up" in the dope game. Captain Jarvis, a government agent posing as a mining engineer, is in the same country to try and kill the source of the "snow" supply. These two forces meet and action begins when they try to do away with Jarvis. The burning of the village wherein is stored much of the dope is a thrilling finale.

The Silent Partner

(Paramount—Six Reels)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

WALL Street stories have a way of following a regulation pattern. The inevitable wolf must pursue relentlessly the sheep for the purpose of bringing financial embarrassment so that the latter's wife will realize the error of being wedded to a poor gambler and tie herself up with the other. "The Silent Partner" is a hackneyed tale, carrying hackneyed situations and stereotyped characters. The ever present moral is tacked onto the weak plot. It shows an object lesson in an inveterate gambler who is compelled to move into squalid quarters over Tenth Avenue way. A rather far-fetched touch that—particularly so when the unhappy wife is forced to beg for money while her appearance is that of a slattern of the slums.

The young broker gambles and gambles, and for a while runs into excellent luck—so much so that he moves into a duplex apartment on one of the better streets. But he is too dense to see that the human wolf is trying with might and main to ruin him. The wife, however, puts away the nest egg. She deceives her husband by placing his proffered checks in a safe deposit vault—checks which he had given her to buy expensive jewels and finery. But she purchases cheap imitations and makes her own dresses.

The intermediate action reveals the husband becoming very agitated as the stock descends. Finally he is ruined, and, as he discovers his wife's deception and is frustrated in his effort to borrow from her, a quarrel ensues and they are separated. When she realizes that the wolf of the Street is responsible for her husband's fall from the heights the expected reconciliation occurs and they make a fresh start in life.

An oft-told tale—with nothing novel nor refreshing in its development. Leatrice Joy gives it some value with a portrayal marked for sincerity and human appeal. The excitement of watching the rise and fall of stocks is absent because the bedlam of noise is naturally missing. Once the human wolf is introduced the ending is in sight. However, it is pretty well put together. Its moments of interest are centered in Miss Joy's acting.

THEME. Treats with the domestic upheaval arising from a Wall Street gambler losing his fortune through the manipulations of a powerful broker who has designs upon the former's wife.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The very sincere portrayal of Leatrice Joy. Owen Moore's adaptability for the role of the stock gambler. The good atmosphere in the brokerage offices.

DIRECTION. Has hackneyed story and does as well as possible from it. Might have put in more "kick" in climax. Stresses the poverty note in one scene— which is far-fetched. Provides first rate atmosphere. Allows it to drag in several scenes and doesn't hold the interest.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Might play up author as leading short story writer. Might plaster the town with a teaser campaign showing methods of how Wall Street operates. Feature Leatrice Joy and Owen Moore.

DRAWING POWER. Suitable for better grade theatres.

SUMMARY. Mediocre domestic drama revolving around a stock gambler who loses his fortune. Is hackneyed in theme, stereotyped in characterization and always obvious. Its appeal lies in the two leading performances.

THE CAST

Lisa Coburn	Leatrice Joy
George Coburn	Owen Moore
Ralph Coombes	Robert Edeson
Harvey Dredge	Robert Schable
Cora Dredge	Patterson Dial
Jim Harker	E. H. Calvert
Gertie Page	Maude Wayne
Mrs. Nesbit	Bess Flowers
Mrs. Harker	Laura Anson

By Maxmilian Foster. Scenario by Sada Cowan. Directed by Charles Maigne.

SYNOPSIS. Young stock broker gets tips on good investments and has run of excellent luck—so much so, that he climbs the ladder and showers his wife with rich checks. The latter, realizing that he will be eventually ruined puts away the proferd checks for a nest egg and buys imitation jewels with the money. The inevitable happens. The husband is ruined and discovers that a powerful broker brought about his ruination in order to win his wife away. She understands his deception and returns to her husband after a brief separation.

Blinky

(Universal—5807 Feet)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

IT'S a rattling good army story which Hoot Gibson has in "Blinky"—a story, which, while following a regulation pattern, is executed with quickness and despatch, and which packs realistic atmosphere, clearly defined characterizations and sufficient crisp incident to make it enjoyable entertainment. The idea isn't difficult to guess. Any hardened spectator can easily anticipate the plot—that the carefully sheltered youth will become a real cavalry trooper once he has been thrown into contact with life in the raw.

The role gives Gibson a chance to show some skill at characterization. The early scenes find him playing the part of a "mamma's boy"—affecting tortoise-shelled glasses and spats. He belongs to Washington's "400." His father, a retired cavalry colonel, places him with his former troop—and then the fun and excitement begins.

The idea is nothing but the formula of making over a man. After he has trouble in learning to ride and having his belt stolen from him by a gang of contraband smugglers, he develops some courage, and it isn't long until he earns the nickname of "Raw Meat"—which was also given his father. There is a mild romance connected with the army incident which is of the regulation stuff. The heroine, the daughter of the commander, visits the camp and stays long enough to be kidnaped by the smugglers and rescued by the hero. The love interest is obvious to a degree, but it is never boresome.

What we liked particularly about this picture is the realistic touches of army life. A genuine cavalry troop appears to have been employed, judging from their manoeuvres. There is no heavy villainy embodying the customary skirmish. Indeed the smugglers are not the orthodox dyed-in-the-wool bandits. The story plants its figures and swings into its plot with every character and detail sharply illustrated. And it moves with creditable speed to its conclusion. The color and atmosphere—the first-rate acting and photography—the character study—these are sufficient to make it a neat little picture.

THEME. A comedy drama which features the making over of a spineless youth into a courageous cavalry officer, through contact with life in the open, away from his mother's apron-strings.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The shading in Hoot Gibson's interpretation. He never overacts the carefully nurtured youth. The excellent atmosphere and photography. The realistic bits of army life as found among a cavalry troop. The pursuit of the smugglers. Their capture by the hero.

DIRECTION. Has carefully kept it from becoming western hokum. Deserves praise for emphasizing the army atmosphere and keeping away from heavy villainy. Builds his story well—showing scenes clearly outlined. Has caught a true perspective of army life. Has steered clear of showing romantic conflict. Carries the plot along in an even tempo.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. If there is an army camp near your town, link it up with the picture. Co-operate with enlistment bureaus. Put on a prologue suggestive of army life. Ballyhoo the feature with a real cavalry trooper or one of your employees masquerading as one.

DRAWING POWER. Should draw in any house, anywhere.

SUMMARY. An entertaining story of character development built against an army background. Characters and detail well planted and the atmosphere is highly interesting.

THE CAST

Goeffrey Arbuthnot Islip (Blinky)	Hoot Gibson
Mary Lou Killeen	Esther Ralston
Mrs. Islip	Mathilde Brundage
Col. "Raw Meat" Islip	DeWitt Jennings
Priscilla Islip	Elinor Field

Lieutenant Rawkins	William E. Lawrence
The Adjutant	W. T. McCulley

By Gene Markey. Scenario by Edward Sedgwick. Directed by Edward Sedgwick. Photographed by Virgil Miller.

SYNOPSIS. Society youth—a member of Washington's elite—is tied to mother's apron strings. Has all the manner of a much pampered boy. His father places him with a cavalry troop advising him to make good or never come back. The boy, thrust headlong into contact with rough army life, encounters good natured kidding and some humiliation. But he makes good, wins the commander's daughter, and is accepted with open arms by his father.

Regional News From Correspondents

Buffalo

ONE of the biggest realty deals ever made in Binghamton or the Southern Tier has been consummated by the purchase of the Stone Opera House and the Binghamton theatre by the Binghamton Theatre Company, Inc. The new company is headed by Michael E. Commerford, who is also largely interested in theatrical enterprises in Scranton. Other officers are: Ned Kornblite, vice president; David Cohen, secretary and treasurer. The board of directors is composed of these officers, together with L. A. DeGraff of Scranton, an associate of Mr. Commerford. The consideration involved in these two purchases amounts to $750,000. The new company purchased the Binghamton theatre from Odell S. Hathaway and Mrs. Hathaway of Middletown, N. Y., for a consideration of $276,000. The new owners also assume mortgages of Mr. Hathaway to the Binghamton Savings bank, amounting to $100,000, thus making the total consideration for the Binghamton, $376,000. The Stone Opera House was purchased from Mr. and Mrs. Charles M. Stone of Binghamton for a consideration of $300,000, giving a mortgage of $150,000 to Mr. Stone as partial payment. Other mortgages assumed make the total financial consideration about $750,000.

Dave Cohen

While it had been generally understood that Mr. Hathaway was owner of the Stone Opera House, it has developed that he purchased that property of Charles M. Stone about 12 years ago, but that he had never filed a deed. The purchase was made on a contract basis, and while Mr. Hathaway was actually the owner, the property was still technically in the name of Mr. Stone, so the deed now filed shows the opera house was purchased of the latter by the Binghamton Theatre Co. The new concern will operate both of these places of amusement and will follow practically the same policy that has been pursued in the past. H. M. Addison, who has been local manager for Mr. Hathaway for the last five years, and has had sole charge of the two theatres, will be retained by the new owners. Messrs. Kornblite and Cohen, together with their associates in the company, are now in control of the five largest theatres in Binghamton. The Strand, Star and Symphony are already operated by them. They also own the Strand theatre in Endicott, while Mr. Commerford controls a large circuit of theatres in Scranton, Pittston, Wilkes-Barre, Waverly. Sayre, Athens, Oswego and other cities. It is understood that the new owners contemplate extensive alterations and improvements in the Stone Opera House. This work, or at least a portion of it, probably will be inaugurated at once, to prepare for the re-opening of the house later this month.

Ned Kornblite

H. M. Addison

H. M. Addison, who has been local manager of the opera house and the Binghamton theatre probably will be retained by the new owners as general manager for both these playhouses. He has been the personal representative for Mr. Hathaway in Binghamton for the last five years. He opened the Binghamton theatre four years ago and has managed it ever since. Mr. Addison came to Binghamton from Oneonta, where he had been resident manager for Mr. Hathaway's theatrical interests in that city.

Mr. Kornblite has been a resident of Binghamton practically all his life and has made his way to the front by hard work. He first became interested in the possibilities of motion pictures for amusement purposes about 15 years ago and was one of the first to open a motion picture theatre in Binghamton, the present Star theatre on Chenango street being the outgrowth of that enterprise.

O. S. Hathaway

Mr. Cohen came to Binghamton more than ten years ago and identified himself with the motion picture interests by opening the Symphony theatre. He and Mr. Kornblite soon formed an alliance and then associated themselves with Mr. Commerford and his associates. Their next expansion was the purchase of the old Armory theatre which latter was abandoned as an amusement place when they erected the Strand theatre. Later they built the Strand in Endicott, N. Y.

John J. Maxwell, formerly assistant manager of the New Olympic theatre on Lafayette Square, Buffalo, has been appointed manager of the Central Park theatre at Main street and Fillmore avenue, one of the chain of community picture houses operated by the Border Amusement Company. Mr. Maxwell succeeds Jack Stevens who has returned to the Ellen Terry, another Border house. J. V. Carney, formerly in the local internal revenue office, has succeeded Mr. Maxwell at the Olympic.

The Sampson theatre in Penn Yan, N. Y., has been purchased by Associated Theatres, Inc., of East Rochester, N. Y., a company controlling about a dozen picture houses in western New York and headed by Harold P. Dygert. The Sampson was built by Dr. Frank Sampson in Jacob street, some years ago and later purchased by Cyrus Johnson. Possession is to be given August 27. Mr. Johnson retains all equipment. It is said that the Sampson will be run in connection with the Elmwood theatre under the management of Harry Morse of Penn Yan. The sale is reported to have involved a sum exceeding $30,000.

Fire, believed to have been started by spontaneous combustion, caused $5,000 damage to the Premier theatre, Main street and Leroy avenue, Tuesday morning, August 14. The blaze which originated in the booth, gave firemen a stiff fight for a few minutes, but was soon under control. Much water was poured into the house, which is owned by Jacob Feldman, 162 Walnut street. The Premier is closed for the summer. The flames were discovered by a passerby. Harry Green is manager of the house.

An action to recover $100,000 from the Steuben Theatre Company and the Associated Theatres, Inc., of East Rochester, N. Y., for alleged breach of contract has been filed in Supreme Court in Corning, N. Y. The action is brought by G. H. Tobias, owner and lessee of the Princess and Regent theatres in Corning. The suit develops from an agreement alleged to have been made for the operation of four theatres in the Southern Tier city. According to the complaint, the parties concerned operated several weeks under the agreement and then the contract was broken, it is alleged, by the Steuben Theatre Company. The Liberty theatre then violated the contract, according to Mr. Tobias, by raising technical objections. The action is directed particularly against this last named company. By reason of alleged violation, the complaint asserts, the other defendants were unable to carry out the agreement, although willing to do so.

W. B. Milner, representing W. W. Kimball & Co., of Chicago, was in Oswego last week taking measurements for the new orchestral organ that his firm will build for the Tioga theatre.

In order to eliminate any argument as to their turn in the august presence each fillum peddler ripped a number from a large pad calendar and stuck same in their hats. Then Bill opened the door, laughed heartily and called No. 1.

It is reported that Mort Howell of the Lincoln theatre, Rochester, has retained Mitchell & Staples, attorneys of Buffalo, who have informed all Buffalo exchanges with whom the Lincoln had contracts prior to the discontinuance of service by the local distributors to resume service at once or suffer the consequences. The situation may result in a big legal battle.

The Fredonia Opera House in Fredonia, N. Y., has been re-opened.

As a result of the fire in the projection room in which several reels of film were destroyed, the Universal theatre in Auburn, N. Y., has temporarily closed. C. S. Burtis, taking advantage of the fact that the city was without a picture theatre has re-opened the Burtis Grand for Saturdays and Sundays. Edward J. Wise, an operator, was burned in an effort to save the film. The fire started in the top magazine of the machine and spread to the other magazine. Joseph N. Schwartzwalder, proprietor, was away on his vacation in the Thousand Island district during the fire. Probably after more fish.

Harry Abbott is planning to show first run pictures at the Criterion in addition to his musical comedy programs when he re-opened that house Labor Day. Mr. Abbott was manager of the Garden theatre last season.

Louis Bernstein, one of the famous motion picture operators of Shea's Hippodrome, has another business. A little side-line. Wants to corner all the gelt in the world. Lou has opened a store and office fixture emporium at 107 Broadway. Ben Greenberg is his partner.

Lowell V. Calvert, field representative for Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., is in the Buffalo territory, calling on exhibitors. Lowell is a former exhibitor himself.

Threatening the couple with a revolver he compelled them to drive to the resident section of the city where he broke open the box, took the money and fled.

Isadore Cohen, for the past two years musical director of the Missouri theatre, Grand boulevard and Lucas avenue, St. Louis, has been transferred by the Famous Players-Lasky organization to the Rivoli theatre, New York City. The promotion for Mr. Cohen was the climax in a theatrical musical career that began in William Goldman's tent show at Prairie and St. Louis avenues, St. Louis, in 1909. He is regarded among the most successful of the younger conductors of the country.

Cohen is a native of St. Louis. For several seasons he was first violinist of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra. From Goldman's tent show he took charge of the orchestra of the New Lindell theatre when that house was erected by Goldman several years later.

When the Delmonte theatre was erected by the Famous Players Missouri Corporation in 1920 Cohen was transferred to that house. He had charge of that orchestra for a season, and in September, 1921, when the Missouri theatre was opened he was placed in charge there.

Cohen has been succeeded by Joseph Littau, who ranks among the foremost picture music directors. For five and a half years he directed the orchestras of the Rivoli and Rialto theatres in New York City. Previous to that he played the piano and organ in leading New York theatres and served as chorus master of the Boston Grand Opera Company.

He is an American, but much of his musical training was received abroad, notably in Berlin. He also directed orchestras in the German capital. He has composed the music setting for several important motion pictures.

One-way streets and restrictions on parking in the congested theatre and shopping section of Washington have been modified by the District Commissioners, at the request of local traffic committees, and exhibitors and merchants and their patronage. The Palace theatre will not be on a north bound street but, instead, on a south bound street. The usual thirty day notice period preceded the change. Considerable amusement circle interest was caused lately by the Baltimore city officials refusing further permission to Lieutenant James W. Dewey, war veteran and promoter of street carnivals, to run additional street carnivals as a benefit for the Maryland Academy of Sciences.

In a lengthy press statement, Dewey disclosed that injuries sustained by him in war time while flying over the Panama Canal had resulted in his retirement on a full compensation from the Veterans' Bureau. He does this work as a means of using his time and securing additional income. He was connected with John Garrity, Chicago Shubert representative, as business manager and is an experienced showman. Film circles, however, profess considerable satisfaction over this check to carnivals, even though a cameraman is the goat.

San Francisco Exchange and Exhibitor Notes

CHARLES KURTZHAM, formerly publicity manager for Warner Bros., Los Angeles, where he made a name for himself, has been appointetd publicity manager of the Rothchild theatres and has surrounded himself with some of the best known theatrical publicity men on the Coast. The publicity department is being entirely "made over," as Kurtzham put it, and the result of its new policy has already been noted by receipts.

The Tivoli theatre, which has been one of the most successful of the motion picture houses, closed its doors and will remain dark probably for several weeks. A new policy is being planned by the West Coast Theatres Company, which recently bought out the Turner & Dahnken interests. In this organization Sol Lesser, the film magnate whose brilliant, successful career began in this city only a few years ago, is associated with M. Gore and other motion-picture men of Los Angeles. Mr. Gore, president of the company, has been in San Francisco conferring with A. M. Bowles, general manager of the northern division, but no definite statement of the theatre's future is obtainable. One of the West Coast Company's prominent Los Angeles theatres, the Kinema, has been closed for remodeling, to be made an exclusive long-run feature house; and a similar policy may be adopted for the Tivoli. The lease of this theatre expires next year, however, and this may have some effect on the plans.

William J. Murphy, publicity representative of the Rothchild theatres, which include the California, Granada, Imperial and Portola, has been appointed to the post of house manager of the Granada theatre. This appointment comes in the form of a well deserved promotion, for Murphy has long been a familiar figure in local theatrical circles, having started his career in this city as an usher at the old Gaiety, which has been since renamed the Hippodrome.

West Coast Productions Company of Los Angeles is to establish a producing unit in San Francisco. Hilton H. Oppenheimer, Inc., the San Francisco firm which distributes Warner Brothers films throughout California, Arizona and Nevada and in the Hawaiian Islands, have closed a deal involving considerable money, whereby 12 new Joe Rock comedies, 12 new Sid Smith comedies and 12 Monty Banks comedies will be distributed in California, Arizona, Nevada and in the Hawaiian Islands by this organization.

Ready to tell the world emphatically that San Francisco has no superior among cities as an outdoor motion picture "location," Cecil B. DeMille and his company left for Los Angeles after breaking all known records by filming twenty-one scenes here in a single day. Perfection of conditions found in this city by DeMille resulted in reducing by three days the time allotted for "shooting" the San Francisco panoramic scenes for "The Ten Commandments," $2,000,000 production, said to be the most costly in the annals of filmdom.

A three-story building containing a theatre seating 2,000 people is to be erected on Park Street, Alameda, according to the announcement of L. Kaliski. The present Strand theatre and other buildings owned by Kaliski will be torn down to make room for the new structure. Tentative plans for this building, which it is estimated will cost $500,000, call for a class A construction, modern apartments and stores and one of the finest theatres in the bay cities. Construction work will begin the first of the year. The Rialto theatre, on Santa Clara Avenue, will be closed shortly for remodeling and redecorating and will take care of the patrons of the Strand theatre when that show house closes its doors.

That Saturday openings for programmes in moving picture or combination houses, in place of starting a week's show on Mondays, is a profitable detail has been shown in connection with the adoption of the plan with the Pantages theatre, Toronto, the Metropolitan theatre, Winnipeg and the Regent theatre, Ottawa. It is expected that various other picture theatres in Canadian cities will adopt the policy of starting shows on a Saturday because of the success of the experiment with the three theatres mentioned.

It is understood that the gross receipts at the Toronto Pantages have had an average increase of $1,500 weekly since the Saturday openings were made the rule some months ago.

The Family theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, is reopening Monday, September 3, after being dark for the past three months. The house, which is owned by Harry Brouse, also proprietor of the Imperial theatre, Ottawa, has been leased by J. M. Franklin of Halifax, N. S., and St. John, N. B., and the theatre is being re-named the "Franklin Theatre." The theatre is now in process of rejuvenation from top to bottom. A combination policy of pictures and vaudeville has been adopted for the theatre.

Jake Berman, a veteran exchangeman in the Canadian field, has been appointed special sales representative of the United Artists Corporation with headquarters at Toronto by R. K. Evans, general manager of United exchanges in Canada.

Clair Hague of Toronto, general manager of Universal Films, is making a coast-to-coast tour of the Canadian Universal offices from St. John to Vancouver, B. C.

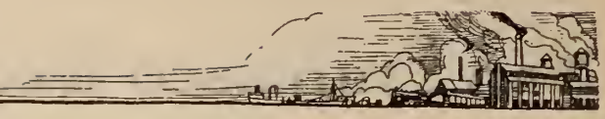
The Independent Amusement Company, Montreal, operating a chain of picture theatres in that city, has taken over the Family theatre, Montreal.

Henri Jodoin, formerly manager of the Strand theatre, Montreal, is now operating the Empire theatre at La Tuque, Quebec.

Ben Kauffman of Montreal has transferred his activities from the Famous-Lasky Film Service to the Montreal office of Goldwyn. Ed Southgate has been appointed Montreal manager for Famous-Lasky.

Henry Morton, prominent as an exhibitor of Winnipeg, Manitoba, has purchased the Park theatre, Osborne street, near River Park. The Park is scheduled to open again toward the end of August.

Abe Case has been appointed manager of the Winnipeg branch of the Canadian National Film Company which was opened not long ago by Harry Allen in behalf of the Allen interests. Miss Rebecca Rusoff, formerly secretary to the manager of the late Allen theatre, Winnipeg, was temporarily in charge of this exchange and she remains on the office staff of the branch.



George Jeffries, representing the Al Lichtman productions, Toronto, is on a business tour of the Canadian West. He has already visited Winnipeg.

Miss Bessie Selig, of Toronto, for some time the cashier and bookkeeper of the Toronto office of United Artists Corporation, is to be married shortly to Mr. David Davis, a Montreal business man, according to announcement of engagement published at Toronto. Miss Selig is well known among exhibitors of Ontario.

G. C. Blumenthal of Educational Film recently visited the Educational offices in Montreal and Toronto on his way back to California from a conference of Educational officials at New York.

Albany

IN the most important deal in picture theatre circles in this part of the state in many a week, R. V. Erk, owner of the Big Ben and other houses in Ilion, acquired the Barcli in Schenectady, N. Y., the past week. While the consideration has not been made public, the deal will run far into the thousands. The house is a downtown one and only a few years old, having been built by John J. Walker, who has operated the house up until the present time. The house seats about 1,200 and ranks as one of the leading theatres in the city. It is understood that Mr. Walker will devote his energies to some other line of work.

Uly Hill, managing director of the Mark Strand in Albany and the Troy in Troy, has just returned from a trip to New York City.

More exhibitors were to be seen along Albany's Film Row the past week than at any time since spring. The majority were booking up their fall features. Among the visitors was William Smalley, who owns a considerable string of houses already, and who announced last week that he will add two others within the near future. Mr. Smalley refused to divulge the location of the two new ones.

The week also brought to town Bill Benton of Saratoga, who is paying mre attention to his theatre than to the races; Louis Schine of Gloversville, owner of a long string of houses and who proclaimed that business was running 20 per cent ahead of last summer; William Shirley of Schenectady who said that everything was going fine in the Electric City despite the street car strike which is still in existence.

The Albany F. I. L. M. club at its last meeting adopted resolutions on the death of President Harding.

There is one man in New York State who has a wonderful memory for faces. He is "Doc" Wilson, managing director of the Robbins' theatres in Watertown. The other day a certain person walked in Mr. Wilson's office, a person whom the said Mr. Wilson had met but once in New York City and six years ago at that. Mr. Wilson took one look at the person, walked over to him and shaking his hand, greeted him with a "Hello" that was coupled with the man's name. It might be said also that Mr. Wilson is a good mixer and isn't forgetting to meet the newspapermen of Watertown each day, always handing out a little information that makes good reading and helps advertise the house.

According to all reports, the State theatre in Schenectady, N. Y., which went into the hands of a receiver after the Spiegel blowup, is now making money. Double features prevail a good part of the time and the house is again drawing the crowds.

Shuberts' new theatre in Albany, N. Y., will open within the next few weeks and will offer stiff competition to the motion picture theatres. Aside from Proctor's Grand and stock at the Hall, the movies have been having things pretty near their own way in the Capitol city for some time past. The new house will be given over to vaudeville and road shows.

There is one exhibitor in Albany who can be found any day in August at the race track in Saratoga. His name is Sam Suckno, well known throughout the state. There is a whisper going the rounds that Mr. Suckno is breaking more than ordinarily well in picking the winners.

The Rialto of Schenectady, which was closed for some time, has reopened. The owner of the house, Abe Stone, finding that the street car strike was injuring his business, decided to even up matters a bit and operated a jitney for several weeks and made money at it.

Edward Hochstein is the new owner of the Star in Hudson, N. Y., a house which has been operated for some time past by Julius Thompson.

The management of the Astor in Troy, N. Y., is advertising these days that the theatre may be leased.

Roland G. McCurdy, who handles the exploitation for Universal from Albany to Buffalo, is in the Capitol city this week getting everything in readiness for a smashing big week soon at the Leland, when "Merry-Go-Round" will be shown. Incidentally Universal is doing a nice bit of billboard advertising around Albany in connection with the early showing of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" in New York City.

Frank S. Hopkins, manager of the Universal exchange in Albany, made a short trip to the home office in New York the past week.

The Bijou in Troy goes back to a program of seven days a week on August 27. During the summer the house has been operating four days a week. Gardner Hall in Troy still remains closed and no word comes from Armstrong and Miller relative to its re-opening. The Griswold, also a Troy house, and owned by Ben Apple, re-opened a week or so ago.

Albany sees little these days of its former well-known townsman and theatre owner, George Roberts. Since William Bernstein acquired additional houses in various parts of the state, Mr. Roberts, general manager of the string, spends little time in Albany. He landed in town last Friday but left almost at once on a three weeks' trip. He did tarry long enough, however, to report that business was fine.

The Grand in Watervliet will re-open on September 3 with a full schedule for the fall.

Owing to increased business, the Universal has added Miss Lillian McNamara to its office force in Albany.

Des Moines

F. L. DAVIE, manager of the Des Moines Universal exchange, because of consistent good work last year, copped the first prize in the central western division. This is one of two prizes won by this exchange in the history of the office. It is also significant to note that the cup won by the exchange was awarded since Mr. Davie's arrival at this office.

In spite of the fact that A. W. Kahn, manager of Educational's Des Moines exchange, frowns upon publicity for himself, word should be spoken about the cards which Mr. Kahn is sending out to the exhibitors in the territory. "Class" is Mr. Kahn's watchword.

Mr. Young, manager of the F. B. O. exchange, was in a wreck at Cedar Rapids and slightly injured when his car overturned. Mr. Young and R. H. Fairchild, salesman for F. B. O., drove to Chicago the same week.

The F. B. O. staff is going to "look pretty" and pose with the cup which they won in the H. M. Berman Testimonial Jubilee contest. The cup stands a couple of feet high and is now on exhibition from a point of vantage at the exchange office.

Miss Menzie, cashier for Famous Players, was called out of town by the illness of her sister. She left last Thursday night for her sister's home in Missouri. Frank Shipley, who about a month ago became assistant cashier for the Des Moines exchange, coming from a position in the state banking department at the state house, is getting a workout at swinging his work and Miss Menzie's too.

Miss Harris, postal clerk for Pathe, is due for duty this week. She has been on a vacation trip to parts unknown.

Jimmy McGivern, formerly of Universal and F. B. O., has cast his lot with Educational Pictures and will cover the Iowa territory out of Des Moines.

The new film exchange building will not be ready for occupancy until the first of September. This building, which three of four of the film exchanges will move into, is all of stone and cement and steel and made as fireproof as possible.

The Famous Players staff are up on their toes for the Paramount week the first of September. Out of the 36 exchanges contesting for sales increase, the Des Moines branch is now ranking second and are right in line to step up.

A. W. Nicholls, manager of the Famous Players exchange, is expecting James Fidler, personal representative of William De Mille, in Des Moines this week.

A. J. Huseman, booker for Educational, is spending his two weeks' vacation amidst the Minnesota lakes, where, from all reports, he is landing some big ones, while Frank Crawford, salesman for Famous Players, just returned from a week in Indianapolis.

Jess Day, manager of the Palace and the Garden theatres, Des Moines, drove to St. Louis on his vacation trip. He returned after two weeks on Saturday and reported that he had come from Marshalltown that afternoon. He's evidently been just about running the wheels off of his car. During Mr. Day's absence the well trained staffs of the two theatres managed themselves.

S. S. Schwarz of the A. H. Blank Enterprises returned last Friday from his vacation trip to the lakes of northeastern Wisconsin. He was accompanied by T. R. Frazer, cashier for First National. Both are brown as berries and report that they had a wonderful time.

C. B. Hudson of the Masonic theatre at What Cheer was this week attending the American Legion convention at Mason City.

Bert St. John of the Garden theatre at Sigourney, has a sideline. He was formerly a player in a baseball league and one of the Creston, Ia., stars of the diamond. Last week he played baseball in Mason City.

David McElhinney is the new salesman for F. B. O. He has been for the past couple of years representing Pathe in Iowa. He just returned from a fruitful trip into northern Iowa.

"Dot" Pike of the F. B. O. exchange, left on her vacation Saturday. She is planning to make Payton, Ia., her headquarters.

Some sport news. Paul Groves, lightweight champion of F. B. O., received the decision over an unknown combatant at a one-round go at Lighthouse Inn last week. Groves thus explains his black eye.

William Finter, salesman in the southwest territory for Universal, has purchased a new Buick coupe, and is having a hard time keeping the girls out.

Esther and Leona Wilhelmi, Jennie Wood, Mildred Marchant and Helen Morris are the new ushers at the Strand theatre, Des Moines, which is replacing colored girls with white girls. Rhea McDonald is the new head usher.

V. G. Ballman will take possession Sept. 1, of the Postville theatre, Postville, Ia. The former owner was A. C. Schultz.

Mr. White of Muscatine had purchased the Crane theatre there. He purchased the theatre from Ludy Bostern and takes possession immediately.

The Olympic theatre at Clinton has changed hands. P. D. Allman, owner of the Strand and Family at Clinton, purchased the house from Scolaro Bros. Cleve Adams, assistant general sales manager for the central western division, Universal, was in Des Moines several days this week.

Bryant Washburn Coming To Select Plays

The names of the three completed productions are "Mine To Keep," "The Love Trap" and "Other Men's Daughters." In all three features Mabel Forrest was the female lead and Wheeler Oakman with an excellent cast offer the support. "The Love Trap" was directed by John Ince and the other two by Ben Wilson.

Hays in Tribute to "Loyal Lives"

Ex Postmaster General Commends Production Devoted to Life of Mailman

WILL HAYS has added his glowing tribute to the many already given the Whitman Bennett production, "Loyal Lives," depicting the lives and adventures of the United States mailman. Mr. Hays, ex-Postmaster General, is well qualified to attest to the authenticity and value of the production.

His letter in part to Mr. Bennett follows:

"I was delighted with 'Loyal Lives.' I liked it as a picture and I was especially interested in the subject matter.

"The postal establishment of the United States is incomparably the biggest distinctive business in the world—and it comes nearer to the innermost interests of a greater number of men and women than any other institution on earth. No private business, however widespread, touches so many lives so often or so sharply; no church reaches into so many souls, flutters so many pulses, has so many human beings dependent on its ministrations.

"The postal service is the heart pumping the blood through the veins and arterics of our national life. It makes a thousand scattered communities into a state; it makes forty-eight scattered states into a nation. Through the printed matter it carries it brings the joys, the sorrows, the crimes and the achievements, the political, social, economic and religious theories and experiences of the whole people before each minute portion of it.

"You quote in the title the inscription on the New York post office: 'Neither snow nor rain nor heat nor gloom of night stays these couriers from the swift completion of their appointed rounds.'

"We all know that that is literally true. Whatever the heat or the cold or the storm the mail carrier goes out into it with his bag slung on his shoulder.

"The mailcarriers are the ambassadors of Uncle Sam to the homes of America. The postal employes are, in a high sense, the servants of the republic. They make the functioning of a democracy possible.

"The picture will do great good."

"Drifting" Premiere at Capitol

Universal Thriller Is Well Received by Reviewers and Public in New York

"DRIFTING," Priscilla Dean's last Jewel production, had its premiere showing this week in the Capitol theatre, New York City, where it played to excellent business.

"Drifting" is a Tod Browning production, adapted by Browning from John Colton's stage success, of the same name, produced on Broadway a season or so ago with Alice Brady in the leading role.

"Drifting" is the second big Universal picture to be presented to the public for the 1923-1924 season. "Merry Go Round" was the first, and since its premiere, has played in four Times Square houses, as well as in other big New York motion picture theatres.

Concerning "Drifting," the reviewer for the New York Times had the following to say:

"The Chinese atmosphere of 'Drifting' has been unusually well carried out, and although the story has a somewhat abrupt termination, it is nevertheless interesting and in spots quite thrilling. Priscilla Dean and Wallace Beery are capital in their respective parts."

The reviewer of the New York Journal characterized the picture as "dramatic, heart-ending and thrilling." "All the acting is clever and the photography excellent," he continues. "There are two great fights. Priscilla Dean has the leading role. Her acting won high praise."

The New York Evening Mail, speaking of Miss Dean's work, says: "Priscilla Dean makes the intrepid Cassie a vivid and volcanic figure and Matt Moore is suave and immaculate." Similar praise of Miss Dean's work was voiced by the Evening Telegram in the following words:

"The role of Cassie Cook, a friendless white girl engaged in the opium traffic of China, offers a range of dramatic possibilities suited to the dramatic talents of Miss Dean."

"Her Temporary Husband" Serial Started

Long Beach, Cal., has been chosen as the site for the exterior scenes for "Her Temporary Husband," a screen version of Edward Paulton's stage farce, which went into production this week for First National, under the direction of John McDermott. The big four in the cast of this farce are to be Sidney Chaplin, Owen Moore, Sylvia Breamer and Tully Marshall.

School Tieup Is Planned for "Othello"

A big school tie-up campaign is being arranged by the Export & Import Film Company in connection with the release this Fall of their highly praised Shakespearean production, "Othello."

'Mothers-in-Law' Day Proposed

AL LICHTMAN, visiting in Cincinnati last week, gave out a statement advocating a national "Mothers-in-Law Day." The Cincinnati papers saw some real human interest material in this and played it up big. The following day Mr. Lichtman arranged for a special trade showing on the latest Preferred Picture, "Mothers-in-Law."

Blanche Sweet as "Anna Christie" Approved

Motion picture theatre owners throughout the country in telegrams to Thomas H. Ince following his engagement of Blanche Sweet for the role of "Anna Christie," bear out the selection of Miss Sweet for this part, made by prominent photoplay critics.

Telegrams from Rowland Clarke Theatres, comprising a large chain of theatres in Pittsburgh, Willard Patterson, conceded to be one of the greatest showman in the south, Jules E. Mastbaum, President of the Stanley Company, one of the largest theatre chains in the world, and other leading exhibitors have enthusiastically endorsed the selection of Miss Sweet for "Anna Christie."

Elaborate Settings For Constance Binney

Opening with a typical Broadway cabaret de luxe, with the fashionable Strut Inn roadhouse cabaret setting about the third reel and the Cafe Grotesque with its "Mirror Mosaic" splendor toward the end of the picture, C. C. Burr's initial Constance Binney feature is said to be a thoroughly elaborate production.

The Broadway cabaret setting is the scene of the heroine's first taste of gay night life amid the lights and jazz bands. Silk Hat Harry's Clef Club Orchestra furnished the music and also did humorous bits of by-play before the camera.

"Green Goddess" Stage Crew See Picture

It was an audience of experts which saw "The Green Goddess" at the Sam H. Harris theatre Monday afternoon, for it included the entire staff of the Booth theatre, who handled the play during the two years in which George Arliss presented it at that house. Having handled it so often on the stage, they were eager to see it on the screen, and they were all there, from Manager Shaw down to the doorman. Several of them said the picture was "even better than the play."

Truart Makes Chili Argentine Sale

M. H. HOFFMAN, vice-president and general manager of Truart Film Corporation, consummated a sale with Max Glucksman for "The Empty Cradle" featuring Mary Alden and Harry Morey, adapted from Leota Morgan's novel "Cheating Wives" and the first Elaine Hammerstein production, "Broadway Gold." Special Music Score for "Yesterday's Wife"

A special synchromized music synopsis has been completed for "Yesterday's Wife," the new C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation—Columbia Picture featuring Irene Rich, Eileen Percy, with a distinguished cast.

James C. Bradford, who prepared the music score for this feature, says that the theme of the picture offers unusually fine opportunities for the synchronization of a wealth of melody with the film, as well as a great variety of tempo and phrasing. The cutting and editing and timing of the picture has had much to do with the opportunity for smoothness in the music score, he says.

First Richard Talmadge Feature Due Soon

Carlos Productions, which is producing Richard Talmadge's features for Truart release, the first of which is "East Freight," advises that this production is rapidly nearing completion and that it will probably be delivered in New York by the first of September.

Chicago Approves Whaling Picture

"Down To The Sea In Ships" Repeats New York Popularity at Roosevelt

ACCORDING to reports from Chicago, "Down to the Sea in Ships" is proving as popular at the Balaban and Katz Roosevelt theatre there as it did at the three months run at the Cameo theatre in New York City. The Hodkinson offices have received word from Chicago that capacity audiences have been the rule for the past four weeks despite extremely adverse weather conditions.

The showing in Chicago was preceded by an intensive advertising and publicity campaign. Billboards in some of the best sections of Chicago announced the appearance of this production at the Roosevelt theatre. Unusual tie-ups with some of Chicago's evening newspapers also gave front page publicity to "Down to the Sea in Ships."

Newspaper critics in Chicago were lavish in their praise regarding this production. Mae Tinee in the Chicago Tribune says, "If you like the wind in your face, a race with adventure, things that are clean cut, out of doors, and wholesome—why, 'Down to the Sea in Ships' is the ticket for you."

Carl Sandburg of the Chicago News admits that "Down to the Sea in Ships" is one of those pictures which shows that the movies are coming stronger.

The Chicago Post goes so far as to say that "Down to the Sea in Ships" should bring the people down to the Roosevelt theatre in droves, while Polly Wood, in the Chicago Herald, states that "Down to the Sea in Ships" will give you a real thrill. In it are some of the most exciting sea episodes I ever hope to witness. Bob Reel, in the Chicago Evening American, refers to it as "A hit." The Chicago Journal shows its appreciation of the film in these words, "The showing of 'Down to the Sea in Ships' at the Roosevelt theatre is in a class by itself."

Campaign on "Michael O'Halloran"

Intensive Bookstore and Exploitation Drive Is Under Way on Feature

ON August 17 the wheels of one of the most intensive bookstore and motion picture exploitation campaigns started to turn on Gene Stratton-Porter's "Michael O'Halloran," produced by Mrs. Porter from her own book of the same name for distribution through the W. W. Hodkinson corporation.

Aside from this date being this universally loved authoress's birthday, it will also mark the first appearance of Gene Stratton-Porter's new book "The White Flag," released in the original edition by Doubleday, Page & Co. On the same date Grosset & Dunlap will publish a reprinted edition of Gene Stratton-Porter's book "Her Father's Daughter" and also a popular photoplay edition of "Michael O'Holloran."

Both of the above publishers have planned an extensive campaign in conjunction with the advertising and publicity department of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, which comprises a comprehensive tie-up between bookstores and exhibitors in every section of the United States.

Owing to the exceptional popularity of Gene Stratton-Porter's novels it is felt by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation that "Michael O'Halloran" will prove to be one of the biggest attractions offered the exhibitor for some time.

It is to be Miss Hammerstein's next starring vehicle. The actress has already left New York and will arrive in Los Angeles within a few days.

Aronson Closes Deal for Truart Product

While on his tour through the East and Middle West, Alexander S. Aronson, general sales manager for Truart Film Corporation, stopped off at Pittsburgh long enough to negotiate the Truart franchise with Harry Lande, of the Lande Film Company. The territory covered by the franchise is Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia and includes the following productions already completed as well as those forthcoming under the Truart banner: "Women Men Marry," an Edward Dillon production; "The Empty Cradle," with Mary Alden and Harry T. Morey, the Elaine Hammerstein productions, commencing with "Broadway Gold," and "The Drums of Jeopardy," by Harold MacGrath.

Mr. Aronson also closed for the territory of Ohio and Kentucky with Mr. Lande and the Lande Film Distributing Company, which has offices in Cleveland and Cincinnati.

The book is illustrated with full page photographs taken from production stills of the feature.

The adaptation of the story for screen use was made by Miss Baird herself.

"To those who have read the book the scenes of the film will be familiar," said the Providence News, "and to those who have never had the opportunity to read this clever work from Mr. Vance's pen the story will

"Banks of Wabash" as Fund Raiser

Production Is Offered for Memorial Aid to Famous Indiana Composer

COMMODORE J. STUART BLACKTON, in a letter to Governor Warren T. McCray, of Indiana, has placed at the disposal of the Paul Dresser Memorial Association, Inc., of Terre Haute, of which the governor is an ex-official member of the executive committee, his coming Blackton production "On The Banks of The Wabash" to be used at a benefit performance to raise funds to carry on the work of erecting a fitting memorial to the beloved Indiana composer.

The Blackton Production, which was inspired by Paul Dresser's famous song, will be released by Vitagraph and is one of the twenty-six specials which Albert E. Smith, president, announced for the 1923-24 season. The story is laid in a little town along the banks of the Wabash River, in the very neighborhood where Dresser lived in his boyhood. It is said to be a gripping heart interest story with a tremendous climax.

In his letter to Governor McCray, Mr. Blackton recalled that he himself was one of Dresser's friends when the song writer lived in New York City, and that he had approached the translating of Dresser's sentiment to the screen with reverence because of his affection for the Indiana writer.

The Paul Dresser Memorial Association, Inc., has its headquarters in Terre Haute and Mique O'Brien, once a dramatic writer in New York, now the dramatic editor of the Tribune in that city, is the secretary of the executive committee. Mr. Blackton tendered the use of "On The Banks of The Wabash" directly to Secretary O'Brien as well as to Governor McCray.

Mary Carr, James Morrison, Burr McIntosh, Lumsden Hare, Mary MacLaren, Madge Evans, George Neville, Harry and Dick Lee, Ed Roseman, Marcia Harris and Charles Stuart Blackton are among the leading players.

It is likely that the benefit performance for the fund to erect the memorial will be given in Indianapolis and that Governor McCray and his staff will attend.

Two Fox Premieres Due in New York

"If Winter Comes" and "Silent Command" Scheduled For September 2 and 3

TWO thousand members of New York's army of social and professional celebrities have been extended invitations to the New York openings of the first two William Fox special productions to reach Broadway this season.

"The Silent Command," a J. Gordon Edwards production written by Rufus King and produced in Washington, New York and at the Panama Canal, will enjoy its world premiere at the Central theatre, Sunday evening, September 2nd.

"If Winter Comes," a screen version of A. S. M. Hutchinson's famous novel, directed by Harry Millarde, will have its first exhibition in the East, at the Times Square theatre, on Monday evening, September 3rd.

Both pictures are listed on the array of twenty-five special features which Fox Film Corporation recently announced in an unprecedented 72-page inset in national trade publications. The engagements are for indefinite periods and it is expected will be from three to six months.

"If Winter Comes," which took one year in the making both in England and the United States, has been running since July 15th at the Columbia theatre, San Francisco, and playing to capacity houses at each performance. The western seaport's newspapers were unanimous in their unstinted acclamation of the Fox photoplay and several went as far as defining "If Winter Comes" as the greatest film of the decade.

Many of the screen's most popular stars will be numbered in the large audience that is expected to attend both openings.

While no personal appearances are scheduled the majority of the members of both casts will be present, according to the Fox announcement.

Ena Gregory, young film actress, has completed her work in Emmett Flynn's "In the Palace of the King," the period spectacle Flynn is directing for the Goldwyn studios. Miss Gregory played the Queen of Spain. She was declared to have been the exact type needed for the part, as described by F. Marion Crawford, author of the book.

Miss Gregory played opposite Sam de Grasse, as the tyrannical King Philip II. Blanche Sweet and Edmund Lowe appear in the leading roles.

Jeanne de Balzac Easy Hollywood Winner

IN Hollywood less than a month, Jeanne de Balzac, a great-grand-niece of Honore de Balzac, famous French author, already has played parts in two pictures. She is appearing as a Castilian countess in Emmett Flynn's Spanish spectacle, "In the Palace of the King." She also had a role in George D. Baker's production of "The Magic Skin," taken from the fantastic story by de Balzac, her great-grand-uncle.

Gold Seekers' Perils in "Pioneer Trails"

The perils of the gold seekers of '49 is vividly depicted in one of the most thrilling and sensational scenes in "Pioneer Trails," the next David Smith production on the Vitagraph list of twenty-six specials for 1923-24 recently announced by Albert E. Smith, president.

The long train of landships of the prairie carrying three hundred men, women and children is attacked by Indians. The location used for this thrilling fight is one of the most beautiful western scenes ever shot by a motion picture camera.

David Smith staged this tremendous action from a historic episode in which an entire wagon train was annihilated. More than a thousand persons were carried by truck from Hollywood to the location, two hundred miles from the studio.

Griffith And Chaplin Win British Fan Votes

D. W. Griffith and Charles Chaplin are the favorites of the British film-going public, according to cable reports of a popularity contest completed recently by the Sunday Pictorial, London.

"Way Down East" was declared the most popular picture by the voting which was carried on throughout the British Isles. "Orphans of the Storm" was named the second most popular, while the film-goers selected Charles Chaplin's "The Kid" as the third.

"Orphans of the Storm" has received the highest honors ever given to a motion picture, having been declared the best picture of last year through a vote of the motion picture throughout the country.

The voting in the British Isles contest included every important American picture which has been shown in this country prior to March, it is said.

"Green Goddess" Acclaimed in N. Y.

Distinctive Is Conducting Extensive Campaign for Showing in New York

BILLBOARDS, a heavy schedule of daily newspaper advertising, one sheet posters in elevated and subway stations, car cards throughout the metropolitan district, window displays and a sniping campaign covering the principal boroughs—that's the way in which Distinctive Pictures Corporation is putting across "The Green Goddess," its feature starring George Arliss now running at the Sam H. Harris theatre in New York City.

The twenty-four sheet stands for "The Green Goddess" are generally acknowledged among the most artistic and powerfully attractive sheets ever created for the exploitation of a motion picture. The design is by Eugene Savage, noted here and abroad for his poster printings and illustrations.

One-sheet posters—one set pictorial and one set with New York newspaper comment—are distributed throughout the subway and elevated lines of Manhattan, the Bronx and Brooklyn, and in the Hudson Tubes and New Haven railroad. Car cards are on every line in Manhattan, the Bronx, Staten Island, Long Island, the Long Island railroad and the West Shore railroad.

Two of the most effective window displays were obtained from Aeolian Hall which has placed in its 42nd street window a six-foot colored enlargement of a scene from "The Green Goddess" with a panel on either side, one advertising the Vocalion records used in the scene and the other announcing the fact that "The Green Goddess" is now playing at the Sam H. Harris theatre. This is the first step in a national tie-up between the Vocalion company and "The Green Goddess" which will be available for all exhibitors.

Branham Sees Filming Of "Scaramouche"

One of the most interested spectators at the filming of the thrilling mob scenes for Rex Ingram's Metro production of "Scaramouche" recently was Charles S. Branham, Director of Theatres for the Famous Players Theatres of Canada, one of the largest theatre circuits in the world.

Although Mr. Branham has been connected with the exhibiting end of the industry for nearly fifteen years, his recent trip offered him his first opportunity of visiting a motion picture studio.

The "Scaramouche" scenes which Mr. Branham witnessed in the filming depicted the march of the revolutionary mob through the streets of Paris, the birth of "The Marseillaise" and the sacking of the homes of aristocrats by the bloodthirsty terrorists.

Crosland Progressing on "Three Weeks"

Alan Crosland is making rapid progress on the preliminary preparation for filming Elinor Glyn's "Three Weeks." Cedric Gibbons, Goldwyn art director, has designed some very impressionistic sets for this picture and also some very unusual gowns which will be worn by Aileen Pringle as the Queen. Oscar Shaw Shows Wallop in "Cain and Mabel"

Oscar Shaw, formerly leading man in "Good Morning, Dearie" and numerous other Broadway musical successes and now making his motion picture debut in "Cain and Mabel," an H. C. Witwer story, which E. Mason Hopper is directing for Cosmopolitan, carries more of a wallop than probably he himself ever realized. In the picture Shaw impersonates the hero of the story, a boxer. Prior to a championship bout in which he engages, Shaw is revealed in various scenes in his training quarters.

These scenes were filmed in Madison Square Garden and one of the sparring partners of Shaw engaged for the film was Jack Francis. The latter is a promising pugilist. During an interim between the making of scenes, Walter Futter, film editor at Cosmopolitan, got Francis aside and suggested that the latter "take" Shaw's hardest punch for an extra check.

The fighter agreed and when the filming of the scene was resumed invited Shaw to cut loose. The actor suited the action to the word, landed a hard right across to Francis' jaw, with the result that the professional dropped for a count.

Mabel Normand Approves "Extra Girl" Role

Since starting production on "The Extra Girl," the new Mack Sennett super-feature which will be distributed by Associated Exhibitors, Mabel Normand, the star, has maintained that it is one of the most interesting stories she has ever done. With F. Richard Jones, production manager of the company, who is again directing Miss Normand, she is bending every effort to make "The Extra Girl" the greatest photoplay of her career.

Miss Normand says: "I am truly in love with this part. It is a new character to me and vivid in the extreme. While at times it is most vivacious, it never strays far from the sympathetic. It is the part I most love to play, as it gives me opportunity to portray every emotion, and I am confident it is the type that will greatly appeal to the public."

Huge Campaign for "Scaramouche"

Floats Will Parade Principal Thoroughfares In All Leading Cities

"SCARAMOUCHE," Rex Ingram's gigantic production of Rafael Sabatini's famous novel, to be released by Metro, will have the benefit of one of the most far reaching and extensive advertising and exploitation campaigns ever put over on a picture.

For the past several weeks the Metro publicity forces have been hammering home the title, "Scaramouche," in every conceivable way. Because of this the name of this massive production is brought to the mind of all motion picture fans and a desire to see the production is created.

One of the latest tie-ups to be announced on "Scaramouche" is the big advertising campaign being arranged by Grossett and Dunlap, publishers of the photoplay edition of the book. The principal feature of this publicity will be a large float, a huge representation of the book with pages open. From out these pages will step players costumed as the principal characters in this story of the French Revolution. Messrs. Grossett and Dunlap will have one of these floats in every city of the country, parading up and down the main thoroughfares.

In addition to this float, which is certain to attract unusual attention there will be tie-ups with book and department stores where special displays of the novel with star photographs and scene stills will be prominently used.

The stage production of "Scaramouche," to be presented this season by Charles L. Wagner, will also be of decided value in bringing the title before the public.

So that exhibitors will be in a position to put over big local campaigns on "Scaramouche" the Metro exploitation department is preparing a vast amount of original and novel ideas. Novelties, stunts, tie-ups, special newspaper stories, contests, etc., will be included with expertly prepared publicity material, cuts, mats, advertisements, posters, hangers, lobby displays, slides, trailers and everything else that could possibly be used in connection with the exploitation of this elaborate production.

Victor Fisher Outlines New Policies

General Manager Tells Plans of Newly Organized Mammoth Pictures Corp.

ONE of the most important events of the new season in independent film circles was the formation of the new Mammoth Pictures Corporation, which will specialize in the distribution and sales of superlative box office attractions upon a carefully worked out and equitable franchise plan.

Victor B. Fisher who has for years been a prominent factor in the producing and distributing fields is vice-president and general manager of the new organization.

Simultaneously with the opening of the New York offices of the Mammoth Pictures Corporation, Mr. Fisher said, "The policy of the Mammoth Pictures Corporation is the result of an intensive investigation extending over several months, of the needs of the American exhibitor and exchangemen.

"We have found," continued Mr. Fisher, "that the countrywide demand is for pictures of high merit, produced upon a lavish scale and upon the principle of 'dollar on the screen for dollar spent in the studio.' The majority of buyers and exhibitors favored productions based upon a widely read novel or successful stage play.

"Our first production fulfills this demand in every particular. The initial offering of the Mammoth Pictures Corporation is a sumptuously mounted production based upon George Gibbs novel "Youth Triumphant" which for months ran as the featured serial in the Green Book Magazine. Since that time it has gone through five editions in book form.

"It is with this exclusive type of production that we enter the field.

"Our ample resources insure continuous operations and the past business history of the directing heads of the Mammoth organization is proof that a fair and square deal will be received by all who, in the near future will be associated with us in our activities."

The Mammoth Pictures Corporation will handle the entire output of the studios of the Fisher Productions on the Coast. This contract calls for seven super pictures in addition to the production already made based upon George Gibbs novel "Youth Triumphant." A definite title for this offering has not as yet been determined.

Baker Centennial Is Set for Goldwyn Lot

With an even hundred productions to his credit George D. Baker, dean of picture directors, is to be signally honored at a George D. Baker Centennial to be celebrated on the Goldwyn lot with the final cutting of Balzac's "The Magic Skin."

After many years on the stage as an actor, director, manager and star George D. Baker was drafted into motion picture work to direct John Bunny and Flora Finch for Vitagraph in the old one-reel days.

In checking over his record of picture making Baker discovered that "The Magic Skin" was his hundredth contribution to the silver sheet and commented on the fact to his associates. Members of his cast have decided to make the event a memorable one so when "The Magic Skin" is shorn of its final 12 inches of extra footage, a golden jubilee will take place on the Goldwyn lot at Culver City, California, with George D. Baker as guest of honor.

Mae Murray in Concert for L. A. Children

Mae Murray, who is appearing before the camera in her new Metro picture, "Fashion Row," recently gave a free afternoon concert in the Hollywood Bowl for 12,000 youngsters from Los Angeles.

Miss Murray not only took off time from her production to arrange and finance this concert, but she also had the children from every charitable institution in Los Angeles as her guests, providing transportation for them as well. Miss Murray insists that the ovation she received when she addressed the thousands of smiling youngsters more than repaid her for her efforts.

"Fashion Row," written by Sada Cowan and Howard Higgins, is a Robert Z. Leonard presentation through Metro, sponsored by Tiffany Productions, of which Mr. Leonard is director general and M. H. Hoffman general manager.

Pauline Garon, who is playing the leading role in the new C. B. C. feature, "Forgive and Forget."

Sada Cowan Joins Forces With Howard Higgin

Upon the completion of her original story, "Fashion Row," and the adaptation of it, which went into production last week at the Goldwyn studios Los Angeles, with Robert Z. Leonard directing and Mae Murray starring, it was announced that Sada Cowan had joined forces with Howard Higgin to collaborate on originals and scripts.

Miss Cowan is recognized as one of the ablest of screen writers. Five years ago she signed with Famous Players-Lasky, and has two score noted scripts to her credit. Her most recent Paramount productions, now being shown throughout the country are "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife," with Gloria Swanson, and "The Silent Partner," with Leatrice Joy. She recently titled "Brass" for Warner Brothers, and "Thundering Dawn" for Harrt Garson.

Howard Higgin has for the past seven years been art director for, and co-director with, Cecil B. DeMille.

F. B. O. Increases Season's Output

Additional Features Added to Schedule Will Bring Total to Over Fifty

HARDLY one year and a half old, the Film Booking Offices announces this week that they will release over fifty feature length pictures for the coming season of 1923-24 instead of thirty productions as originally announced following their sales meeting last month. In addition to the enlargement of their product they are also augmenting their sales facilities to handle the additional output.

The increase of F. B. O. distribution plans follows on the heels of an announcement made by the Carl Anderson Pictures Corporation that the distribution of their product will be handled by the Film Booking Offices. This company will release eighteen productions for the coming season. In addition to this the F. B. O. have taken on the distribution of some seven or eight independently made pictures which they have added to the thirty productions they will produce over the season. These thirty will be made by the F. B. O. at the P. A. studios in Los Angeles and do not include a list of some 30 two-reel subjects.

In addition to the output of the Anderson Company and the pictures made at the F. B. O. studios there will also be handled several additional independent productions which are to include four pictures made annually by Richard Thomas. His first picture is entitled "The Silent Accuser" which is already in the organization and which it is planned to give an early release.

Plans are in preparation to enlarge all departments of the Film Booking Offices to facilitate the handling of the increased product. The publicity and home office distributing departments will be enlarged both in floor space and in employees.

The expansion of the sales and distributing force scattered over the F. B. O. exchanges throughout the country will begin immediately on the return of J. I. Schnitzer, vice-president and general manager of the Film Booking Offices. He has been on a month's inspection of the studios. During his stay in California plans were made to handle the increased production of the studios..

The enlargement of the sales department will be under the direct supervision of H. M. Berman, general manager of exchanges, who plans to increase the sales efficiency over fifty per cent over its present standard.

In the way of publicity the company plans to have an exploitation expert in each and every exchange who will be under the direction of Nat. G. Rothstein in the home office.

Release Date Set for "Going Up"

Expert Testimony Commends Excellence of Associated Exhibitors Feature

"GOING UP," first of Douglas MacLean's independent productions for Associated Exhibitors, has been set for release September 30, according to an announcement made this week by J. S. Woody, general manager of Associated.

Direct word-of-mouth and over-the-signature testimony to the excellence of the production keeps pouring in on Mr. MacLean and his staff, as it has been doing ever since the showing which was given at the Writers' Club, in Hollywood, a few weeks ago.

"I think you have flown so high in 'Going Up' that no one can ever reach you," Josephine Quirk of the Lasky scenario department wired to the star.

"If all pictures were like this Will H. Hays and I both would be out of jobs," declared Thomas H. Patton, former postmaster of New York City and now Pacific Coast representative of the "Judge Landis of the movies."

"I haven't laughed so much in years," chuckled Mrs. Leslie Carter, world celebrated dramatic artiste.

"We haven't laughed so much since the first time we saw Weber & Fields," Charles A. Brabin and Theda Bara exclaimed in unison.

"It's the best picture ever produced at the Writers' Club," declared Waldemar Young, the president of that well known organization.

Others who expressed identical or similar sentiments were Daniel Frohman, Madge Bellamy, Hope Loring, Helen Rowland, May Allison, John B. Ritchie and Clara Beranger, scenario editors; Tom McNamara, the cartoonist; Louis D. Leighton, and Zoe Beckley of the New York Mail.

Arthur S. Kane, president of Associated Exhibitors, was further thrilled a few days ago by the receipt of the following telegram from Stanley Chambers, of the Miller theatre, Wichita, Kan.

"Just had the extreme pleasure of screening Douglas MacLean's first independent release, 'Going Up.' Congratulations to you and your organization on securing this picture."

Two Discoveries for "His Children's Children

There are many ways of breaking into motion pictures but the surest way is by being "discovered." In Sam Wood's latest picture, "His Children's Children," now in production at the Paramount Long Island studio, there are two recent discoveries—Dorothy Mackail and Mary Eaton. And both, strange to say, come from the New Amsterdam theatre where Mr. Ziegfeld glorifies the American girl in his productions.

Miss Mackaill, who came from England three years ago, was seen on the New Amsterdam roof in the "Midnight Frolic" by Marshall Neilan and given her first picture work in his "Bits of Life." In the short space of two years she has played in "A Woman's Woman," "The Isle of Doubt," "The Inner Man," "Mighty Lak a Rose," "The Fighting Blade," with Richard Barthelmess, and "His Children's Children."

Mary Eaton, star of the Follies for three years, was discovered by Sam Wood, who searched the New York theatres for a girl to play the role of Mercedes in "His Children's Children." Naturally Mr. Wood included the "Follies" in his search and Miss Eaton was induced to forsake the stage, at least temporarily, for the screen.

Niblo Enthuses Over Ray's Latest Production

Arthur S. Kane, president of Associated Exhibitors, which is to distribute Charles Ray's super-production, "The Courtship of Myles Standish," received from Los Angeles this week a telegram which caused him to indulge in considerable jubilation. It came from Fred Niblo, and reads as follows:

"Have just seen private preview of 'The Courtship of Myles Standish.' I cannot find words to express the thrilling impression it made on me. In story, production, acting, direction, it surpasses anything in recent years, and I predict a sensational success. It has popular box office appeal for all classes, wonderful exploitation possibilities and a historical value worthy to be recognized by the United States government as patriotic propaganda."

Shooting Night Scenes Thrills Brooklyn

RESIDENTS of Flatbush, Brooklyn, were startled one night last week by flares of yellow white light which illuminated the heavens between Prospect Park and Coney Island. This was occasioned by lights used at Vitagraph studios in night storm scenes in the coming Blackton production, "On the Banks of The Wabash."

A village street had been built on the old Vitagraph comedy lot and scores of extras were drenched and soaked in the manufactured rainstorm. James Morrison, Mary Carr, Burr McIntosh, Madge Evans and George Neville took part in the scenes.

Doris Kenyon to Start "Restless Wives"

Doris Kenyon, who is about to begin the production of "Restless Wives" for C. C. Burr at the Glendale studio, has appeared in three previous pictures made at his studio. It is a coincidence, that like her present Burr series, all these pictures were produced for the Independent market.

In "You Are Guilty," produced by Edgar Lewis for presentation by Mr. Burr, Miss Kenyon co-starred with James Kirkwood.

When B. F. Zeidman recently rented the Glendale studio for the production of "Bright Lights of Broadway," Mr. Burr loaned Miss Kenyon's services for a featured role in this Gerald C. Duffy story.

Miss Kenyon's first appearance before the camera at the Glendale studio was as the feminine lead in C. C. Burr's melocomedy "Sure-Fire-Flint."

In "Restless Wives," her fourth picture at the Burr Glendale studio, Miss Kenyon is said to have a vehicle particularly fitted to her talents. Izola Forrester wrote this modern-day drama and Mann Page supplied the continuity.

Charnas Buys Product of C. B. C. for Season

Another big blanket purchase of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation product for the season was completed this week when Harry Charnas of Cleveland, purchased for his organization, The Standard Film Service Corporation, with exchanges in Cleveland, Detroit and Pittsburgh, the C. B. C. series of four Columbia Pictures, the series of three new features, and the single reel novelty release "Screen Snapshots," which C. B. C. is State Righting this year.

The contract, which was closed personally by Joe Brandt, President of C. B. C., who made a special trip to Cleveland for the purpose, gives Standard therefore, seven features and a short release for the Ohio, Kentucky, Michigan, Western Pennsylvania, and West Virginia territory the features including "Yesterday's Wife," "The Marriage Market," "Discontented Husbands," "Traffic In Hearts," "Forgive and Forget," "Pal O' Mine" and "Innocence."

Metro Premier Features Announced

Milton Hoffman Completes List with Purchase of "Woman's Intuition"

AFTER months spent in a search for material that would measure up to the exacting requirements of the series of Metro Premier Features, Milton E. Hoffman, production manager, has completed his work. He has just announced the purchase of "Woman's Intuition," an original story by Sada Cowan and Howard Higgins, which completes the list for the coming season.

Mr. Hoffman took particular pains in his selection of stories. Those chosen are the work of the foremost writers of the day.

Fortunately Mr. Hoffman was not compelled to have any certain star or director in mind when selecting stories. He bought his stories and then obtained the players most fitted to create the various roles, placing the production in charge of a director noted for his ability to produce just the sort of story necessary.

The other Premier Features as announced by Mr. Hoffman include, "The Eagle's Feather," by Katherine Newlin Burt; "Held to Answer," by Peter Clark MacFarlane; "The Living Past," by William J. Locke; "Desire," by John B. Clymer and Henry R. Symonds; "The Book of Fate," and "Borrowed Plumage," by Natalie de Palmer. Production has been completed on two of these Premier Features, while the others are in the course of production or having scenario prepared. All will be completed several months in advance of release dates.

Mr. Hoffman selected James Kirkwood, Lester Cuneo, Mary Alden, Elinor Fair, George Siegmann, Crauford Kent and William Orlamond as the principal players in "The Eagle's Feather."

In "Held to Answer," Mr. Hoffman believes Metro has an unusually strong drama. House Peters, Evelyn Brent, James Morrison, John Sainpolis and Bull Montana are numbered among the prominent players in the cast. The story, by Peter Clark MacFarlane, was directed by Harold Shaw.

"The Living Past," is an adaptation of one of the greatest novels ever written by William J. Locke. Production details are now being arranged.

For "Desire" Mr. Hoffman announces a cast including John Bowers, Marguerite De La Motte, David Butler, Estelle Taylor, Walter Long, Edward Connelly and Ralph Lewis. The original story by John B. Clymer and Henry R. Symonds was directed by Rowland V. Lee.

Mr. Hoffman is now completing the selection of the cast and the arranging of other details for the filming of "The Book of Fate."

"Borrowed Plumage" was written by Natalie de Palmer. This Premier Feature will also boast an all-star cast.

"Woman's Intuition," the story just purchased by Mr. Hoffman to complete the series of Metro Premier Features, will soon be in production. Miss Cowan and Mr. Higgins, the co-authors, were also responsible for Mae Murray's forthcoming Metro production, "Fashion Row."

Mr. Hoffman's announcement contains the news that "Desire," "The Eagle's Feather" and "Held to Answer" have already been completed.

Warm Tribute for "Green Goddess"

New York Reviewers Are Unanimous in Commendation of Arliss Feature

ONE of the most unanimous press tributes ever given a motion picture production was accorded "The Green Goddess" with George Arliss in the leading role, which Distinctive Pictures Corporation opened for a run at the Sam H. Harris theatre, New York, August 14.

Here is what the papers said:

New York American—"Thrills, beauty, drama and tense appeal predominate in 'The Green Goddess'; it is vital, gripping play. . . . The entire production is a screen triumph."

New York Times—"It is not only beautifully staged, but the acting is excellent and the direction faultless. . . . All players in the cast, and this includes even those who served as extras, have done their bits to make this the best photoplay of its kind ever produced. . . . Here is a photoplay that shows the dawn of a new era in the motion picture world."

New York Tribune—"'The Green Goddess' on the screen is much more effective than ever it was on the stage. . . . We are ready to call 'The Green Goddess' the perfect picture if you like thrilling melodrama."

New York Evening Mail—"A melodrama done in the best style. In its film form 'The Green Goddess' deserves all the success it had while on the stage."

New York Evening Journal—"An epic of photoplays. Every moment was tense. The audience seemed held by some mystic spell from beginning to end of the picture."

New York Evening World—"An evening full of entertainment."

New York Evening Telegram—"Another Arliss screen triumph."

Daily News—"The fascinating splendor, the thrilling mystery holds its audience in a grip of iron."

New York Herald—"One glorious moment in 'The Green Goddess' is calculated to pull the audience out of its seats."

New York World—"George Arliss may be easily ranked among the first ten in motion picture pantomime."

New York Morning Telegraph—"The production is a highly artistic one and the cast is so excellent that the familiar play has become one of the most thoroughly worthwhile pictures that has been given to us this year."

Export, Import Close Sales on Product

LOUIS AUERBACH of the Export & Import Film Company, Inc., announces two important sales on "The Jungle Goddess," the fifteen episode wild animal serial produced by Col Selig, and "The Curse of Drink," a feature production with Harry T. Morey and an all-star cast.

The Standard Film Company, Weiland Brothers, of Pittsburgh purchased the Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia rights to these films. Julius Singer, special sales representative for Export & Import, negotiated the deal.

Vignola Passes Half Way Mark with "Yolanda"

Robert G. Vignola who is directing "Yolanda" with Marion Davies in the title role for Cosmopolitan announced this week that the picture has passed the half-way mark towards completion. "Yolanda" is planned to be a big special production and probably the biggest that Mr. Vignola has yet made not excepting even "When Knighthood Was In Flower."

At the present time Mr. Vignola is engaged in making interior scenes which because of their size and the large number of people in them require the use of two studios, the Jackson and the Pathe plants. While most of the exterior scenes have already been taken there still remain a large number to be "shot" and these will be done at Laddin's Rock Farm, near Stamford, Conn., as soon as Mr. Vignola has finished with the sets he is now using in the New York studios. If the present schedule of work is kept up Mr. Vignola expects to have finished actual "shooting" by October 1.

Ruth Clifford & Flynn in Jones Support

RUTH CLIFFORD and Maurice Flynn, two well-known screen celebrities, once stars in their own right, play the leading roles in support of Charles Jones, the Fox star, who is featured in "Hell's Hole," special for September release.

McIntosh Tells Fans of Radio About Wabash

Burr McIntosh, who plays Cap Hammond in "On the Banks of the Wabash," the J. Stuart Blackton production which will be released by Vitagraph, talks to radio fans every Monday night from the W E A F broadcasting station. He told his listeners the other night of the origin of Wabash, the name which became famous through Paul Dresser's song classic.

Burr also told his radio friends that Hoosier, the nickname for natives of Indiana, came from a custom in the pioneer days of visitors crying at the open door: "Who's yere," when they called. McIntosh plays the captain of an old steamboat in the little town of Cranberry Corners on the Wabash River in Mr. Blackton's picture.

Southern Campaign For Burr Specials

The Enterprise Distributing Corporation of Atlanta, Georgia, controlling the Southern States and Middle Western franchise rights on the C. C. Burr specials "Secrets of Paris," "The Last Hour," "You Are Guilty" and "Luck," is placing an intensive direct-to-the-exhibitor campaign back of these screen successes. This drive is an addition to liberal advertising in the trade and newspapers in their territory.

William K. Jenkins, president of Enterprise, showed his great faith in the entertainment value of the Burr product when he bought four features from this producer to include in the "Enterprise Big 6."

Trucks Will Speed Work Of Grand-Asher

To facilitate the quicker production of Grand-Asher comedies, Mr. Ben Verschleiser, general manager of the Grand Studios in Hollywood, OK'd the purchase of three Mack trucks equipped with special bodies to carry sets, special lights, etc. This will make it easier for the three Grand-Asher comedy units headed by Sid Smith, Monty Bankes and Joe Rock, to make their remaining productions.

Zierler Booklet Lists Burr Specials

The four Independent specials which C. C. Burr will produce for the season of 1923-24 are each given a full-page display in the handsome booklet just issued by Samuel Zierler, President of the Commonwealth Film Corporation, of New York City. Mr. Zierler contracted with Mr. Burr for these specials in advance of production.

The forthcoming Burr pictures are "Restless Wives," Izola Forrester's dramatic story; "Youth to Sell," another story from the virile pen of Miss Forrester; "The Average Woman," Dorothy De Jager's Saturday Evening Post story; and "Lend Me Your Husband," Marguerite Gove's original drama written especially for the screen.

Other Burr pictures listed in full-page display are "You Are Guilty," co-starring Doris Kenyon and James Kirkwood; "The Last Hour," co-starring Milton Sills and Carmel Myers; and the melo-comedy "Luck" with a brilliant Burr cast.

Warners Start Preparing For "Daddies"

Following the arrival of Mae Marsh at the Warner Brothers' Studio, Jack Warner and H. M. Warner immediately set their studio staff to work preparing room on the large stages for the forthcoming production of the successful Belasco stage play, "Daddies," in which Miss Marsh will star.

Sets are now being constructed and a cast of players rapidly assembled to hasten the filming date of the forthcoming production. Among the screen personalities who have already been signed for "Daddies" are Monte Blue, Harry Myers and Claude Gillingwater. William Seiter will handle the megaphone.

Seeks Location for "Call of the Canyon"

Victor Fleming, director of Paramount pictures, has left Hollywood for Flagstaff, Ariz., where he will begin a search for a location for the filming of "The Call of the Canyon," an adaptation of Zane Grey's latest novel.

To find a canyon in Arizona which will be fully as startling as the one described by Mr. Grey is now Mr. Fleming's task.

Production of the interiors in "The Call of the Canyon" began at the Lasky studio in Hollywood this week. Present plans call for publication of Mr. Grey's novel simultaneously with the release of the picture.

Dorothy Mackaill to Be Real American

DOROTHY MACKAILL, who has risen rapidly in the film world in the last two years, is spending her time lately getting naturalized when she isn't working in front of the camera for Sam Wood in his Paramount picture, "His Children's Children."

Miss Mackaill has taken out her first papers and plans to become an American citizen just as fast as she can. She was born in Hull, England, and received her dramatic schooling in Thorne Academy, London. She came to the United States three years ago.

Young Doug Starts Career in Turkish Empire

Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., to all intents and purposes has spent his first two weeks as a screen star in the heart of the Turkih Empire. Under the direction of Joseph Henabery, the youthful star has been busily engaged in the Turkish episodes of "Stephen Steps Out," his first venture as a star of Paramount Pictures. The story was adapted by Edfrid Bingham from the Richard Harding Davis story "The Grand Cross of the Crescent."

Theodore Roberts is featured with the boy star with Noah Beery, Harry Myers and Frank Currier heading the supporting company. G. N. Baker, noted authority on Turkish matters, is in charge of the technical problems of that part of the story which occurs in Turkey.

Near East Relief Official Endorses "Nanook"

Pathe quotes the following letter received from Margaret Case, Department of Motion Pictures of the Near East Relief Society:

"I wish to express appreciation of your great kindness in arranging for us to see 'Nanook of the North.' It is a tremendous picture—surely the best of its kind ever taken. Please call upon me if you ever wish any information about the Near East."

Portrait Cameraman Signs With Grand-Asher

Junius D. Estep, one of the best known portrait photographers on the Pacific Coast, has been engaged as publicity cameraman for Grand-Asher productions, under the supervision of Adam Hull Shirk, director of publicity at the Grand-Asher studios.

William Farnum in New Drama of Old West

"The Gun Fighter," William Farnum's initial new Fox-Year production to be released September 2nd, depicts the popular star in the type of role which gained him his present-day ascendancy in Western dramas.

This production is claimed to be timely in view of the cry being raised by exhibitors everywhere for the style of product much in vogue during the industry's infancy.

Made under the direction of Lynn Reynolds, the production is the brain-child of John Frederick, noted in the literary sphere for his remarkable tales of the old West.

Of interest to exhibitors is the press and exploitation book which has been prepared on the picture. Exhibitors will find herein the many-sided and novel exploitation angles offered by "The Gun Fighter."

Making Modern Scenes for "Ten Commandments"

Present work on the modern story of Cecil B. DeMille's new Paramount picture, "The Ten Commandments," is in strong contrast to scenes taken two months ago during the making of the Biblical prologue.

Where the drama of the Biblical prologue concerned itself with tremendous crowds and great spectacles, the scenes now being photographed are extremely simple, including but four principal characters. The mass movement of the Biblical prologue has been replaced by the intense concentration of the dramatic incidents concerned with the tale of very modern people

Agnes Ayres, Charles Ogle and Roscoe Karns are recent additions to the cast of this picture, which was written for the screen by Jeanie Macpherson.

La Cava Will Direct Sale in Burr Features

Gregory La Cava was engaged by C. C. Burr to direct Charles "Chic" Sale in his first feature for distribution through Associated Exhibitors because of his excellent work on the Burr series of All-Star comedies, featuring Charlie Murray. La Cava has a keen sense of comedy, as well as dramatic values and is well equipped to make this Sale feature a comedy-drama of real entertainment.

The director gained his schooling in developing comedy plots, gags and effects in the cartoon field. He is one of the best known cartoonists in the country. For many years he was associated with the Hearst papers and also the New York World, New York Herald, the American Press Association and other publishing organizations.

N. Y. Educator Commends Ray Production

Nearly 200 delegates from the annual convention of the National Education Association passed through Los Angeles on their way home from San Francisco and were extended the courtesies of some of the motion picture studios.

One of the forthcoming productions in which the delegates took an especially keen interest was Charles Ray's ten reel picturization of Longfellow's poem, "The Courtship of Myles Standish."

After witnessing the preview, Ernest L. Crandall, director of visual instruction, New York City, sent the following letter to the producer:

"Permit me to acknowledge with sincere thanks your courtesy in giving me the opportunity to preview your forthcoming picture, "The Courtship of Myles Standish," and to investigate the conditions under which it was made.

"This is a most commendable undertaking. It is just this type of plays that will be welcomed by the better class of patrons—plays that have both a literary and an historical value, yet so constructed as to be full of dramatic interest."

Dwan Completes "Zaza" For Paramount

"Zaza," Allan Dwan's picture version of the famous French play which brought Mrs. Leslie Carter fame on the American stage and afforded Geraldine Farrar one of her best characters in opera, has been completed at the Paramount Long Island studio.

Gloria Swanson is the "Zaza" in this newest screen play, which was adapted by Albert Shelby LeVino, and her work in it is said to far surpass anything she has done before.

H. B. Warner plays the leading male role of Bernard Dufrene; Ferdinand Gottschalk is Duke DeBrissac; Lucille La Verne has the part of Aunt Rosa; Mary Thurman will be seen as Florianne, and other members of the cast include Riley Hatch, Roger Lytton, Ivan Linow and Yvonne Hughes.

"Eternal City" Company Is Back

Unusual Scenes Obtained by Fitzmaurice After Three Months in Rome

GEORGE FITZMAURICE and the company of players appearing under his direction in Samuel Goldwyn's production of "The Eternal City," Sir Hall Caine's novel, arrived from Rome on August 11 on board the Aquitania after spending three months in Rome, where all the exterior scenes of the big production were filmed. The returning company consisted of Lionel Barrymore, Richard Bennett, Bert Lytell, Barbara LeMarr, and Montagu Love, the principal players; Ouida Bergere, responsible for the scenario, and Herman Bruenner, company manager.

During the time Mr. Fitzmaurice's company was in Rome, more than 400 scenes were staged and upon his arrival in New York last week he stated that not only was the first half of the production completed, but that he had assembled it in continuity form. His average working day in the Italian city began at 7 A. M. and lasted until 1 A. M.

Mr. Fitzmaurice spoke in glowing terms of his splendid reception throughout Italy. Premier Mussolini, present head of the Italian government, afforded him every possible co-operation. For the scenes of the Roman Coliseum, Mussolini issued a call to his followers and 20,000 Fascistas responded. The ensemble scene staged in the Coliseum with the cast in the foreground backed by a horde of black-shirted men will be one of the inspiring scenes of the production.

The Italian Minister of War permitted three regiments of the King's troops to enact a scene depicting the dispersing of a mob about to descend on Dona Roma's home, it is said. Dona Roma is played by Miss Le Marr.

Locations were used by Fitzmaurice through the courtesy of various Italian government heads, which, it is said, were not even allowed local producers.

All these arrangements were consummated through Samuel Goldwyn, producer of "The Eternal City," who elicited the sympathy and co-operation of Prince Catana, Italian Ambassador to Washington who allotted Countess Di Robilant, a Counselor of his staff, to accompany the unit to Rome and who returned with them.

"Black Oxen" in Newspaper Serial

Newspapers with Total Circulation of Five Million Agree to Run Story

FIRST NATIONAL will create advance interest through the newspaper serialization of "Black Oxen." Newspapers whose circulation totals, according to A. B. C. audits, more than five million, have already agreed to run the story in sixty-seven installments, each of which will bear the credit line: "Published by arrangement with Associated First National Pictures, Inc. Watch for the screen version directed by Frank Lloyd with Corrinne Griffith as Countess Zattiany."

When First National purchased the screen rights to Gertrude Atherton's best seller, it also acquired the newspaper serialization rights. In order to obtain the maximum value, the privilege of publication was not offered to the press until the approximate release date was ascertained. Under the present arrangements with the newspapers publication will not start until on or immediately after October 15th. This means that the serialization will be concluded shortly before the presentation of the picture throughout the country.

Fourteen Hearst newspapers in as many large cities, will publish "Black Oxen" with the announcement of the forthcoming picture, it is said. These cities are New York, Boston, Chicago, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Atlanta, Rochester, Baltimore, Washington, Milwaukee, Syracuse, Fort Worth, Detroit and Seattle.

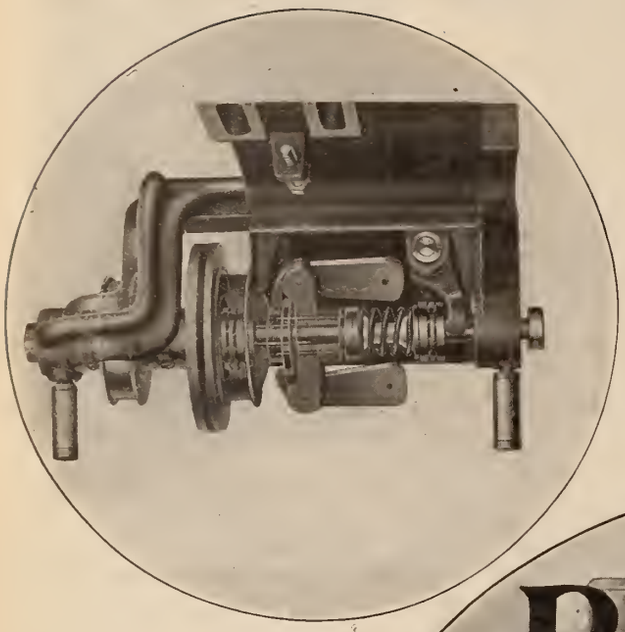
Among other big city newspapers which will start publication of the novel on or about October 15th are: Kansas City Star, Louisville Courier Journal, Omaha Bee, New Orleans Item, St. Louis Times, Des Moines Register and Tribune, Buffalo Times, Cleveland News, Pittsburgh Press, Albany Times-Union, Racine Journal News, Minneapolis Star, St. Paul News, New Bedford Standard, South Bend Tribune, and Charlotte Observer.

Arthur Bernstein who rejoins Jackie Coogan Productions as manager of production.

Photography Completed on "Acquittal"

Photography has been completed at Universal City on "The Acquittal," screen adaptation of Rita Weiman's stage play, and the film is now in the hands of Clarence Brown, the director, and a staff of experts for cutting. It will be a Universal-Jewel.

The picture, featuring Norman Kerry and Claire Windsor, is lavishly set.



The task of cutting will consume several weeks, as the footage taken was considerably over the proposed length of the production, and many episodes will have to be edited and shortened.

Following completion of the cutting, Brown will make another large picture, "The Signal Tower." The cast for this has not been chosen, but will probably be announced within two weeks. Work has already started on the continuity of the Brown offering.

Device for Projecting Border Around Picture

New Feature Introduced at Capitol Theatre, New York, Attracts Much Attention

EXHIBITORS will be interested in a new specialty that was shown at the Capitol theatre, New York City, last week.

This specialty, consisting of a colored border (possibly it could be termed "proscenium") was projected so as to surround a short subject picture (a scenic, "My Country").

This border was elaborately designed and filled the entire stage opening excepting that portion taken up by the picture itself. Color was artistically applied to this border which gave a most pleasing effect, particularly in offsetting the tinted parts of the picture.

In some respects, this border surrounding the picture, seemed to produce an optical illusion, i. e., to give depth to the picture. This apparent depth should enhance the attraction of a picture to the ordinary observer.

A claim that is strongly brought forth by the inventor of this lighted and artistically colored border, is that it reduces eye strain. To what degree this is true could not be determined from the observation of the short subject shown at the Capitol theatre. However, it does appear that theatres, particularly the smaller houses, will find use for this special projection which in a modified form will permit a colored proscenium to be projected to the front of the theatre giving an illusion that the proscenium is actually constructed as a part of the house.

This idea when applied only in respect to bordering a particular picture may lend itself aptly to enhancing the picture through added depth and added appeal from a special design incorporated in the border fitting the theme of the picture itself.

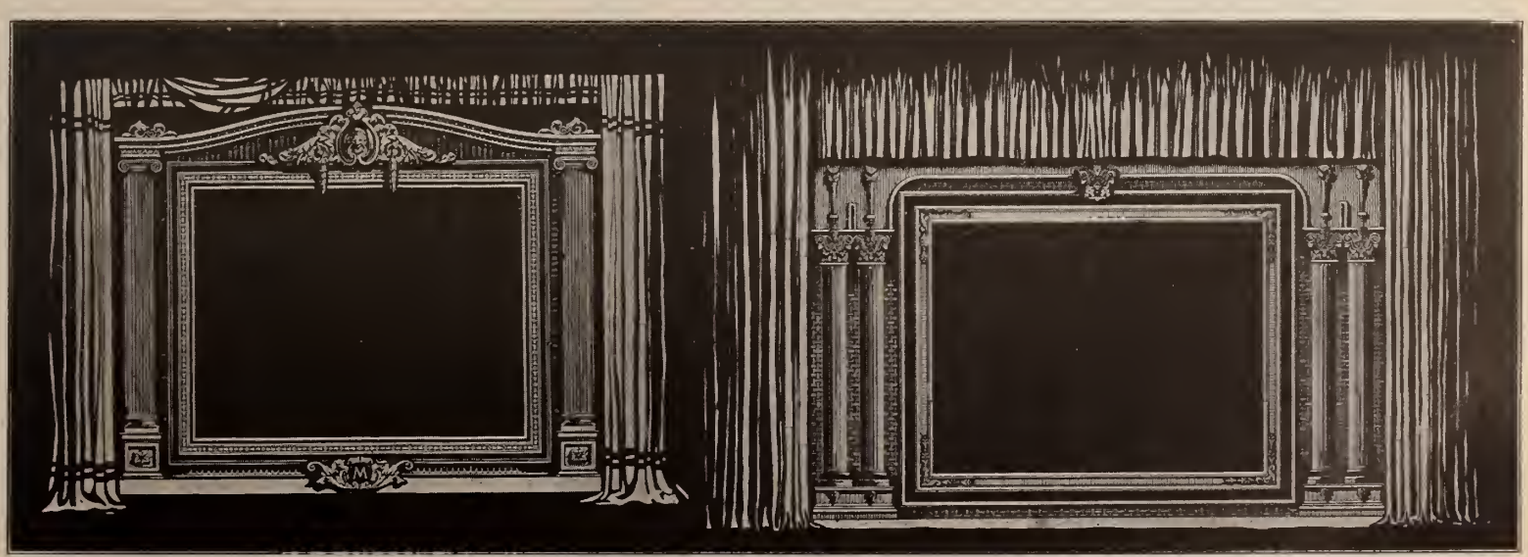
It seems likely that an adaptation of this special projection may in one form or another find popularity among motion picture theatres due to the great flexibility to which this special projection can be subjected.

Two views shown on this page were photographed from proscenium projected to the stage and serve as an illustration of what can be done along these lines. Color schemes are incorporated in the various dsigns.

Perhaps the most unusual phase of this specialty is the fact that no additional light source is needed to project the border or proscenium to the stage. A special apparatus, which is not intricate in its design, is attached to the projector and uses the light which is ordinarily cut off from the screen while the picture at the aperture is in motion and one of the shutter's blades are in front of the projection lens. By a special arrangement of prisms, lenses and reflecting surfaces, this light which is ordinarily wasted, is redirected through a slide and focused on the stage of the theatre. The apparatus is ingeniously designed and appears to work in a very satisfactory manner producing excellent results.

As was previously stated, great flexibility in the application of this idea is permitted through the various designs and colors which may be incorporated in the slide so that color screen used in connection with this slide gives the proper effect on the stage.

The inventor of this device is Thomas A. Marten and the system will be known as Marten Projection. Plans have been laid to commercialize the system for distribution to theatres throughout the country so that exhibitors will be afforded, in the near future, an opportunity to inspect this new feature.



For the Good of All

It is actually distasteful to feel compelled to bring up the old time-worn subject of projection. But distasteful or not—the truth still stands that projection in a large portion of theatres, is poor. And poor projection can only be laid to negligence.

If only the exhibitor would give thought to the importance of screening the picture, eliminating all the common flaws inherent to careless projection and worn-out apparatus, motion pictures, as a consequence, would become more popular.

The investment required to keep projection apparatus in first class shape is comparatively small. And furthermore, such an investment returns high dividends.

You as exhibitors, cannot afford to ignore the importance of the proper screening of the picture. A screen evenly illuminated with sufficient light, on which is thrown a picture free from projection defects, is a real feature for the theatre.

Exploitation Stunts Used by Exhibitors to Good Effect

THE following article is taken from the house organ, The Getogether, published by the Eastern Theatre Equipment Corp., Boston, Mass., and tells about some stunts used by exhibitors in exploiting their theatre through the use of its physical characteristics.

"Some stunts are good and some are bad, but here are a couple that came to our attention from a couple of live wire exhibitors that got results and might offer an idea for some of the rest of you to "drum up trade."

"Manager J. W. Keough, of Memorial Hall, Dedham, Mass., installed a New Motiograph De Luxe projector and a new Crystal Bead Screen and Mazda Lamp Equipment. He invited his patrons to inspect the new equipment, then got up a neat circular announcing a prize letter contest and also containing a list of coming features. The contestants were asked to write a letter explaining the advantages of the new equipment and not to sign their names but to write a copy of the letter and retain it. Announcements were made on the screen each night that on a certain date the winning letter would be read from the stage. Well known people were selected as judges and a first, second and third prize consisting of a season ticket and different amounts of complimentary tickets were offered.

"A stunt like this is surely new and cannot help but stimulate interest in the theatre as well as increase business.

"The second stunt was an inspiration on the part of Charles J. Hohman, manager of the Globe theatre at Manchester, N. H.

"Mr. Hohman got up a neat circular letter on the theatre letterhead addressed 'To Our Patrons to Be,' in which he spoke of the ninth birthday of the theatre, of its fireproof construction, advantages, and the class of pictures shown. With this was included a list of coming features with the synopsis of the features soon to be shown and two complimentary tickets. The whole was enclosed in an envelope.

"Now, while this part of the stunt was not particularly new, the method of presenting it was. Manager Hohman hired a lady of pleasing personality to distribute these envelopes. She was paid 5 cents per call and in each case, rang the bell and personally delivered each letter with a little talk.

"There can be no doubt that the 'personal contact' of this plan with the invitation to use the complimentary tickets would not fail to produce results. It did!

"How many of you exhibitors are sitting down waiting for business to come and wondering why your one-sheet display doesn't draw when you should be planning some way like this to go after them and get them in?"

Bonita Theatre Being Constructed

The contract for the construction of the new Bonita theatre, Tampa, Fla., has been awarded to G. A. Miller, and work on the new building will be started as soon as the material is assembled.

The entire Jackson building will be used. The Bonita now occupies one-half of the ground floor and, with the double space, will have a seating capacity of about 800 on the main floor and a balcony of about 200 more.

The new theatre will be modern in every way. On each side of the front lobby there will be a small store. The lobby will be built of Alabama marble, with tile flooring. The interior will also have the tile floor. Large poster display frames will be built in on each side of the lobby and the box office, which will be all glass, will be in the center.

The special feature of the new theatre will be the ventilation. Large fans will be located upon the roof so that there can be a constant flow of cool breezes to all parts of the house.

Just back of the stores will be stairways leading to the balcony. The toilets will be located at a middle landing on these stairs. The manager's office will be on the second floor back of the balcony. A stage will be built with sufficient space for vaudeville acts, though the policy of the new house will be feature pictures. The Bonita is owned by the Consolidated Amusement Company of Tampa. J. H. McLoughlin is the present manager, as well as treasurer, of the company, and will no doubt have the new house when it is completed.—Leslie.

New Rex Theatre Nearing Completion

The New Rex theatre, which is being erected at Sheboygan, Wis., will have a seating capacity of 1,000, about 700 of which will be on the main floor. The foundations have been completed and the steel work is being installed.

The exterior will be granite base with terra cotta trim, and a red Spanish tile roof. The building will be fireproof of steel framing, brick and hollow tile walls and concrete floors, with eight fire exits. The ventilation and heat control will enable a change of washed air every three minutes, and the lighting system will be most modern and will consist of a concealed lighting effect for the auditorium. The seating arrangement will be exceptionally comfortable, sight lines being correct from any seat in the house.

The interior color scheme is being worked out to assure the most restful relaxation and to harmonize in every detail. Frank Geib is the general construction contractor, W. C. Weeks the architect, and E. J. Hoefer the owner. The theatre will have a pipe organ of latest type, and in its entirety undoubtedly be a leader among modern theatres in this section of the northwest.—Pollak.

Stanley Frame Moves Office

The Stanley Frame Company, Inc., builders of theatrical lobby displays, who have been located in the Godfrey Building, 729 Seventh Avenue, New York City, have removed their office and salesroom to 727 Seventh Avenue, New York City. Mr. Kornicker, President, announces that the frame business has been very satisfactory during the past season.

Grauman's Metropolitan Theatre, Los Angeles, Calif.

Are You Proud of Your Theatre Chairs?

BEFORE the play or program begins, when the lights are turned on and the people are being seated, are you proud of the appearance presented by the chairs or do they show signs of wear, sunken seats and worn-out upholstery? Under these conditions, theatre patrons certainly cannot feel at ease. They pay for amusement and comfort—why shouldn't they receive it?

Because of the beauty and convenience of modern theatres, the public are becoming educated to choose the better class where they know care is given for their comfort.

The Metropolitan Theatre shown above offers the public every convenience possible and the theatre chairs, installed by the American Seating Company, are examples of perfect construction combining all the elements of proper seating. Mr. Grauman realizes and appreciates the quality of our chairs and has given us not only one contract, but three, proving that satisfactory service was rendered in each installation.

It is from installations such as the above, and from the many others of equal note which are illustrated from time to time in our advertisements, that a feeling of perfect confidence must be established and the conclusion formed that this organization is equipped to handle any seating installation with perfect satisfaction.

Simplified Electricity for Projectionists

Direct Current Projectors

Lesson VI—Part XI

Direct Current Projectors

EXPERIENCE has shown that direct current is the only source of power supply satisfactory for projection arcs, especially for the projection of moving pictures in theatres of any consequence. As most of the neighborhood houses, together with a considerable number of some of the larger theatres are located in the alternating current districts where only A .C. power is available, some form of apparatus must be used in order to change the alternating current into direct current suitable for use with projection arcs.

The electric arc is unstable if connected to a constant voltage supply line without ballast resistance in series with the arc. This because of the fact that any increase in current due to any cause increases the temperature of the arc, and an increase in the temperature of the arc is accompanied by lowering of its resistance. Lowering the resistance causes it to draw even more current so that this continues until fuses blow or something happens, if the line service is such as to maintain constant voltage.

The only way to operate a projection arc from the constant voltage source is through ballast resistance and satisfactory results are not obtained unless the drop across this resistance is at least 25 volts.

It was pointed out in one of the preceding articles that there are a number of ways of changing to direct current where the alternating current, so commonly supplied by the central station, was the only kind at hand. One of these methods, the mercury arc rectifier, has already been described and so requires no further mention.

The Hertner Converter

There are several other methods, however, which are also commonly used, the principal of these being, motor-generator sets and rotary convertors. The most commonly used machines of the first-class are the Westinghouse, General Electric, Hertner and Hallberg, while the second-class is represented by the Wagner convertor.

It is our plan to cover in more or less detail, all of these machines, discussing principally the points of interest from the electrical standpoint and in no way, from that of merit. Indeed, nearly every projectionist has his own ideas and pet prejudices on this particular subject. If more attention, then, is seemingly being paid one type than another, the reason for it will be that of electrical interest only.

The various electrical manufacturers are supplying much of the material which will appear in this section and of the course, and only lack of space prevents the full use of their contributions.

The first machine to be described will be the Hertner Transverter which should require no further introduction.

The Hertner Transverter

There are available motor generator sets used for changing alternating current to direct current at constant voltage. There are few instances where machines of this sort meet the service requirements very nicely, but at an additional power cost over the machine which will be described later. These constant voltage generators, used primarily for projection arc work, are wound for 75 to 85 volts and in some cases 110 volt motor generators are used.

The Transverter is a motor generator set designed and built for supplying direct current of constant value to projection arcs, eliminating the ballast resistance and, therefore, cutting down power cost. The general design is such as to adapt it to the small space available in projection rooms and generator rooms in theatres. The vertical design also makes it possible for the commutator to be located well above the dirt and dust of the floor. Even though a generator room be kept scrupulously clean, there is always some dirt or dust present.

The Motor

The motor is designed especially for this machine. A power motor ordinarily must be designed so as to have a relatively high starting torque. This high starting torque requirement means that the motor suffers an appreciable decrease in speed when full load is applied to it. The motor of the Transverter does not need to have high starting torque owing to the fact that it always starts without load and the rotating elements are mounted on ball bearings. This results in a high efficiency motor and also one which, due to its design, has exceptionally high overload capacity for short periods of time, such as is required when an operator is using the maximum current which he can obtain from the machine and operating two arcs. Briefly, this motor is of the squirrel cage, induction type. The stator windings are made either for one, two or three phase. The rotor has copper bars forced into spiral slots, the ends of these bars being brazed into a heavy copper end ring. This eliminates one continual source of trouble which is present in a great many motors.

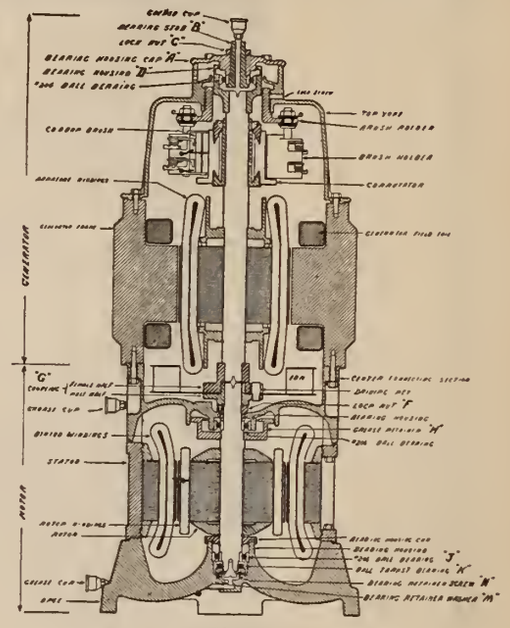

Figure 96

The Generator

The generator is of the shunt wound, interpole type. The scheme of the internal connections of the generator is shown in Fig. 95.

When the armature of a generator is rotating in the magnetic field, a voltage is induced in the winding and, if there is an electrical connection between the terminals of this armature, current can flow. The current flowing through the armature windings makes a magnet out of the armature and by properly positioning the brushes, the magnetism of the armature can be made to oppose the main field, resulting in practically constant current output over a wide range of voltage from the generator. This eliminates the necessity of any reverse series (differential type) winding in order to maintain constant current from the generator. The interpoles are placed in the machine in order to obtain satisfactory commutation and the setting of the interpoles is such that they are directly over the coils undergoing commutation. For this reason, the position of the interpoles may be varied according to the brush setting. If once set at the factory, the position of neither brushes nor interpoles should be changed. Best results obtained from the Transverter are not only due to the way in which connections are made, but to the proper proportions of the material used in it.

Two New Britain Houses Being Remodelled

In at least two of the motion picture playhouses of New Britain, Ct., extensive alterations and improvements are to be made during the summer. Extensive alterations are planned to be completed when the Capitol theater on West Main street, formerly Fox's theatre, is re-opened under the management of Contaras Brothers and Perakos. The entire building is being painted and the lobby will be entirely new, the work to be done under the supervision of George Davison of Hartford, who did the art-plaster work at Poli's Capitol theatre in Hartford.

The Strauss Company of New York has inaugurated work on a pretentious marquee, which will extend over the sidewalk to the curb, and be illuminated at night by 1,185 lights. The front and the two sides will have the word "Capitol," while below will be changeable letters, giving the vaudeville attractions and feature films. The front top piece will be made into the form of a capital dome and be illuminated by 420 lights.

The playhouse will be re-carpeted throughout, while a smoking and lounging room for men will be fitted up in the basement. With completion of improvements, it is planned to have the Capitol one of the most modern vaudeville-motion picture houses in the state. High-class vaudeville and first-run photoplays will be featured.

The Palace theatre on Main street, owned by the same concern, will be changed over for exclusive use as a motion picture house.

A Waterproof Screen

A news item of great importance to theatre managers and projectionists, is the discovery of a waterproof screen. The Beach theatre at Belhaven, North Carolina, has forwarded the formula given below for the type of screen now in use in their theatre.

The screen is made of beaver board and nailed to a backing built of ceiling material. The seams are made smooth by putty. Two coats of Athey's outside white are used on back of the screen and four coats on the front of the same kind of paint. The screen is set in a black box thus doing away with the effect that moonlight has on it. This screen sits over salt water, has no protection from the elemenets, the pictures are projected from a pavilion across the water about 60 feet and the audience sits on the pier.

The Beach theatre, Bellhaven, N. C., I. L. Taylor, owner. The screen is over the salt water and does not depreciate in its reflecting qualities. The way to preserve the screen is describd in an article on this page

As noted from the cross sectional view, Fig. 96, the rotating parts of the Transverter are mounted on ball bearings. Automobile practice together with the many varied uses of ball bearings show that they are reliable when properly used and mounted.

In mounting ball bearings it is universal practice to hold the inner race of the bearing tight on the shaft and permit the outer ball race to have a free fit in the housing, yet without any lateral shake, so that this outer race has enough freedom to adjust itself lengthwise of the shaft in oder to avoid any binding action or end thrust between itself and the inner race.

To accomplish this, the top and center bearings of the Transverter are mounted so that the inner ball race is firmly bound to the shaft. The commercial standard limit of accuracy set by the engineering societies, is .0005″ or .0006″ variation in bore, and in order to have a proper fit on the shaft, each bearing must be fitted to its own shaft if only the friction of the bearing on the shaft is to hold it in place. The inner ball races of the center and top bearing are held firmly on the shaft by means of locking nuts. The lower bearings are located in the base of the machine. The annular bearing takes side load, while all the weight of the rotating elements is supported by the thrust bearing. The inner ball race of the annular bearing rests against a shoulder on the shaft, while the upper ball race of the thrust bearing rests against the inner ball race of the annular bearing. The weight of the rotating elements, therefore, holds the inner ball race of the annular bearing in place. The thrust bearing is constructed with a spherical seat which renders it self-aligning. A bearing retaining screw is set into the bottom of the shaft and holds all the parts of the thrust bearing loosely in place. This is an aid in assembling the machine. When the rotor is put into its proper position, the thrust bearing will rest on the washer, leaving the bearing retaining screw free from any connection with the bearing or its parts. Both these bearings are enclosed and guarded against dirt, grit and moisture by the bearing housing cap on the rotor shaft. Grease cups are provided so that the bearings may be readily lubricated.

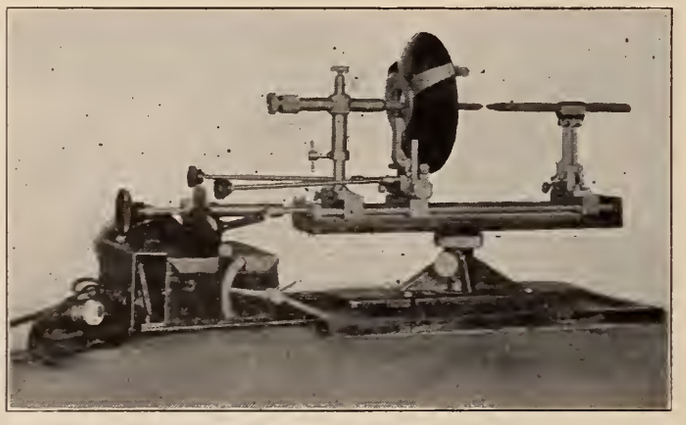
The character of grease used is of the utmost importance in the care of the machine. The grease cups should not be turned more than one turn once every month. Only grease which is absolutely known to be free from any graphite moisture, animal fat or any materials which would tend to form acid, should be used to fill the grease cups. The grease which is furnished with the Transverter is chemically inert and serves the purpose required of the grease, i.e., keep moisture out of the bearings, as the ball bearing itself needs no lubrication.



The commutator, brush rigging and brushes are the heart of any generator, as it is there that trouble will first develop if there is anything lacking in either the design or the material used. The commutator of the Transverter is made up of cold drawn copper bars. This to insure uniform density of material. These bars as well as the mica segments are punched to exact uniformity of size and all are assembled between mica end rings into a steel core under many tons of hydraulic pressure, thus eliminating any possibility of the bars becoming loose in service. The mica is cut out from between the bars to a depth of about one thirty-second of an inch and the brushes used are non-abrasive, so that if in the life of the machine the commutator wears so that any mica comes flush with the surface of the commutator, this mica should be cut down as it will start serious trouble with the commutator.

The brushholders are of brass and are of a modern type. They have adjustable tension fingers to hold the carbon brushes in contact with the commutator. These carbon brushes are electrically connected to the brushholder casting with flexible pigtails, thus minimizing loss and eliminating any possibility of the joints or tension springs being injured by such currents.

The various parts of Transverter of any given size are interchangeable and while it is seldom that anything more than a set of brushes is required by the user, the interchangeability of parts is an advantage to the manufacturer in assembly of the machines and insures that in the event the user may have need for any part, it may be obtained from the nearest Transverter dealer or from the factory.

Performance

On making a test of a type D-100-100 Transverter it was found that on starting the voltage immediately went to about 220 and quickly dropped back to 150. This is caused by the action of the relay in the panel which inserts resistance into the field circuit as soon as the voltage builds up to a high value. Two things are accomplished by this device, first, protection to the field from abnormally high current and heat, and second, a saving in the power consumption when the Transverter is operated on open circuit.

With the voltage back at 150 and one of the lamps short-circuited by its switch, the other arc was started in the usual way. The field regulator was set so that the arc was burning at 100 amperes and at about 60 volts. The switch across the second arc was then opened, the carbons began to glow and when drawn apart, produced a second arc. Both arcs were now consuming 104 amperes at a total of 120 volts. The arcs being in series, the voltmeter registered the sum of the voltages across the two arcs. On short-circuiting the first arc, the voltmeter again returned to approximately 60, while the amperes remained at 100. Allowing this arc to burn without any adjustment, watching the voltmeter and ammeter, the current which was 100 at 60 volts went to 105 at 70, 108 at 80 and 109 at 90. Following the curve below mentioned the current would have been found to begin to decrease slightly below this value had the test been carried up to beyond 100 volts. Such an extremely long arc has no practical value, but it illustrates the constancy of the current supplied by the Transverter.

The curve shown in Fig. 97 illustrates the point very clearly, volts are shown vertical and amperes horizontal. The four curves are for four different field regulator settings corresponding to 50, 80, 100 and 110 amperes on the arc with normal arc length. Let us see how the test and resulting curve will help to answer questions such as the following:

1. When both arcs are open and the machine running and the voltmeter on the panel showing 150 volts. why does not the fuse blow upon dead short-circuit?

2. Why does not the current diminsh when burning one arc if that arc is allowed to burn up to a 70 or 75 volt length?

3. What happens to the current in the arc upon starting the second arc?

4. What happens to the current in either arc upon shorting the other?

1. What happened when running on open circuit at 150 volts or what would happen with the relay cut out so as to give the full 220 volts on open circuit if the machine were short-circuited is simply this: Immediately upon short-circuiting, the current generated will set up a reaction which demagnetizes the main fields, thus producing less and less voltage, following down the curve till it practically hits the bottom horizontal line, which shows that the voltage on this line is zero and the amperes approximately 30.

When the shorting of the generator is accompanied by closing the switch across the arcs, the current will momentarily increase somewhat above that indicated by the curve, but at no time is the load sufficient to cause the blowing of fuses. The machine will run indefinitely with the switches closed in the short-circuiting position with considerably less load on the A. C. line than if run on open circuit.

2. Upon opening the arc gradually from its normal length to upward of 70 volts, the current increases slightly. This can be readily traced on the curve, the current being the same at 60 and 120 volts, but slightly greater at the points between, so that could a single arc be drawn out to 120 volts, the current would gradually rise to 109 amperes at 90 and then decrease to normal at 120 volts.

3. The third question is answered by the second because on starting the second arc the current is practically unaffected, as the voltage rises rapidly to about double its former value.

4. When either arc is shorted, the current value follows the curve, as the voltage decreases and again assumes a value corresponding to 55 or 60 volts. In fact, it will soon be found, when handling a machine, that the current can never depart except momentarily from the curve assigned to it for any given setting of the field regulator.

Efficiency

The overall efficiency from line to the lamps varies from 65% to 75% depending upon the size of Transverter and the number of arcs burning.

A special starter is furnished with all single phase Transverters. This because a unique starting device is employed in starting.

LITTLE STORIES ABOUT PEOPLE ON THE LOT

With Paramount Units

Pola Negri, having completed her stellar role in "The Spanish Dancer" plans to make a vacation trip to the Grand Canyon and Yellowstone Park before she begins work in her next production.

August 20th is the date set for the taking of the first scenes on Bill Hart's comeback picture, "Wild Bill Hickok."

"The Marriage Maker" is now being titled and edited by William de Mille and Clara Beranger.

Tom Moore has left for New York to take a principal role in Sam Wood's production "Big Brother," which will be made at the Long Island studios.

The important players in George Melford's production of Kipling's classic, "The Light That Failed," are now on the desert in Arizona filming scenes. Jacqueline Logan, Percy Marmont, Sigrid Holmquist and David Torrence are among the members of the cast who made the trip.

James Cruze is now cutting and editing "Ruggles of Red Gap."

First National Items

Norma Talmadge will start on "Dust of Desire" next week. Joseph Schildkraut will be leading man. Arthur Edmund Carew, Hector Sarno and Earl Schenck have been engaged for roles.

Another production by J. K. McDonald, producer of "Penrod and Sam" has been contracted for by First National. Its title is as yet unannounced.

Thomas H. Ince has completed the cutting and editing of "Her Reputation," in which May McAvoy is starred. It is scheduled for fall release.

"Thundergate" has been completed and is now in the hands of the film editors. Owen Moore, Sylvia Breamer, Tully Marshall, Virginia Brown Faire, Robert McKim, Richard Cummings and Ynez Seabury comprise the all-star cast. George Siegman, Carmelita Geraghty, Marion Feducha and Emily Fitzroy have been added to the cast of Maurice Tourneur's "Jealous Fools."

An English village has been built in the Hollywood hills for the setting of Constance Talmadge's "A Dangerous Mail." A castle, 112 rooms, is an outstanding architectural sight for miles around.

On the Goldwyn Lot

Alan Crosland will direct the film version of Elinor Glyn's "Three Weeks," having arrived from New York where he recently completed Cosmopolitan's "Under the Red Robe." Mrs. Glyn will assist in the filming. Carey Wilson has made the screen adaptation.

Two Pullmans and two baggage cars were employed by Rupert Hughes to transport the cast, props, etc., to Yellowstone Park where he will film scenes for his new picture tentatively titled "Law Against Law." Lew Cody, Helene Chadwick, George Walsh, Carmel Myers, Dale Fuller and William Orlamond were among the players who made the trip.

After but one day spent at the studio in Los Angeles, Eric Von Stroheim and his company left for Keeler, California, from which point they will enter the desert in Death Valley.

Jesse D. Hampton while in New York will confer with the Goldwyn exploitation forces regarding a campaign on "The Spoilers." It is probable his next production will be another Rex Beach story, as he has the rights to several.

Ten thousand orphan and school children of Los Angeles, were recently guests of Mae Murray at a special matinee concert of the Hollywood Bowl Symphony Orchestra.

E. M. Saunders, general sales manager, has returned to New York after a short visit on the Coast.

Director Harold Shaw and the "Held to Answer" company, headed by House Peters, have returned from a location trip to San Francisco and Oakland.

At Universal City

Clarence Brown has been assigned to direct "The Signal Tower," a railroad drama. He has just finished "The Acquittal," the cutting of which is expected to occupy several weeks.

The serial department at Universal City entertained the rest of the studio on Aug. 15, with the stars of the chapterplay department entertaining in vaudeville skits. William Desmond did a scene from "Quo Vadis," and William Duncan a Scotch monologue. Eileen Sedgwick sang, and Pete Morrison did roping tricks.

"Thundering Dawn," which Harry Garson directed, is pronounced by studio officials one of the best Universal features of the year. J. Warren Kerrigan, Anna Q. Nilsson, Winigred Bryson, Richard Kean, Tom Santschi, Edward Burns and Winter Hall are among the principal players.

A sea voyage of a month is scheduled for William Desmond and his supporting cast making "Beasts of Paradise," a new chapterplay. Scenes will be taken along the Mexican coast and on an island.

King Baggot is soon to start shooting "The Custody of the Child," starring Baby Peggy. This production will be the second of a series of "Peggy" specials Baggot is making for Universal.

Here and There

"Hogan in Hollywood" has been completed by Director Fred Caldwell. This is the fourth of the series of Hollywood pictures he has made. Chester Conklin, Alice Howel, Muriel Reynolds, Vic Potel and Violet Schram are in the cast.

"The Milkman of Hollywood" an original by J. Stewart Woodhouse, will be the next production made by Fred Caldwell. Chester Conklin will star.

Eddie Lyons, well known comedian, is taking the first vacation he has had in years. He is now at Harsdale Lodge, near Encampment, Wyoming. He just finished an important role in "Seeing Double." A production which will shortly reach the market through Arrow.

Marjorie Daw, and her husband Eddie Sutherland, are finally on their delayed honeymoon. Two months of work interfered with the bride's plans, immediately following the wedding.

Evelyn Brent is back at work, following a week's layout on account of a nervous breakdown.

"The Scarlet Letter" is being considered by Chester Bennett as the next starring vehicle for Jane Novak.

Finis Fox has completed the filming of "Bag and Baggage," featuring Gloria Grey, and is now editing the production.

"The Girl Expert" is the temporary title of Harold Lloyd's next production.

The first public showing of the initial scientific film, depicting the activities of insects, being made by Principal Pictures, was held at the Ambassador theatre, Los Angeles, August 11. The pictures are being made under the so-called "cold light," which has been experimented with for years.

James Morrison is in New York City enacting the principal male role in "On The Banks of The Wabash," a screen adaptation of the one-time popular ballad, which is being filmed for Vitagraph by J. Stuart Blackton.

Harry Corn, general manager of Waldorf studios, has started production with Edward J. Le Saint directing, on "The Marriage Market," from the novelette by Evelyn Campbell, with Pauline Garon and Jack Mulhall leading an all-star cast.

Charles "Buck" Jones is starting a new production, as yet untitled, at the Fox studios,

TEAM WORK

MAKING motion pictures is like playing football. Somebody has to call the signals. The team that wins the most games is the one that works as a unit, not as eleven separate individuals. The director is the quarterback of motion pictures. Actors, technical men, cinematographers, and the laboratory must follow his signals and play together. Creating an artistic photoplay necessitates team work from start to finish, particularly in that important interval between camera and screen.

The success of STANDARD FILM LABORATORIES is built on team work—team work not only within the organization, but with those at the studio as well. That's why more and more of the industry's leading producers are depending exclusively upon us for both negative and prints. They realize both of these should be made by the same laboratory. Continuous co-operation of director, cinematographer and laboratory from camera to screen give STANDARD PRINTS their unusual excellence. Their superiority is reflected in the increased satisfaction of exhibitors and distributors using them.

PHOTOPLAY predicted it

PHOTOPLAY MAGAZINE—

OH, what a picture this is going to be! I was on the set the other day and I watched Edward Horton and Ernest Torrence and Louise Dresser—a trio, by the way, of eminent stage artists—playing the great drunk scene from "Ruggles of Red Gap." Well—it was immense, that's all. And the poker scene in which the wild and woolly Egbert from Red Gap wins the polished valet Ruggles from an English lord—don't miss it. I never saw anything in a theater as funny as the scenes I saw being photographed by Jimmie Cruze—of "Covered Wagon" fame.

Just by way of predicting and being able to say "I told you so," watch Edward Horton. If he doesn't run Charles Chaplin and Harold Lloyd a close race later on, we're all wet.

Louise Dresser, who for years was Willie Collier's leading woman, says he's so much like Collier in the way he plays a scene and the way he gets his laughs that she has to shake herself every few minutes not to feel the clock has turned back a few years and she is rehearsing with Collier again.

A PREVIEW of James Cruze's new comedy-drama, "Ruggles of Red Gap," was given at the Florence Theatre, Pasadena, Cal., on August 18 (the first showing anywhere), and here is the report from the theatre:

"It's a box-office knockout! Cruze has turned out another sure-fire success. Picture is riot of fun, and audience howled its glee from start to finish. When Edward Horton as 'Ruggles' called for 'three rousing cheers' in final scene of picture, audience that packed theatre to overflowing joined with actors on the screen in responding.

"Ernest Torrence brings howl of laughter every time he appears on the screen, and Edward Horton will leap into fame over night. Entire cast ideal. Words fail in attempting to describe this comedy classic."

THE SCREEN

THE GREEN GODDESS, with George Arliss, Alice Joyce, Harry T. Morey, David Powell, Jetta Goudal, Ivan Simpson, William Worthington and others, adapted from the play by William Archer, directed by Sidney Olcott; "Temple Devotional," special prologue conceived and executed by Olive Ann Alcorn; musical score by Joseph C. Breil. At the Sam H. Harris Theatre.

A Hindu Beau Brummell.

In the coolness of the comfortable Sam H. Harris Theatre the picturized version of "The Green Goddess," with George Arliss as the Rajah of Kukh, was presented last night before an audience composed of many well-known men and women of the stage and moving picture spheres. This production is one that will give a cachet to photoplays more than any other that has been seen recently, for it is not only beautifully staged, but the acting is excellent and the direction faultless. It is not often that one can ascend to such panygerics about a film, but in this instance it is undoubtedly the wonderful work of a most conscientious actor coupled with that of a skilled and an altrustic director. It is the best film that Mr. Arliss has ever made, and this is saying a great deal, as his "Man Who Played God" was welcomed as something to remember and his "Disraeli" before that scored a marked success.

There are sets in this picture that bring one to Kipling, and one can almost fancy the first flush of an Indian dawn casting a feeble glow on the Indian temples in which the fanatics worship.

The suspense of this production is carried out with exceptional skill, and there were many in the audience who were breathless before the denouement was reached. The sub-titles of the film are on a par with the acting, and they are particularly effective toward the end, where the Rajah of Rukh preserves his undisturbed equanimity, even when the young officer of the Royal Air Force renders his ultimatum.

From the opening sequences showing the lethargic Hindus slowly pulling on a primitive fan with a rope between their toes, to the last words of the Rajah, where he asks Mrs. Crespin to give his love to the children, there is intense interest in the story, one which, of course, lends itself splendidly to a moving picture. Nevertheless it might have happened that a director would have been tempted to take liberties even with such a narrative, but in this instance whatever has been done it is to the advantage of the picture.

Mr. Arliss, posing as the Hindu Rajah, an old Oxonian, speaks through the titles with such preciseness that one leaves the theatre talking in the same perfect fashion. When the Rajah utters a word on the screen one gathers what he is saying. He is an Indian Beau Brummel, tasteful and careful in his attire, what with his monocle, his Hindu robes, his combination suits and his gorgeous turban. He moves his hands, and his fingers, even, to suit the action of the series of scenes, and he always has the white trio at a disadvantage, except possibly where he sets the trap for them with the wireless. Then Harry T. Morey, as Major Crespin, is quick to perceive that the message is a scheme to ascertain whether he knows anything about wireless, and the audience showed their relief when he gave the message to his valet which meant that they were ignorant of the code and the apparatus. The lazy eyelids of the Rajah rose and fell, when he talked, without looking at the oily-appearing Watkins, whose splendid screen acting is one of the features of the film.

Watkins elicits some sympathy in the beginning, as in the play, because he happens to be the only white man in the little kingdom, but afterward when it is known that it is for money he is faithful to his Hindu master, there comes a detestation for the traitor to his own race.

Watkins's hair is plastered over his low forehead, and his mouth is made so shapeless that it is more oblong than anything else. He wears his morning coat and is meticulous in his attention to the slightest sign or wish of the Rajah, who has learned at Oxford how to command in that quiet way respected by the English menial. One can't help thinking of the poor chap alone among all the dusky natives without a single public house to go to to air his aitchless complaints. In one of the titles he tells Major Crespin and Dr. Basil Traherne (David Powell) that he "'olds their lives in the 'ollow of 'is 'and." When he eventually betrays the Major, Mrs. Crespin and Traherne, and is gagged and dropped out of the lofty window of the palace, there was a dramatic effect upon the audience, and even the orchestra drummer dropped his sticks.

He, our good friend Watkins, is seen first trying on some new Jermyn Street hats, which the Rajah has just received. He looks almost consumptive with his hollow chest and bent back, and most uncomfortable when he places on his head a new, glossy silk hat, which goes uncommonly well with his morning coat and striped trousers. The Rajah merely wishes to get an idea of how he, himself, will look in the new head-gear.

The scene where the airplane bearing the Major, his wife and Traherne, crashes within the domains of the Rajah, is pictured with remarkable fidelity, even to the height of the seat from which Mrs. Crespin has to climb to the ground. Confronted by the satin-robed Rajah, who has learned that his brothers are to be executed, Alice Joyce, as Mrs. Crespin, betrays a loathing in her emotions suited to the occasion. She is also very effective in the scene in which she is to watch Traherne being tortured or become the lady of the Rajah's land. She plucks from the Hindu chieftain's belt a small dagger, and is ready to slay herself, which fact is soon discovered by the man who misses so little among his white friends.

Jetta Goudal is fascinating as the servant in the Hindu palace. She is to care for the white woman's wants. Always the Rajah is prepared and has in his dwelling just such clothes as any woman stranded in an airplane would need. Clad in one of the delightful creations, Mrs. Crespin appeals even more to the lustful Hindu. Nevertheless, he tells the men that in barbarous countries the women's quarters are safe.

There are some worthy scenes and settings showing the beggars and birds without the palace walls, and when the dying Major's message brings the squadron of flying machines, the Rajah, between puffs on his fat, long cigarettes, remarks that: "The good Major lied like a gentleman." For the Major in his dying breath had vehemently denied that he had been able to get his message through.

Every player in the cast, and this includes even those who served as extras, have done their bit to make this the best photoplay of its kind that has ever been produced. Perhaps David Powell was a bit stiff, and as usual resorted too much to acting with his hands. But Morey was capital in every sequence, and he ably supported the artistic and careful Mr. Arliss. Here is a photoplay that shows the dawn of a new era in the motion picture world.

The Perfect Setting

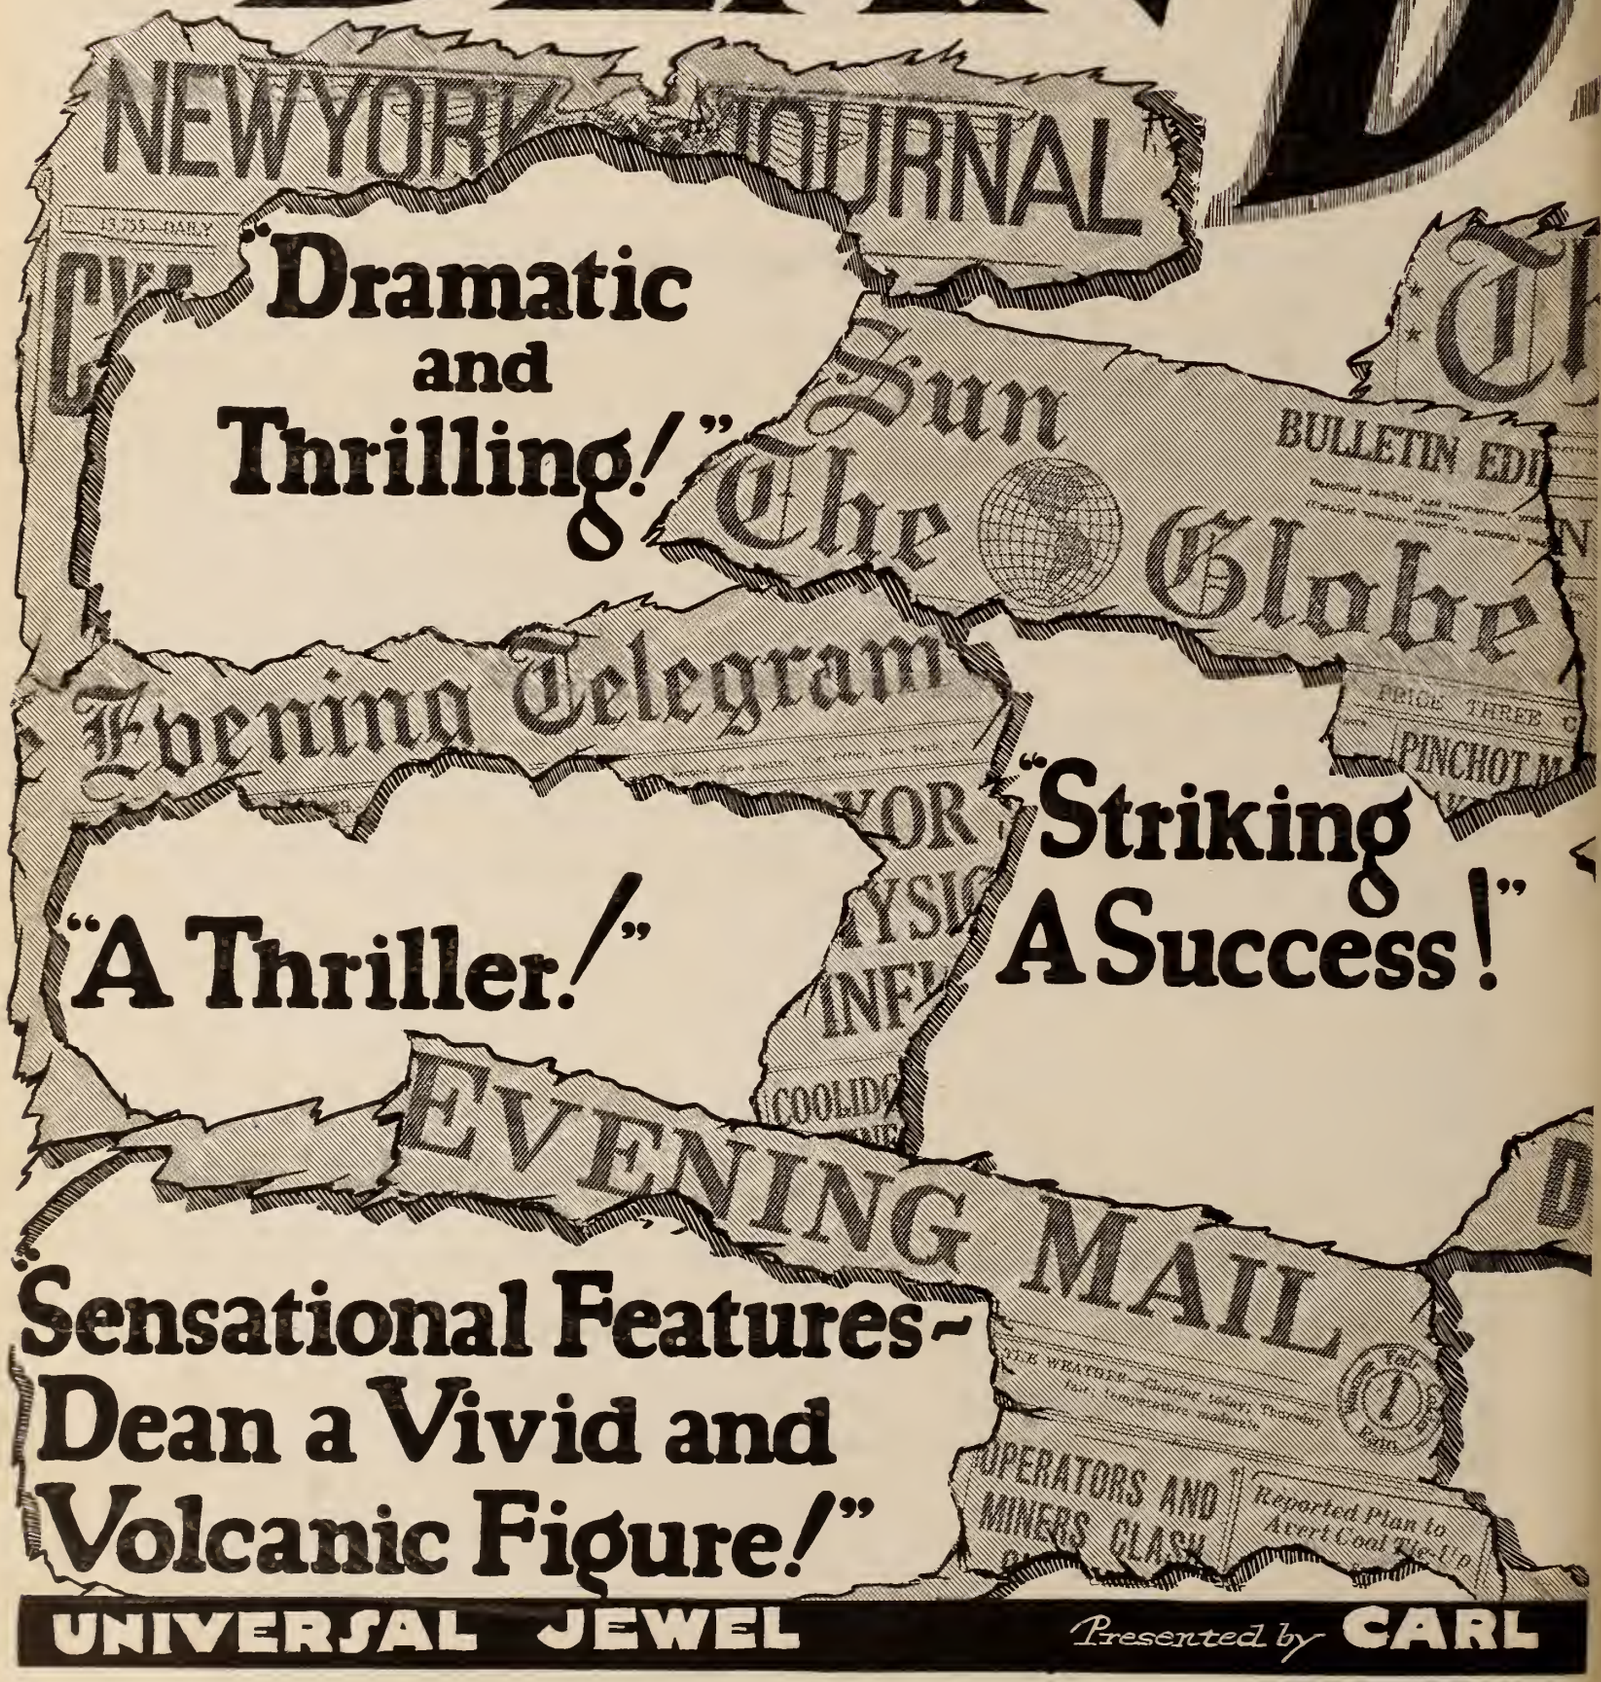
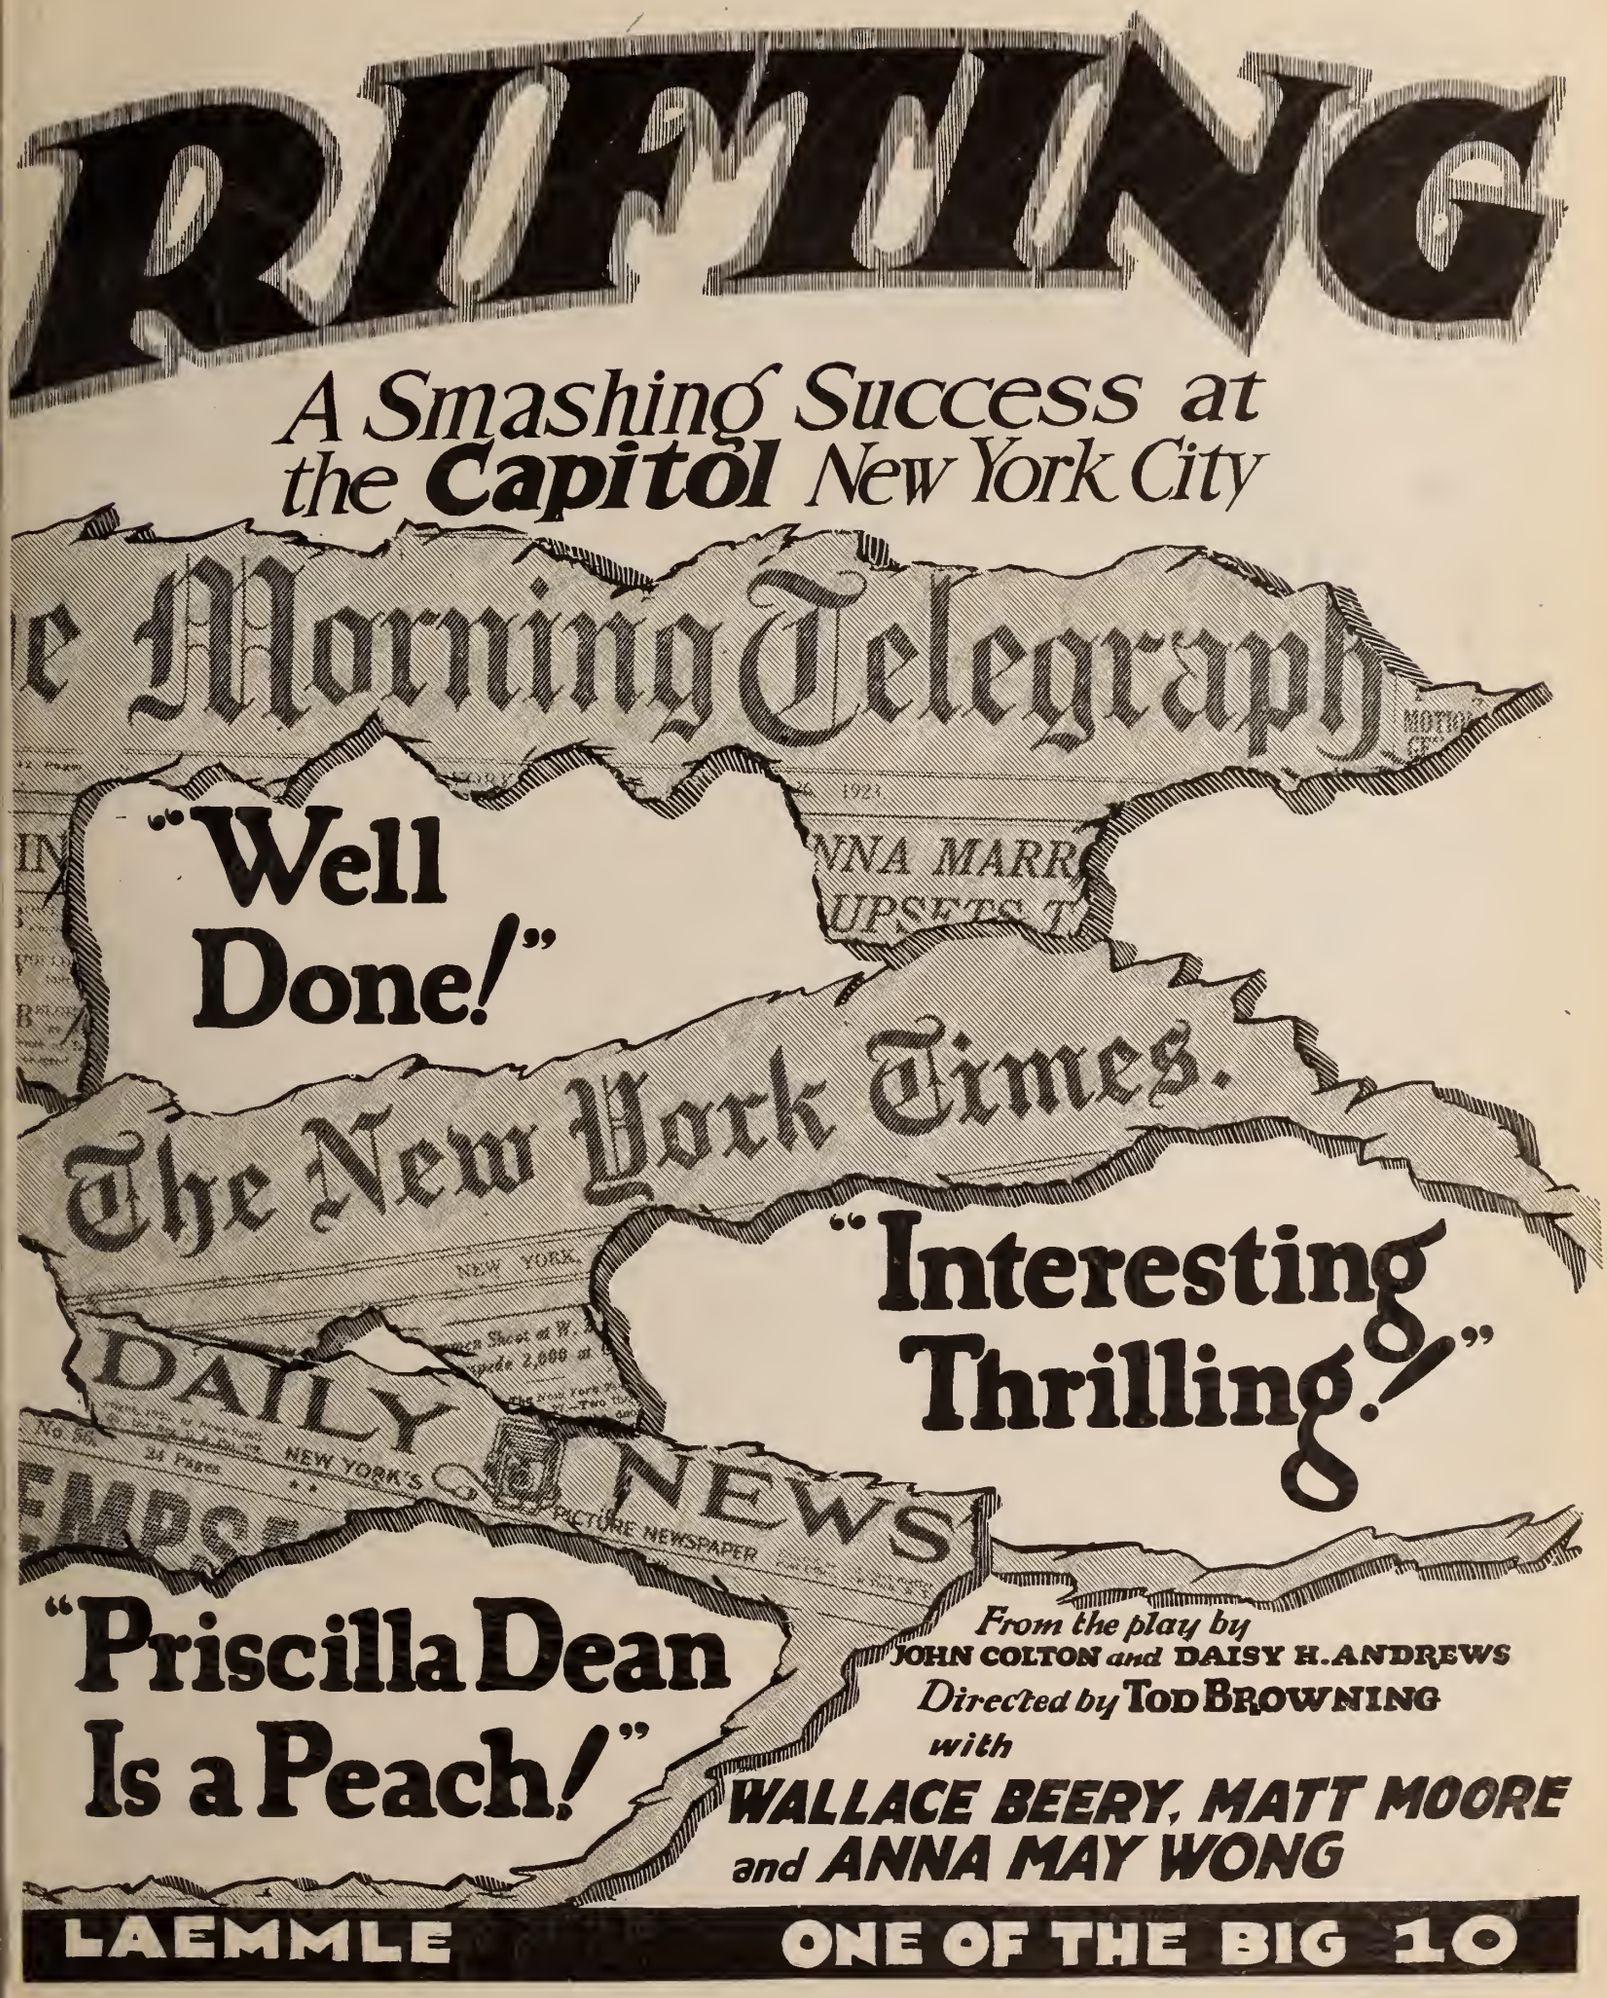
IT is seldom that I have addressed you concerning Vitagraph productions. "Pioneer Trails" is the greatest attraction of the day. It is an epic of the old West and has every element known to picture production that will satisfy the public. No picture dealing with the glorious days of the early West approaches in magnificence the scenic investiture of "Pioneer Trails." No one can appreciate the sensation and danger of travel by the old stage coach until he has seen "Pioneer Trails."

The story of "Pioneer Trails" is in my opinion one of the most dramatic photoplays that have ever been screened. The appeal of the love interest is sure-fire. The characters are living, human, red-blooded people, brought to life out of the past, brave adventurers who carried civilization across this great continent.



The cast is remarkable in that every actor realistically portrays the role to which he is assigned. There is no artificiality in "Pioneer Trails."



I am proud of "Pioneer Trails." I recommend it to you because I know its values. I have put into "Pioneer Trails" the experience of thirty years of picture producing, and I give you my pledge that it is one of the greatest pictures of the year. It is not my custom to praise the productions we have made, but "Pioneer Trails" so far surpasses the screen offerings of today that I want everyone to enjoy the satisfaction that "Pioneer Trails" affords. It is the biggest of all the many winners David Smith has directed, among which are included "Black Beauty," "The Courage of Marge O'Doone," "The Ninety and Nine," and "Masters of Men."

Dear Al.:

You know those "toughest exhibitors in America" that you wrote to the other day. Here's one of them. I want to tell you that because I am tough, I am booking all the Preferred Pictures.

I'm not booking them for any love of you--though I've known you for years and you've helped me make a lot of money.

I'm booking them because I have seen three of them--"The Broken Wing", "Mothers-In-Law" and "April Showers"--and I know that these pictures will get the dough for me.

The future prosperity of the picture business lies in fellows like you and Ben Schulberg, who are making just a few pictures and are selling them at a fair price.

We need new blood in the producing field and I'm watching you grow.

You can count on my help at all times.

Sincerely, M B Shanberg

P.S.--Just had a letter from a friend of mine who visited Schulberg in Los Angeles. If "The Virginian" is all my friend says it is you won't need anybody's help to make you grow.

Screen version of stage success makes crackerjack picture

"THE BROKEN WING"

A Spirited Comedy Drama

Seldom is a motion picture put over with the spirit of the cast and the direction of "The Broken Wing." A happy combination of factors seem to have conspired to make this faithfully screened play one of the most entertaining of the season's pictures.

Preferred Pictures is the producer, and Tom Forman the director Both have spared nothing to make "The Broken Wing" one of those rare films in which the entertainment is as sustained as in any stage production. Their material was not extraordinary. They had a story about an American aviator who was forced to land over the Mexican border, where, naturally, lived the most beautiful of Mexican girls and the most ferocious of Mexican bandits Mr Forman and Preferred Pictures won out by first casting the picture perfectly and then producing it with all those intimate realistic touches which audiences like.

Miriam Cooper and Kenneth Harlan play the leads. Miss Cooper at last finds a role which suits her perfectly and in which she is able to do something other than look at the camera In other words, she is given some material and she does very well by it. Mr. Harlan also shows that he is rapidly advancing in ability as Preferred continues to give him honest acting parts.

The real hit of "The Broken Wing" is Walter Long We all know Mr. Long as a deep-dyed villain, but here he shows that he has considerable comedy talent. He plays his role for laughs and gets them. Edward Brady is another, who in a sleep-walking comedy role, gets full value.

"The Broken Wing" has many sensational aviation scenes, and its real thriller, in which an aeroplane falls through the roof of a house, is realistic to an extreme. The Mexican army looks as a Mexican army ought to look.

Best of all are the titles and the continuity Some of the titles are models for their humor and brevity, and the story moves easily toward its unexpected conclusion.

"The Broken Wing" is a feather in the cap of Preferred Again the screen has shown that when a director knows how to adapt a play, the play does not necessarily lose any of its flavor.

All sorts of fans will like "The Broken Wing." It is a winner

Going like wildfire everywhere and fairly mopping up for all Exhibitors

The finest two-reel series I have ever run. Business increases on each showing. Have shown four rounds, and am more than satisfied. Will guarantee these to please. Max Drefke, Empress Theatre, Cherokee, Iowa.

—o—

This two-reeler hits a new spot in entertainment. It is different in every respect. Makes a wonderful Saturday picture in a short show, and all classes eat it up; even the ladies and younger girls ask for more of it. It is a clean, entertaining type of picture that helps the business. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

—o—

A jim dandy picture that a Saturday audience fairly ate up. It's clean cut, convincing, probable, and has your sympathy every minute. More power to the man making them, as they are a relief from some of this heavy stuff. Ben L. Morris, Olympic Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

—o—

A regular series. I would buy this series if I were you, regardless of where you're located. Have always good attendance on these. E. E. Bair, State Theatre, Uhrichsville, Ohio.

—o—

Just finished playing round one, and I firmly believe they are going to go over fine. If so it will be a lot better than running a serial, as each chapter is more complete. H. M. Retz, Strand Theatre, Lamont, Iowa.

Just finished showing round five, and must say this is an exceptionally good series. The characters are fine, all of them. Notice this: The women like this series, and tell us they do, and naturally the men all like the boxing. Draws good. Chancellor Bros., Dreamland Theatre, Arcanum, Ohio.

Seemed to take immense. Played it with two-reel Dan Mason Plum Center comedy screen stars and Movie Chats. They sure enjoyed this six-reel program. Dr. F. M. Childs, Cozy Theatre, Villisca, Ia.

First chapter picture that ever held up for me. Just played the third round, and business increasing. Looks very much like a winner. Lots of comedy, lots of action, and a little love. George O'Hara has excellent support. Photography fine. J. C. Jenkins, Auditorium Theatre, Neligh, Nebr.

O'Hara does wonderful work. Now on ninth round. The best two-reel subjects I ever saw when it comes to pleasing the masses. Used newspaper. Had good attendance. E. E. Bair, State Theatre, Uhrichsville, Ohio.

We are on the eighth round, and believe me they have held up well. Book them and boost them. Used lobby. O. W. Harris, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Okla.

The EDUCATIONAL PICTURES program for the season just beginning will include the cream of two-reel comedy entertainment. Many of these pictures are sure to be finer amusement than the longer features on the same program.

Watch for the new Christie Comedies, Mermaid Comedies (Jack White Productions), Hamilton Comedies, Jack White Comedy Specials, Tuxedo Comedies and Juvenile Comedies.

You will find keen enjoyment, too, in such fine shorter pictures as Cameo Comedies, Lyman H. Howe's Hodge-Podge, Wilderness Tales by Robert C. Bruce, the "Sing Them Again" series and the twice-a-week news reel, Kinograms.

All will carry the EDUCATIONAL PICTURES trade-mark on the film and on lobby displays.

Motion Picture News:

Another "Intolerance" has reached the screen. Here is a production which for massiveness of settings, masterful handling of tremendous crowds, exquisite photography and convincing character portrayals will stand comparison with the best in American film craftsmanship. Merra Varra is really wonderfully well done.

We have never seen a picture in which so many persons appear in the crowd scenes. Will certainly make American audiences sit up and take notice.

Maeterlinck's story is treated with fine appreciation and sympathy. It is first class entertainment on a lavish scale. Stands out with the best—a big picture in every way.

Exhibitors Herald:

"Monna Vanna" is the story of a woman's sacrifice. Thousands of persons took part in this production and the settings are some of the most elaborate ever used in a picture. The battle scenes, especially the scenes depicting the besieging army, the attack on the city and the final relief of Pisa are realistically erected. There is much excellent acting by the principals. Lee Parry was specially pleasing as Monna Vanna.

THE MIDNIGHT ALARM

From "Screen Opinions," Chicago

"CLASS A-c 90%. You can boost this picture for a special. It's the kind that should draw big in any locality."

From "New York Daily News"

"'THE Midnight Alarm' shows one of the most realistic film fires we have ever seen. Then, too, there's an excellent exhibition of quick fire work—from bed to burning building as it were—and a spectacular train crash."

From "Exhibitors Herald"

"'THE Midnight Alarm' provides excellent entertainment. Here is a fast moving story filled with dramatic action and suspense that should appeal to any theatre audience. It tells an absorbing story that is punctuated by spectacular scenes and punches that hold the interest unfalteringly. There is a great fire scene that is finely done; the wreck of an automobile by a train, and a suspenseful moment when a great drawbridge is lowered just in time to keep a passenger train from plunging into the river. But the production boasts more than the spectacular elements. The story runs along a vein of considerable human interest revolving about the search of an old couple for their long lost granddaughter."

From "Motion Picture News"

"THE picture carries action and incident all the way."

From "Moving Picture World"

"IT'S chock full of real action, and a midnight fire that is without a doubt the best of its kind this writer has seen. 'The Midnight Alarm' is a clever piece of work. The thrillers are well handled throughout and will keep your audience on the alert all the while for there is plenty happening in this picture. The frustrated attempt at wrecking the train at the trestle, following a villainous attack on the keeper of the switch house, is a knockout, and the surprise occasioned when the speeding train mounts the trestle just as the latter has been lowered would have made the 'nigger heaven' gods of yesteryear tear the house to pieces with excitement."

From "New York Evening Journal"

"THERE is a great fire with the heroine locked in a safe. The filming is on an elaborate scale and much attention was given to many scenes, particularly that of the fire."

From "New York American"

"'THE Midnight Alarm' was set for action and it rings the bell."

From "Exhibitors Trade Review"

"'THE Midnight Alarm' responds to the demand by a very large section of movie patrons for a 'sure-enough' thriller which breezes along at cyclonic pace, makes a direct appeal to the most elemental emotions and winds up by enveloping hero and heroine in a blaze of glory. The 'blaze' must be taken literally for the fire in which the villain meets his well-deserved doom at the close registers as one of the most spectacular episodes in a picture which fairly vibrates with 'big punch' scenes as exemplified by the attempt to send a limited express crashing to the bottom of a trestle, an auto wrecked by a train and other exciting bits of realism."

From "New York Tribune"

"OUR advice is, do not miss 'The Midnight Alarm.'"

From "The Film Daily"

"THE picture is 'sure-fire' entertainment. Holds a decided appeal for the general public."

Road Shows

WHEN film folks meet these days, the topic of conversation invariably turns to the road shows that are to go out this season. It is definitely decided that several of the biggest or at least the most expensive productions of the year are to be presented in this manner.

How they will fare—whether or not the policy is just or advisable is being thoughtfully discussed. There are those who argue for and those whose contentions are against the plan and the latter are not all exhibitors either.

The trouble is, that most of those who express their opinions, either for or against, are talking on theory and not from experience.

Those who ought to know considerable about road showing a picture aren't saying much. George Kleine who started the vogue years ago does venture the laconic, "They'll know more about it before they get through," but William Fox, Marcus Loew, D. W. Griffith and F. J. Godsol aren't volunteering information and each has had his fling at the road show.

So it remains for the theorists to make the predictions and draw the conclusions. From these we get opinions as follows.

The road show seems to fit into the scheme of things in the key cities and the very small towns —say up to 5000.

The reason why the extended run is satisfactory in the big town is obvious. The producer spends a lot of money selling the picture to the public. It gets prestige in a dozen different ways and there are always plenty of prospective customers remaining when it goes in at the regular picture houses. In the small towns the picture theatre, and there are no other houses, welcome the opportunity to play a big picture on percentage. It is the only way the small town man can afford to run it and he gets more net profit than he would on a program attraction, booked on a rental basis.

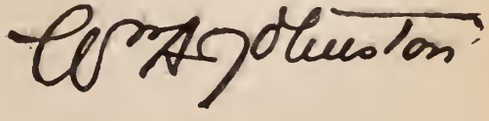
But there are several thousand cities of the in-between size where the road show scheme—apparently—doesn't fit in so well and these are the towns where the bulk of the gross on any picture, regardless of its plan of distribution, must be obtained.

Take a city of fifty thousand inhabitants. The road show plays the legitimate theatre for a week against the competition of the picture houses which most certainly have gone to extra effort to build up strong bills.



If the producer can play to 5000 admissions under such conditions he is doing well. People aren't used to going to the legitimate house for pictures. The theatre is probably not well suited for the purpose and possibly the location is not the best. There are a dozen reasons why the road show attraction is at a disadvantage.

Then the overhead is high. Exploitation alone has cost real money.

Supposing the gross is much greater than the best first run price that could be obtained, has the engagement netted a satisfactory sum and will the regular picture house—several months later—buy the show after the cream has been taken off?

The theorists say he won't and, on theory also, we are inclined to agree with them.

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

FRANK TILLEY, the editor of Kinematograph Weekly, the British trade paper, has returned to London and uses a rapier-like pen in his frank discussion of American production methods. He devotes two pages to his recent article and starts off by saying that "American supremacy in production is a bubble which floats highly colored because it has never yet had its real hollowness challenged."

Other paragraphs which carry a vitriolic flavor: "There are several factors which have produced America's commercial and mechanical supremacy in picture production; a large, ignorant, easily pleased population, mechanical inventiveness, and the gambling spirit. There are several factors which equally may provide the failure of American production—save for the masses of her own market. Among these factors are dishonesty, lack of culture, internal (one may say even family—or racial) politics, and an elaborate system of unsound finance."

"So far as mechanics are concerned, they have everything which makes for success. So far as art, drama, or knowledge of realities is concerned, they have practically nothing. Their production is built on the intellectual level of the lowest common factor in American life, on a lavish expenditure of money on non-essentials, on material elaboration—and on little else."

"The moment is here, now, for Britain to adopt all the mechanical perfections which America has produced, to add to them our racial culture and comparative artistry and honesty and to force America to keep her product for her own consumption or else to give us something better."

"The second reason for the predominance of the American picture is the efficiency with which it is marketed. Here the American is in his true element, for as a salesman he shines. Particularly in the art of selling to the public something which it does not know it wants."

"Great Britain can be brought into line commercially with that of America and can, at the same time, outdo it artistically. Given certain conditions which it will not be easy to achieve, it can be done. But not by going after the American market. Only America can—and should—make the kind of pictures which the bulk of the American public appears to want."

"There is the rest of the world, particularly that part of the world called Europe, and that other part of the world called the British Dominions Overseas, where there still exist some traces of artistic appreciation, some remnants of culture, some fragments of tradition and a public not entirely composed of the sweepings of other nations."

Oh, come now Mr. Tilley, it isn't so bad as all that. You must know that there is a still small voice in America singing in the wilderness for its ideals. Art cannot bound forth in the short evolution of the photoplay. And Art must not be confused with Commerce. Since hundreds of thousands are enlisted in the service of the industry, it must be catalogued as a huge commercial enterprise. But the powers who control this big industrial giant are trying mightily to incorporate artistic standards and ideals.

Several of Britain's men of letters—the cultural few of which you write—are busy at the claptrap of which you also write. They are realizing upon its commercial values. And dozens of your players are here and have interpreted—are still interpreting—the Pollannas and Prince Charmings.

We agree with Mr. Tilley that the realities are seldom expressed on the American screen. When they are expressed they are appreciated by the cultured minority. Human nature is pretty much alike the world over. The mass mind is in the majority. It thinks in the simplest terms—along a straight line to a given point. The masses in London have always patronized Drury Lane. It has sent the wildest melodramas to America to appeal to the mass mind here. And the masses have enjoyed them.

Incidentally, the masses patronize the motion picture. They believe that little Eva died and went to heaven—because they saw the ascension. Being in the majority, pictures must be made for them, stories written for them and circuses parade for them. The voice of Art will be practically silenced until populous nations learn something of birth control.

AN informal luncheon was tendered Lon Chaney by Universal last Saturday at the Astor—the guests being representatives of the Trade Press. He will remain to attend the premiere showing of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," in which he plays the title role—and to make a personal appearance September 6 in connection with the Veterans' Mountain Camp benefit night staged by the American Legion.

Chaney was met at the station by a band which escorted him and a couple of Fifth Avenue buses occupied by Universal executives to the hotel. It is his first visit to New York in several years and during his stay in the city he expects to spend his spare time seeing the best of the Broadway hits—especially those of the ultra-modern types of serious drama and those offering the best character portrayals.

Lon Chaney, from a closeup study of him across the table, impresses us as a sincere, regular fellow—a man who knows how to mix—who is never the poseur—who delights in getting on a common level with everyone with whom he comes in contact.

The time passed quickly for Chaney knows how to talk. His sincere interest in his art of screen characterization and his dignified but human viewpoint of the screen made a distinct impression. He won special favor with those present for his high opinion of his motion picture public.

THE Fort Smith, Arkansas, Southwest American pays a fine tribute to the screen. Its editorial of August 18th is in line with the industry's hopes of serving humanity from other than the entertainment point of view. We quote:

"It is said that for the first time in the history of any country the complete official story of the life and activities of a ruler have been recorded on the film. The death of Mr. Harding reveals that he is the first president of the United States whose chronicle of public events has been recorded for posterity. There is to this information an advance notice of what may be expected for the future. The motion picture industry has come to have a most prominent place in our national life. We are growing accustomed to see the public events of the day recorded on the screen. Circumstances of national and international interest are given to us within a few hours or at most within a few days of their actual happening. Great and memorable events such as always transpire in the life of a chief executive of the republic are recorded for posterity. Children of tomorrow will know of the affairs of their country by means of the screen history which will be preserved for future generations through the magic of this new wonder of the ages. History unquestionably will be taught by means of the picture in the not distant future.

It is essential that having come into possession of this marvelous means, we may employ it in a practical manner, in order that the next generation shall know how we looked, acted and moved while conducting our personal as well as our national affairs in this present age. The motion picture has come to stay, and to be improved upon as the years progress continue."

HERE'S one that pierces the depths of zero in blue law propaganda, as told in an excerpt from the Kansas City Star:

"For cautious and painstaking vigilance against possible dangers to the moral welfare of the Kansas public, A. B. Carney, vice-chairman of the board of administration, wins the wicker gravy bowl. Mr. Carney, it is reported, has written to the state board of film review asking them not to permit the exhibition in Kansas of the film showing the athletic activities of the young inmates of the Boys' Industrial school near Topeka. He gave as his reason that the athletic activities as shown in the film might lead the boys to commit crimes in order to be sent there."

ISN'T it barely possible that with the success of the canines, Strongheart and Rin-Tin-Tin, in reaching stardom—that the film-struck dogs will make the long pilgrimage over the Lincoln Highway in search of screen fame and tasty edibles—imitating the film-struck girls who have hit the long trail to Hollywood?

HARRY CARR, who formerly edited pictures for D. W. Griffith, but who is now on the Coast doing free-lance work, has some interesting things to say in the current Motion Picture Magazine. He makes it plain that the day of the namby-pamby star is over—that with the exception of Lloyd, Chaplin, Fairbanks, Mary Pickford, Norma Talmadge and a few others who are institutions more than they are stars—companies are relying more upon the story and a well balanced cast.

In a paragraph or two of an interview with Jesse L. Lasky, the latter brings out that Paramount is placing the majority of its celebrities in well balanced casts, leaving a quartette to be really featured—Gloria Swanson, Pola Negri, Thomas Meighan and Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.

Mr. Carr, through his observations, makes it plain that the screen public has tired of the sugar-coated type of story. Which means that several of the namby-pamby school of actresses are beginning to see Oblivion on the road ahead.

THE week of Labor Day ushers in some big ones for New York. Look these over: "The Silent Command" at the Central; "The White Sister" at the 44th Street; "If Winter Comes" at the Times Square; "Rosita" at the Lyric; "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" at the Astor. "The Covered Wagon" continues at the Criterion; "The Green Goddess" remains at the Sam H. Harris, and "Merry Go Round" will doubtless find refuge in some Broadway theatre for a few weeks more. Meanwhile Harold Lloyd will decorate the Strand canvas with his latest, "Why Worry," and Mae Murray will entertain the folks who visit the Capitol with "The French Doll." Up at the Cosmopolitan Marion Davies should linger indefinitely with "Little Old New York." Certainly enough variety of good ones to go around.

ORANGE, AUSTRALIA, a country town with a population of 7,000, has won the race for the honor of being the first community outside of the United States to present "The Covered Wagon" to the motion picture public. The feature, widely exploited, attracted attention throughout the Antipodes. It is interesting to know that the town of Orange marked the spot where the first gold was discovered, years ago, under circumstances somewhat similar to the trek across the country by the American pioneers.

The Orange showing was in the nature of a try-out—which was completely successful. The feature will open at Melbourne on September 8 for an indefinite run and premieres for Sydney and other Australian cities will follow shortly.

COMMENTS from various quarters during the past week have confirmed our own high esteem of the unusually attractive Pathe insert which appeared in the September 1st issue of the News. Colorful to the eye yet forceful in its business message to the reader, the display combines to a rare degree an efficiency of selling copy with an artistic quality of design and compilation. We congratulate Pathe and in the same breath compliment the salesman and artist behind the display, P. A. Parsons. We might add that "P. A." is by every right of service the dean of the industry's advertising managers. His association with Pathe has continued over a period of ten years, which we believe sets a record. It is due mainly to his efforts that Pathe's displays have won and sustained a reputation for sane, effective, consistent advertising.

Cleveland Operators Agree to Small Increase

The Cleveland Motion Picture Projection Machine Operators, Local No. 160, and the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' League have agreed upon a new wage scale, wbich gives the operators an increase of seven and one-half per cent. They asked for an increase of seventeen per cent. The new agreement extends over a period of two years, from September 1, 1923, to August 31, 1925.

The local scale is a sliding one, based upon the number of seats in a tbeatre, and the number of hours the show is operated. The minimum under this plan is $48.38, as against the former scale of $45. The agreement otherwise stands the same in detail as last year's agreement. The exhibitor committee of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' League wbich effected this settlement consisted of D. L. Schumann, cbairman; B. I. Brody, J. V. Wolcott, O. E. Bellas, F. R. Nolan, Max Lefkowitz, John Urbanski, P. E. Essick, E. A. Ptak and M. B. Horwitz.

Russia Lifts Importation Embargo on Films

Bogus Check Passer Posing as George Melford, Fleeces Towns in Washington State

POSING as George Melford, the Famous Players-Laskv director, a bogus check artist recently visited several cities in Washington State, and after passing some of his worthless checks in Kelso, Longview and Olympia hit out for parts unknown with a Burns detective on his trail, according to announcement made in Seattle.

While the imitation director was fleeing from the Washington territory, the "hot air" he peddled about immortalizing Longview with scenes in "The Long Trail," a Rex Beach picture, was still going the rounds of the press of the United States. When the imposter arrived in Olympia, he announced that he was accompanied by Jack Holt, Jacqueline Logan and fifteen other Famous Players actors and production experts. They were to shoot scenes for Beach's "The Iron Trail" in Olympia and Longview.

In Olympia, the "director" bought several hundred dollars' worth of gifts, presenting a check signed "George Melford" and drawn on a bank in Hollywood. Following this, Longview broke into the public print with word that George Melford, the noted director, was there with a cast of players headed by Holt and Miss Logan, to produce a picture which would be filmed almost entirely in the new city and would use most of the town's population as "extras."

Longview merchants were notified from Olympia that a bogus check artist was about, but the information was received too late by some of the firms, which were victimized before the hoax was discovered.

Following the almost as spectacular disappearance of the man, it was learned that notices was mailed out from Hollywood to all motion picture exhibitors in the West some three months ago, warning that a bad check artist was working the Western territory, posing as a director about to take local scenes with his company.

Western police and national detectives are now on the trail of the imposter, who left Washington without a trace and was believed to be heading toward the Middle West.

U. S. Checking Up Missouri, Illinois Returns

A CHECK of the receipts of motion picture theatres in Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois has been begun by a field force of fifty agents from the United States Internal Revenue Department. The survey is being made to determine whether any of the theatres have held out on their Uncle Samuel.

The suspicion that some of the theatres "doctored" their tax returns resulted from a comparison of the box office returns on some super attractions playing in the smaller towns of the St. Louis district with what the picture did in St. Louis and other metropolitan points.

Pictures that played to very large business in large cities showed a decided falling off in drawing power in the smaller towns, especially when playing upon a percentage basis, it is said.

It is said that measured from the tax returns made to the Government some of these supers playing on a 50 to 65 per cent basis drew no more business than cheap film sold on a straight rental.

Balaban, Katz Corporation Formed In Delaware

The Balaban and Katz Corporation has been formed in Dover, Del., with an announced capitalization of $9,620,000. According to advices received in New York it is likely that this Chicago concern of exhibitors will launcb their proposed stock issue under tbis name.

The plan is said to be the consolidation of the Cbicago, Tivoli, Riviera and Central Park theatres under one corporate name, with First National Pictures, Inc., of Illinois, and Second National Film Company of Illinois included in the consolidated unit. It is said the stock issue will be listed on both Cbicago and New York exchanges.

There will probably be an issue of 250,000 shares of common stock, 50,000 of wbich will be offered to the public at $50 a share, while the remaining 200,000 sbares are to be exchanged for stock in tbe existing four tbeatre companies.

Washington Ambassador Is Near Completion

The final work of interior embellishment and lobby decoration is rapidly nearing its end at Crandall's new Ambassador theatre in Washington. This new addition to the chain of Crandall theatres in Wasbington and vicinity will be recognized as one of tbe most beautiful, most substantial and most comfortable playhouses in America when thrown open to the public. It is the present expectation to open the Ambassador early in September.

Warn Kansas Exhibitors on Tax Entries

A warning has been sent out by C. E. Cook, business manager of the M. P. T. O., Kansas, urging all exhibitors to use precaution in entering ticket sales and government tax in their books.

Another warning also has been sent over the State of Kansas for exhibitors to be on the lookout for a man representing himself to be Edward M. Whaley, a representative of the Rocky Mountain Scenic Studios of Denver, Col.

T. O. D. C. to Start Activities Soon

To Operate From Thirty Exchanges

THE Theatre Owners Distributing Corporation, created for the purpose of supplying all theatres with motion pictures of merit under equitable contract arrangements, will begin an active participation in the field of distribution during October.

According to the statement of W. A. True, president of the organization, it will operate from over 30 exchange centers, "not only on the basis of service and efficient handling, but will absolutely eliminate the evil whereby exhibitors are compelled to book their attractions under the 'sight unseen' system, months in advance of showings in the theatres.

"We know," says Mr. True, "that the exhibitors, who are in constant touch with the public, are very frequently unable to supply the public with what it wants under the present system of distribution. We know that film rentals, which have been climbing higher and higher are reaching the point where a further increase will prove a serious boomerang to the entire industry. We know that the present operation of the industry greatly hampers the independent producer of reputable pictures as well as the independent author, director and artist.

To Make Definite Stand

"Therefore, the exhibitors — the actual theatre owners of America—in forming the Theatre Owners' Distributing Corporation, intend to make a definite stand not only for themselves, but for the public, the independent producers and the economic good of the entire industry.

"We believe that our success holds, for the future as well as the past, on the fundamental policy of healthy entertainment at small prices. We protest against the folly of $2 admissions and the attitude of many of the national distributors in following the policy of 'all the traffic will bear.' The exhibitors themselves know the attitude of the public and the exhibitors will, through this, their own distributing organization, make a determined effort to secure and present worthy attractions at reasonable prices.

"It is entirely fitting that the theatre owners should do this. Witness the formation and the successful operation of a similar co-operative plan by the California fruit growers. Incidentally, the independent producers of California sent a committee to the National Convention of the M. P. T. O. A. to plead for just such a channel of distribution as the one we have formed.

"The Theatre Owners' Distributing Corporation has proceeded constructively and carefully building up toward the time when this step could be taken. We are now ready. Our sales organization will be second to none in the United States. Our distributing service will be fully manned and equipped. Our policy will offer to all producers an exhibitor owned and controlled distributing service under the same equitable business advantage that we, as theatre owners, expect for ourselves."

Commenting upon Mr. True's announcement, Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, said: "The need of a theatre owners distributing corporation found expression in 1921 at our Minneapolis Convention. At that time a resolution was passed authoriizng the board of directors to investigate the situation relative to the formation of such a body.

The new B. P. Schulberg studios n Los Angeles, which will be extensively remodeled and enlarged.

"At the Washington Convention in May, 1922, the committee on business relations submitted a unanimous report, which was likewise unanimously adopted by the convention, urging the board of directors and officers to continue its activities in the matter. The board of directors unanimously resolved that as the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America was purely a membership organization, a separate organization be created for the distribution of picture.

History of Plan

"Following this decision, the Theatre Owners' Distributing Corporation was formed in December, 1922. Both at Minneapolis and Washington, the M. P. T. O. A. gave notice to the producers and the trade generally that relief was needed in distribution. These interests have seemingly given no heed to this public notice by the theatre owners and conditions have grown worse. The time for resolutions and conferences has passed. The Theatre Owners' Distributing Corporation will now take a hand. Its principles are sound. Its operation will be efficient and I am absolutely convinced that it will prove a boon to the theatre owners, the independent producers and the public. It is a logical development in the economic history of the motion picture industry."

The officers of the new organization are W. A. True, president; Harry Davis, vice president; L. J. Dittmar, treasurer; W. D. Burford, secretary, and Sydney S. Cohen, chairman of the board of directors. Mr. Cohen has for four years been president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. Mr. Davis, Mr. Burford and Mr. True are members of the National Board of Directors of the organization. Mr. Dittmar is president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Kentucky. Other representative theatre owners from every section of the country are behind the movement, including the presidents of many state organizations, notably: R. E. Woodhull, of New Jersey; Martin G. Smith, of Ohio; Fred Seegert, of Wisconsin; A. R. Pramer, of Nebraska; Eli W. Collins, of Arkansas; Joseph W. Walsh, of Connecticut; Frank G. Heller, of Indiana; Merle Davis, of Montana; E. M. Fay, of Rhode Island; Howard Smith, of Western New York; David Adams, of New Hampshire; Charles Sears, of Missouri. Others include William Bender, National Treasurer of the M. P. T. O. A., and Glenn Harper, Secretary, M. P. T. O. of Southern California and Arizona.

Other members of the National Board of Directors of the M. P. T. O. A. interested are C. E. Whitehurst, C. A. Lick, G. G. Schmidt and also Joseph Mogler, first vice president of the M. P. T. O. A.; L. M. Rubens, vice president, M. P. T. O. of Illinois; Joseph Phillips, executive committee member of M. P. T. O. A. from Texas; Thomas Arthur, from Iowa; Robert Codd, from Michigan; S. H. Borisky, from Tennessee; Ray Grombacker, from Washington; Samuel Perlin, Executive Committee Member at Large, from Northern California and Nevada; Fred Dolle, Executive Committee member from Kentucky; E. H. Bingham, from Indiana; W. W. Watts, from Illinois; W. C. Hunt, vice president, M. P. T. O. of New Jersey; A. B. Momand, secretary, M. P. T. O. of Oklahoma, and others.

"Three o'Clock in Morning" Pleases at Preview

"Three o'Clock in the Morning" is the title which has been given the first of the C. C. Burr productions starring Constance Binney for distribution by Associated Exhibitors. Executives of Associated had their first view this week of the finished picture and expressed extreme satisfaction with it.

"Three o'Clock in the Morning" has in its cast Mary Carr, Richard Thorpe, Edmund Breese, and Edna May Oliver.

The production is said to closely follow the lines of Mann Page's popular story, "Clipped Wings," from which it was adapted.

Trust Charge May Hit Film Board

Oversold Exhibitor Asks Hearing After Demands Are Made for $1,200 in Deposits

A MUDDLE which appears headed for serious results, either the dissolution of the Kansas City Film Board of Trade or an injunction prohibiting several of the largest film companies from serving exhibitors of Kansas, developed this week in Kansas City and Topeka, Kan., the state capitol.

The situation, which is the climax of a long series of events occurring between W. B. Rogers of the Columbian theatre, Wamega, Kan., and exchanges of Kansas City and exchange members of the joint board of arbitration, may result in the filing of a charge under the Kansas anti-trust law by Charles B. Griffith, attorney general of Kansas, against exchange members of the film board.

The facts, briefly, are: Mr. Rogers, who was oversold on pictures, received notices from time to time to appear at hearings of the joint board of arbitration, but did not do so. Finally registered letters, mailed on the same date, from several film companies, demanding deposits approximating $1,200 and threatening discontinuance of service, were received by Mr. Rogers. Mr. Rogers' next step was to retain an attorney and attend a joint board of arbitration meeting in Kansas City, which brought no concise results. Mr. Rogers then went to Topeka, retained an attorney there, and requested of Attorney General Griffith that charges under the anti-trust statute be filed agains exchange members of the Kansas City Film Board of Trade.

Before consenting to use the name of the state in such a charge, Mr. Griffith requested a preliminary hearing in order to ascertain the merits of the case. The meeting was held in Topeka Tuesday and it is the consensus of opinion among non-participating exhibitors who attended the hearing that Mr. Griffith may be inclined to file the charge under the name of the state of Kansas. The injunction, if granted even temporarily, would be disastrous to every theatre owner of Kansas, while the dissolution of the film board would be a blow to the exchanges, as they are functioning smoothly at present.

Universal Takes Lease on Kansas City House

Announcement was made this week that Samuel Harding, owner of the Liberty theatre, one of Kansas City's downtown first-run houses, had leased the theatre to the Universal Film Company of New York for a period of five months. The company is planning to show some of its biggest productions in the house, which now is being remodeled, it is said, as well as pictures from other companies. Lee D. Balsly, Universal branch manager at Kansas City, will become house manager of the Liberty, which reopened August 31.

Kirkwood Seriously Injured in Accident

JAMES KIRKWOOD, who has the star role in "Wild Oranges" for Goldwyn, was reported in a very critical condition at the Beverley Hills Hotel in Hollywood on August 28 as a result of a fall from a horse.

Advices to Motion Picture News from its West Coast office said that Mr. Kirkwood was suffering from concussion of the brain, and that he had been unconscious since the accident, which occurred on Saturday, August 25. Lila Lee, wife of Mr. Kirkwood, is at his bedside.

King Vidor, director, and the company filming "Wild Oranges" had only recently returned to Hollywood from Florida, where scenes for the picture were made. Work on the production has been held up as a result of the injury sustained by the star.

On August 29, Mr. Kirkwood was reported improved, but it was said a long period of recovery would be necessary. It was also reported in Los Angeles that Goldwyn would scrap the film "Wild Oranges," upon which $75,000 had been spent, retaking with a substitute for Mr. Kirkwood opposite Virginia Valli.

Alleged Swindler Finds Missouri Victim

Frank Blatti of Harwood, Mo., reported to the St. Louis police on Friday, August 24, that he had apparently been swindled out of $300 plus expenses from St. Louis to Arkansas by a man representing himself to be a motion picture distributor.

Blatti claims that he answered an advertisement in a St. Louis newspaper offering a "good position to a bright young man with $300." In Room 401 of the New Plaza Hotel he signed a contract to accompany a film entitled "Yankee Doodle in Berlin" over a route in Arkansas and Texas mapped out by his employers. He paid a deposit of $300 as good faith. He alleges he was to have received a salary of $200 a month.

When he reached Helena, Ark., he received his first shock when he discovered that the first theatre on his calling list had been closed for three years.

Detectives assigned to the case arrested John F. Le Roy, 37 years old, in the room named in the advertisement. Le Roy denied making the arrangement with Blatti, saying that his roommate known to him as Farmer had engaged Blatti.

London Opens Luxurious New Picture House

London opened its biggest and most luxurious cinema, the Shepherd's Bush Pavilion, which presented its first picture on August 15th. The house was built by I. Davis, owner of the Marble Arch and Shaftsbury Pavilion. Norma Talmadge in "Within the Law."

Two and a half years were taken to complete the new theatre, which accommodates 3,000, with standing room for 2,000 more. Prior to making his plans, Mr. Davis toured the United States, where he inspected the leading theatres in the larger cities in an effort to discover their best points, all of which were later embodied in the big London playhouse. Among the unusual features of the theatre are a $50,000 electrically controlled organ and a projection room located under the balcony close to the stage.

Papers Change Attitude on Pictures

By Lynde Denig, of First National

LYNDE DENIG, publicity editor for First National, has just completed a trip through the East, South and Middle West, made for the purpose of studying publicity conditions in the key cities. His observations of the responsiveness on the part of newspapers are revealed in the following article.—EDITOR'S NOTE.

Conservative newspapers in the key cities are opening their columns more freely to motion pictures.

Visiting the distribution centers in the East, Middle West, and South affords ample evidence of an increasingly receptive attitude.

Many are running daily columns conducted by photoplay editors who do not sit in the ante-room of the advertising office; others are contemplating the launching of such columns and the enlargement of weekly departments with the opening of the fall season.

Why this change of front which means new publicity channels the value of which can scarcely be overestimated—papers like the Kansas City Star, morning, evening and Sunday, with its wonderful circulation of approximately 250,000, dominating an entire section of the country, and the Indianapolis News and the Louisville Courier-Journal, to mention three news mediums of national fame?

Produce Copy Not Suitable

Envelopes bulging with sheets of mimeographed copy have not changed the attitude of publishers. These envelopes still arrive and the larger part of their contents slides into the waste basket unread. Neither can we turn to such venerable arguments as the comparative reader interest in baseball and motion pictures and conclude that at last they have carried conviction. In most instanees they have been tried and found wanting. Nor may credit for the present encouraging condition be appropriated by advertising departments, save in a secondary capacity. Sporadic advertising campaigns may have had a temporary, but not a lasting effect. They did not move the rock from before the door of the editor's office.

It seems fairer to conclude that the changing attitude is due to improved conditions brought about by exhibitors with the vision, artistic discrimination and courage needed to elevate a motion picture house into a local institution. Men like Robert Lieber, of Indianapolis; Sam Katz, of Chicago; John H. Kunsky, of Detroit; Guy Wonders, of Baltimore; A. H. Blank, of Des Moines; Harry Crandall, of Washington; the Skouras Brothers, of St. Louis, and Harry Davis, of Pittsburgh, have won the respect of newspaper editors by reason of their accomplishments.

No newspaper can afford to ignore a town institution patronized by men and women regarded as the best patrons of the big advertisers.

Every city has its best hotel, its churches, its country club, and its leading theatres around which the life of the community centers. One of the annoying problems is that of finding parking space for cars, and between 7:30 and 11 o'clock in the evening the spaces most in demand are in the neighborhood of the most popular picture theatres. Main street's exclusive society is among those present.

Harrison Ford surrounded by the twelve most beautiful girls in Hollywood, so voted by a competent committee. They will appear in B. P. Schulberg's production, "Maytime."

If the president of the Woman's Club has any fault to find with a picture she writes her complaint to the editor. If efficient co-operation is wanted for a local charity, the aid of the theatre manager is enlisted; the children of "the best people" and the debutantes appear on the stage in prologues; box parties are given at the picture theatre instead of the legitimate house which is fortunate if it gets one traveling show a week, and the manager is personally acquainted with the newspaper publishers and the prominent merchants of the city.

Picture Theatres Essential in Community

What is the result? Irrespective of advertising, although, of course, current attractions are advertised, conservative newspapers are coming to look upon the better picture theatres as an essential factor in the life of the city, which must be covered adequately in their columns.

Exhibitors who have placed their houses on this high plane are carefully guarding their enviable position. Dignity, richness, good taste are the corner-stones on which they have built and care is being taken that the structure shall not be endangered by cheap, catchpenny exploitation. They are looking to the newspapers to reach their public and any stunt likely to bring a kick-back is taboo.

If a composite portrait were made of the motion picture editor in the key cities of the Middle West and South it would represent a rather keen young man of about thirty years seated at a desk with a pile of unopened envelopes in front of him. He is generally college bred. He has a strong conviction that bears out this conviction, the waste basket is 90 per cent. of the contents of the envelopes handy. He is not a rewrite man, and he wonders how publicity writers hold their jobs.

He wants good stuff that doesn't read like canned publicity mailed to the complete list of newspapers in the American Newspaper Annual. Also, he cannot understand why companies persist in sending him mats when he uses only photographs. Then he is a bit annoyed at mail being addressed to his predecessor who left the paper some two years ago. He feels that there must be a quantity of interesting material about players and productions which he never gets.

Photoplay Editor in Receptive Mood

He is at his desk waiting, however, and when it comes there will be no need for consulting the advertising manager.

Just one more comment. There should be a companion portrait of the woman photoplay editor. She is becoming increasingly numerous. Young, attractive, clever, she may be a bit difficult to please. But the effort is worth while.

Chicago to Hold Censor Examination

The Civil Service Commission has asked the assistance of Mrs. Charles E. Merriam, wife of a Chicago University professor, in holding the examination for motion picture censors on September 15. This will be the third examination in the last six months, as there had been no successful candidates at previous tests. The position pays the minimum salary of $1,500 yearly.

Delaware Charters Granted Picture Concerns

Recent Delaware charters include: Harvey Sherman Production Corporation, to deal in motion pictures, films, etc., $750,000; the Altruart Holding Company, to own and exhibit motion pictures, $500,000; Lande Film Company to distribute and exhibit films and motion pictures, $25,000. The capital increase sought was granted to the Riviera Theatre concern from the old capital of $300,000 to a new sum, $700,000.

Kendrick Will Direct Fox Denver Houses

H. M. S. Kendrick, who for many months has held an executive position on the staff of John Zanft, vice-president and general manager of the William Fox Circuit of Theatres, was promoted this week to the position of managing director of all the Fox theatres in Denver. They are the Rivoli, Isis, Plaza, and Strand.

Mr. Kendrick is an old showman and has been identified with the theatre for many years. His immediate task will be the preparation of the Colorado locality for the exhibition of the 25 special productions announced on the release schedule of Fox Film Corporation for the season of 1923-24.

Labor Troubles Threaten New England

Operators Throughout Territory Demand Wage Increases from Exhibitors

LABOR trouble for exhibitors in New England seems to be rather general throughout the territory, with the exception of Boston, which is now about the only center where theatre owners have not been confronted with demands on the part of operators and others for wage increases.

From inquiries made recently it also appears that Boston will not long remain immune, and on or about Labor Day something is expected to break there in labor circles, though just what classes of labor will participate is not known, nor the percentage of increase that will be asked for. In Providence the theatre owners have already settled with the musicians affiliated with the Musicians' Protective Association, and have granted them a raise of $6, two-thirds of what they asked. The exhibitors in that city have also had demands for raises from both the stage hands and the operators, and although theatre managers will not confirm the report, it is understood that the unions are asking about a $10 increase.

A settlement with these unions is also expected any day now. The musicians committee was headed by John T. Greene, president of the local, with William Gamble and Albert Ferri. The theatre owners' committee was composed of Harry W. Crull, Edward M. Fay and Alton C. Emery.

In other places, however, things have not gone as peaceably as in the Rhode Island capital. From Lewiston, Maine, comes the news that two of the William P. Gray houses there have gotten into trouble. They are the Strand and Empire. Three men of the theatre workers union there were discharged from the houses when a new wage scale was presented, calling for a considerable increase. The houses are being picketed, and union officials at the headquarters say they have made arrangements with New York booking offices whereby all motion pictures and vaudeville acts will be prevented from entering the circuit of Gray's company, the Maine and New Hampshire Corporation, after September 1, unless, in the meantime, the owners accept their terms, which include reinstatement of the men discharged and the adoption of the new wage scale. Just how they are going to carry out this threat they do not explain.

In Springfield, Mass., the operators have submitted their new wage demands to go into effect when the present contract expires September 1. Neither their business agent, John F. Gatelee, nor representatives of the theatre owners would make any definite statement as to the amount of increase demanded. Theatre men said that it was "several dollars," and "quite reasonable." The wages to operators in that city are now averaging about $41 a week. It was also learned that the musicians, stage hands and bill posters are about to ask for increases of from 15 to 25 per cent, with the latter class demanding the biggest raise. The managers in that city, however, are not looking for trouble, and, although at this time they have not had a conference, they believe that an agreement will be reached amicably when they get together with the unions.

"Puritan Passions" Given Premiere Showing

"PURITAN PASSIONS," the Film Guild's screen version of Percy MacKaye's play, "The Scarecrow," for Hodkinson, was given its premiere showing, Wednesday night, August 29, at Manchester-by-the-Sea, Mass., under the auspices of a group of society folk in and around Boston.

The premiere, a benefit performance for charity, attracted a large number of people and was one of the social events of the summer among the shore colony. The list of patronesses was headed by Mrs. George H. Lyman, of Beverley, and included other well-known names.

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation arranged the showing at their request. Manchester was particularly appropriate as a place for the premiere, since it is in the heart of the old witchcraft country, the locale of the MacKaye play.

Representatives of the trade papers from New York, as well as the Boston dramatic and photoplay critics were present. "Puritan Passions" will be reviewed in our columns next week.

In appreciation of the efforts made by the executive committee of the Catholic Motion Picture Actors' Guild of America to actively establish this organization in Hollywood, Father M. J. Mullins, sponsor for the Guild, tendered a dinner to the executive committee on August 16 in a private room at Brandstatter's Montmartre. Practically the entire executive membership was in attendance, and the meeting was in charge of Tommy Gray, chairman, and Father Mullins.

Following the dinner, the committee went into executive session for the purpose of placing in the field a ticket for the various offices, and the following names were offered as candidates: For president, Thomas Meighan; vice president, Jack Coogan, Sr., Thomas Gray, May McAvoy, Ben Turpin; secretaries, Wm. Low, Edward Boland; treasurer, Mary O'Connor; advisory board, Thos. G. Patton of the Wm. H. Hays office, Emmett Flynn, Jos. Henaberry, Hugh Dierker, Edna Murphy; executive committee, Mrs. Emmet Corrigan, Colleen Moore, Geo. Siegman, Frank Keenan, J. J. Franz, John Considine; publicity committee, Bert Ennis, chairman; membership committee, Jack Ford, John Reddy, Fritzi Brunette, Chas. McHugh, Ida O'Brien, Ray Doyle.

These and other names to be placed in the field will be balloted upon at a monster mass meeting of the Guild to be held probably in the Hollywood American Legion Stadium on Wednesday, September 5.

Constance Wilson Weds Naval Officer

Constance Wilson, sister of Lois Wilson, featured player in Paramount pictures, has renounced a screen career for matrimony. She was married last Saturday afternoon to Ensign C. C. Lewis, Jr., of the U. S. S. Arizona of the Pacific fleet, at the Mission Inn, Riverside, Cal. Only the immediate relatives of both families attended the ceremony.

B. J. Durning, Director, Passes Away

BERNARD J. DURNING, husband of Shirley Mason, and well known as a director of Fox specials, passed away at St. Vincent's Hospital, New York City, Wednesday afternoon, a victim of typhoid fever, from which malady he had been suffering for the past four weeks. Deceased was thirty years old. He has been a director with Fox for the past three years.

Mr. Durning came to New York last June to direct Gallagher and Shean in "Around the Town With Gallagher and Shean." He was taken ill shortly after his arrival. He was married to Shirley Mason six years ago.

Deceased will be buried in Calvary Cemetery Saturday morning, from St. Francis de Sales Church at Belle Harbor, Long Island. Services will be held at 10 A. M.

Strike Threatened by Musicians' Union

Members of the Musical Mutual Protective Union in New York City, said to number 3,500, have voted to go on strike September 3 unless an agreement is reached with the theatre managers and claim that all the large Broadway playhouses, vaudeville houses, including the Keith and Loew chains, and the large picture theatres, including the Capitol, Rialto, Rivoli and Strand will be affected.

The union wants the same wage scale which now obtains in Chicago and other cities, said to range from $90 to $119 per week, with extra pay for overtime.

The Mutual Protective organization is at odds with the American Federation of Musicians, which declared that they are not interested in the strike.

The Theatre Managers' Association asserts that it has already conceded a twenty-five per cent. wage increase to the Associated Musicians of Greater New York, the contract being approved by the American Federation. The managers add that they don't know what the strike is "all about."

New York Operators Given Increased Wage Scale

The threatened strike of motion picture machine operators, which was to have gone into effect on September 1st in about one thousand theatres in New York City, Brooklyn and Long Island, was averted this week when a compromise settlement was reached between the operators' union and the T. O. C. C. by which a raise of 7½ to 15 per cent. was granted.

Operators in houses seating more than 1,500 accepted a 15 per cent. increase against their demand of 25 per cent., and operators in houses seating between 1,000 and 1,500 accepted an increase of 12½ per cent. against a 25 per cent. demand. In houses between 600 and 1,000, the operators will receive 10 per cent., having first demanded 50 per cent., which was later reduced to 22½ per cent. In houses under 600, the increase will be 7½ per cent. against a 17½ per cent. demand.

Earlier in the week the Vaudeville Managers' Protective Association agreed to an increase of 22½ per cent.

Crandall's Public Service Work

By L. W. Boynton—Article No. 3

AFTER the public Service and Educational Department of the Crandall theatres, in Washington, D. C., had taken their places as a poteut civic force in the community, Mrs. Locher, director, achieved a notable forward step in linking up the motion picture and public school education.

Visual education has had many advocates, but in Washington, as in many other cities, a satisfactory method had not been found whereby the facilities for picture presentation could be made available to the school authorities. The school buildings were not equipped with projection booths, or other provisions for showing films. Funds were not at hand with which to install booths, or take other necessary steps to conform to police and fire regulations.

The Crandall organization did not at once enlist the school authorities. They had to be shown that visual instruction in theatres was practical. The Crandall interests convinced them by demonstrations and the work was entered upon.

Visual Education

The opportunity to prove the value of this new form of instruction was the indirect outcome of America's war work. The Junior Red Cross of Czecho-Slovakia wanted to reciprocate for the aid rendered them during the war by the American Junior Red Cross. The Bakule School for Crippled Children in Prague, through Dr. Bakule, its principal and a former professor in the University of Chicago, proposed to the authorities of the American Red Cross a concert tour of a group of children enrolled in the school to appear in a number of song recitals in this country.

Red Cross officials in Washington took the matter up with the Crandall Publicity Department and it was decided to make the Bakule School the subject of one of the Community Service Hours in the Crandall neighborhood house. Dr. Stepanek, Czecho-Slovakian Minister to the United States, supplied two reels of film owned by the legation and these were combined with reels devoted to the beauties of Prague and the work of the School. The program, presented under the auspices of the Junior Red Cross, proved of wide interest and educational value; and the Washington school authorities asked that the history and geography classes be permitted to see the program as part of th regular school course.

Thus was laid the groundwork for the permanent adoption of the Crandall theatres as annexes to the public schools of the District of Columbia.

Dr. Kramer, assistant superintendent of schools, has named certain teachers in each section of Washington to take charge of visual instruction hours in the Crandall houses. The Crandall organization furnishes theatre, films and operators, together with pipe organist and the use of the triple maunal organs, when desired.

Films of educational worth are shown, accompanied by talks by persons equipped to do the subjects justice.

These hours are not recesses from school work, but are regular class periods during which the pupils are under the supervision of their teachers and principals, just as in regular school hours.

Capital Athletic Club basketball team of Washington, D. C.

It has been found that visual instruction is not necessarily to be confined to those of school age, but can be adapted to any course of instruction that can be photographed—business, manufacture, sports, mechanics, science, and other subjects.

Slow-motion photography has been found of especial service in these theatre-school courses, enabling the student to fix in his mind details of a subject in a moment that would require hours of reading to grasp.

Here is a feature of the Crandall public service work that every exhibitor can adopt. By allying himself with the schools in his community, he is at once identified with a group intensely interested in good citizenship; and the exhibitor will at once gain the esteem and confidence of a new group of enthusiasts in the cause of the motion picture. He will be winning new and valuable friends for the industry and building a new clientele, provided of course he maintains a consistently high program at his theatre.

Free Government Films

A great number of Government films, suitable for this kind of visual instruction, can be obtained by the exhibitor without cost. Government Departments—particularly Interior and Agriculture—are anxious to give their films as wide a showing as possible without rentals. Definite information concerning these pictures can be obtained from he Government Department or through the Crandall Public Service Department.

When the schools open again in the Fall, it is probable a regular circuit of educational films will be available free to the exhibitor who wishes to inaugurate public service work.

Visual instruction classes have also been formed this summer in all the Crandall neighborhood houses under the auspices of the Summer Vacation Bible Schools. The form of instruction is virtually the same as that used by the public school classes.

Far-reaching effects are already evident from this contact of church and theatre. It was here that censorship was effectually combated. On several occasions, prominent ministers of Washington were prevailed upon to look at pictures privately in the Crandall projection room, in order to form their own ideas as to the alleged need for censorship. More often than not, their ideas were found to be the result of misinformation or only partial knowledge.

When Charlie Chaplin's "The Pilgrim" came along—it is an excellent case in point—not a single Washington minister considered there was anything of sacrilege in it. Instead, they were highly amused by the respectful humor derived from their calling.

This afforded a real opportunity for a frank discussion on the subject of censorship.

Here was an argument used by the Crandall organization which impressed the ministers greatly:

When an exhibitor buys first-run rights to a picture he buys among other things, the picture's continuity. The minute the censor applies the knife, he destroys one of the qualities of the film for which the exhiibtor has paid. There is no more justice in this than would be the censorship of books in the library of the home. It is equivalent to entering a man's library, tearing out half a dozen chapters and then telling him to go ahead and enjoy the book.

The ministers, in some instances, were thus brought to see the other side of the question.

The Vacation Bible Schools, conducted by Mrs. Bradley Moffatt in co-operation with Mrs. Locher have made possible an intimate acquaintanceship between the Crandall theatres and the ministers of the Washington churches. New friendships are created. Any exhibitor in the country can institute this work on large scale or small, in the opinion of the Crandall organization, provided he goes at it energetically and sincerely.

K. C. County License Test Case Under Way

A move to establish by a test case the authority of the Jackson County Court, Kansas City, being the principal city of the county, to collect license from motion picture houses under an order made June 2, was made this week when the prosecuting attorney issued a complaint against A. M. Eisner, president of the Kansas City Division of the M. P. T. O. A. and owner of the Broadmour.

Mr. Eisner is charged with operating a motion picture theatre without the county license. The information was sworn to by the county license inspector. Mr. Eisner was arraigned before Justice J. J. Shepard and pleaded not guilty and was released on $500 bond, his preliminary hearing being set for September 1. The new law provides that all motion picture theatres bounded by the souri River, the state line, Fifteenth street and Holmes street pay $100 annually. Theatres outside this district and with a seating capacity of more than 800 pay $50 annually, it is stated.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS is my Bible and I would not do without it for any price within reason. I also take———, but THE NEWS has got them all skinned anyhow, fifty per cent.

Baby Peggy Signs Lesser Contract

Huge Sum Involved for Services of Child Star for Coming Three Years

BABY PEGGY, three and a half years old. and famous throughout the world as a starlet in motion pictures, has received one of the biggest cash considerations for her services on the screen, ever paid in the history of the picture industry, it is claimed.

The contract was entered into and closed between Sol Lesser, president of Principal Pictures Corporation, and the child's parents, James and Mrs. Montgomery. The deal for the baby's services for the next three years, was started in Los Angeles, but was not verified until this week by Sol Lesser who is in New York eu route to Europe.

It is said that Baby Peggy's salary and the pictures she will make each year, will exceed $1,500,000.

Lesser placed Jackie Coogan under contract after the now famous youngster completed his work with Charles Chaplin in "The Kid." Under Lesser's direction, Jackie has made all of his photoplays and just recently signed a contract with Metro Pictures Corporation.

"It is not my desire," said Lesser, "to establish the fact that Baby Peggy received a tremendous salary. So many inflated reports of picture stars' salaries have been circulated, that I would rather refrain from stating the amount of money the little girl will receive each year. I am convinced, however, that she will rank among the highest paid film actresses in the world."

A huge cash advance was made to the little actress' parents who in turn, have placed it in a trust fund in Los Angeles, it is said.

According to Lesser, Baby Peggy will start her new contract not later than October and she will be seen in big feature productions adapted from world famous books and by noted authors. Her pictures will be made in Hollywood.

Baby Peggy-Jean has made countless millions laugh. Her fan mail resembles that of a post office during the holidays. When her picture appear, the theatres are crowded with eager kiddies and smiling parents. She has appeared iu many comedies but has never participated in feature length productions. She is now in Hollywood completing a contract with another picture company.

Seek Original Rinehart Story for Jackie

The Coogan agents in New York are reported to be negotiating with Mary Roberts Rinehart, who has just arrived in Gotham from her home in Washington, D. C., for an original screen story to be filmed by Jackie as one of his series on his Metro contract.

"Long Live the King," the novelist's "pet" story, has just served Jackie as his first vehicle for Metro. Although all of Mrs. Rinehart's stories find their way first to the printed page of the book and magazine, Coogan, Sr., hopes to win her over to writing one direct for the screen by giving a private showing of Jackie in "Long Live the King" in the novelist's suite at the Waldorf-Astoria, where she is now registered.

Johnston Will Publicize Lloyd Productions

J. L. Johnston, former Associated First National Picture exploitation representative in Seattle, Portland, Butte and Alaskan territories, and more recently associated with the Thomas H. Ince studios, has been appointed publicity director for Frank Lloyd Productions, Inc., an independent producing company recently organized and to release through First National, General Manager Harry Weil has announced.

His appointment to the Lloyd post came at the conclusion of a trip around the United States in the interest of publicity.

Warner Brothers' "Gold Diggers," personally supervised by David Blesco, has been completed. Here are scenes from the production in which Hope Hampton has the leading role.

Elaborate Set Constructed for "Yolanda"

A motion picture set which, it is claimed, surpasses in magnitude and exceeds in expense any ever designed for the filming of a photoplay in the East is that which has just been completed behind the Cosmopolitan studios at 127th Street and Second Avenue, New York, and which will be used in the making of "Yolanda," Marion Davies next superfeature for the Cosmopolitan Corporation.

This set, representing the castle of Charles, Duke of Burgundy, father of Princess Yolanda, covers almost a square city block. The castle, which is 600 feet long by 250 feet wide, entails one tower that stands 113 feet above the ground and measures 25 feet in diameter. It also includes two other towers 56 feet high. The castle itself spans a huge moat. The moat is 300 feet long by 55 feet wide and 17 feet deep. It holds 15 feet of water. Another feature of the castle is a huge steel drawbridge, and circling the castle itself is a wall 40 feet high.

The set was designed by Joseph Urban and involved weeks of research work.

"No More Women" Company at Lake Arrowhead

The company engaged for Elmer Harris' "No More Women," which is the third Associated Authors' production for autumn release through Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation, is at Lake Arrowhead in the Southern Sierras. They will remain there two or three weeks making exteriors before returning to the studio. Lloyd Ingraham is directing.

The cast which was recently completed includes Matt Moore, Madge Bellamy, Kathleen Clifford, H. Reeves-Smith, Clarence Burton, George Cooper, and Shannon Day.

"Broken Wing" Booked for New York Rialto

"The Broken Wing" has just been booked to play the Rialto, New York, early in October. This is the first of the fifteen Preferred Pictures which will be released during the new season. A musical comedy version of the play is to be presented by Oliver Morosco this season.

B. P. Schulberg Takes Over Mayer Studio

ANNOUNCEMENT was made in Los Angeles August 27 that B. P. Schulberg, of Preferred Pictures, had signed a contract by which he will take over the Mayer studio at No. 900 Mission Road.

The plant hitherto has been known as the Mayer-Schulberg studio. All Preferred Pictures will be made there after the contract becomes operative, which will be within thirty days. Mr. Schulberg is building two large stages and making other extensive improvements throughout the studio.

Official Russ Revolution Pictures Released

What is claimed to be the first official motion picture to come out of Soviet Russia, showing the events which took place during and after the Red Revolution, is being released by the Mondial Film Company, of New York City.

After many months of painstaking secrecy, labor and patience, these pictures were assembled and are now being presented as a whole under the title of "With the Movie Camera Through the Russian Bolshevik Revolution." Most of the scenes were taken under the supervision of the Soviet Government, and are thus said to be the only authentic motion pictures of the true conditions in Russia during the last few years.

Boylan Coast Publicist for First National

Malcolm Stuart Boylan has been made West Coast Publicity Director for Associated First National. He takes the place of Jack Neville, now touring the West for that company. Frederick E. Stanley and Harold Matson remain as executive assistants. Boylan was formerly director of publicity at Universal City.

Jack London's "Call of the Wild" is a September Pathe release. The scenes are from the production.

"Tea With a Kick" is said by Associated Exhibitors to be all kick and the scenes from the production indicate there might be some justification for the claim.

Sol Lesser Discusses Theatre Plan

And Praises Paramount's New Booking Policy, on Eve of Departure for Europe

NATURAL runs for pictures as best for both exhibitors, producers and public, with a word of high commendation for the new Paramount policy, were stressed by Sol Lesser, of West Coast Theatres, Inc., Principal Pictures and Associated First National in an interview this week.

Mr. Lesser, who will sail for Europe September 8, is in New York attending to important business matters, chief among which was the announcement of the signing of Baby Peggy as a Principal Pictures star.

It was as an exhibitor that Mr. Lesser spoke chiefly. He pointed to the fact that West Coast Theatres had now reached practically maximum growth. "We shall probably not acquire any more houses," he said. "We have enough for our purposes and our policy is carefully mapped out. It is built on the idea that the public must be the judge of the picture, and that the producer must be given the opportunity to get that judgment on record fairly and completely."

To illustrate this point, Mr. Lesser turned to a discussion of the change of policy to be inaugurated at the New Criterion, Los Angeles, formerly the Kinema. "It will become a two-a-day, national long run house when it reopens," he continued. "Only the biggest pictures will be played, and they will be given the presentation the producer desires. With a percentage arrangement as a basis, we will provide just the house atmosphere the producer considers vital to his picture in order to make it a box office success, not only in the Criterion, but in the surrounding territory and throughout the country."

In this connection, Mr. Lesser declared that his policy had always been in the direction of letting the public decide the exhibition value of pictures.

"I am glad to see that Famous Players has come out with its announcement of fixing exhibition values through key city showings. It is a big step forward, and we have already assured Paramount that we are in hearty sympathy with the move," said Mr. Lesser. "It is common sense. How can the value of a picture be decided arbitrarily? The public is the judge, of course."

First National, Mr. Lesser pointed out, has pursued this policy for some time. It was the only fair plan for both exhibitor and producer, he added.

On his European tour, Mr. Lesser said he would study presentation methods abroad with a view to adapting them to the West Coast Theatres, if they offered suitable material. Close investigation of exploitation in the United Kingdom and on the Continent will be one of the chief purposes of his visit to the other side.

Finally, Mr. Lesser, who is vice-president of West Coast Theatres, Inc., made it very clear that he was devoting more attention than ever to the theatre phases of the diversified film interests in which he is a partner.

First National Changes Policy Abroad

Drastic New Distribution Measures Hurl Bombshell Into British Industry

ASSOCIATED FIRST NATIONAL PICTURES, LTD., the British branch of the American distributing organization, announced at its second annual convention, held in England on August 10th, several changes in its distribution policy which have had the effect of a bombshell thrown into the industry in the British Isles. By these changes some of the problems which have been perplexing that country for a considerable time are brought nearer solution.

The change in policy was announced by Ralph J. Pugh, managing director of the British organization. It followed a series of conferences between the British leaders and Robert J. Lieber, president of First National; E. Bruce Johnson and M. P. Harwood, foreign manager and chief auditor, respectively, of that company, all of whom attended the London meeting.

The most drastic change was the concession of mutual signing of contracts. This move, never before attempted in the British industry, gives to First National salesmen, or "travellers" as they are known abroad, the authority to sign contracts on behalf of the company simultaneously with the signing by the exhibitor. Hardly less important was the reduction of the prices of posters by ten per cent, a step which will have a far-reaching effect on the methods of motion picture advertising in the British Isles. Heretofore distributors, or "renters," have been in the habit of seeking a large profit from the sale of paper to exhibitors and the use of billboard advertising has been consequently limited. Both of these changes went into effect on August 20th.

For several years the British exhibitors have been endeavoring to secure from renters the concession of mutual signing of contracts. In addition to acceding to this request First National has broken away from the old "standard" contract, which is in common use throughout the British Isles and has inaugurated a revised form of its own, which contains practically all that was called for by exhibitors in the "Fair Clauses" form, which has been eagerly sought after by British exhibitor organizations for some time.

Kinematograph, a leading British trade publication, congratulates First National upon this innovation and calls it a "step nearer to better business methods in the industry." In permitting salesmen and managers to sign for the company the British exhibitor is relieved of the fear that his contract may be refused confirmation.

The reduction of the price of lithographs follows up the first step in this direction taken at the convention in London last year, when First National reduced the price of posters to cost, instead of continuing the practice still in vogue among British renters, of effecting a tremendous profit from their sale. Because of last year's reduction in prices the sale of lithographs was increased 300 per cent, and this volume production permitted a further reduction of ten per cent, which became effective on August 20th of this year.

Rothacker Changes Entire Power System

The entire power system in the Rothacker Chicago laboratory has been changed with the view to raising the quality of Rothacker Prints eevn higher. The coat-burning boilers have been thrown out, and in their stead has been installed a system of motor-driven combustion oil burners.

As it was under the old system, the coal-burning boilers were "sealed" behind dust-proof doors in the basement, but where there is coal in the vicinity there is bound to be an element of dust, and before starting for Europe Watterson R. Rothacker ordered the change.

Schulberg Takes Over Selig Studio

Buildings to be Enlarged and Remodeled for Increased Production Activity

B. P. SCHULBERG has taken over the Selig studios in Los Angeles for the exclusive production of Preferred Pictures, to be released by Preferred Pictures Corporation, of which Al Lichtman is president. He has acquired as well a large ranch at Alhambra, just outside of Los Angeles, which will be used for large exterior sets and locations.

Until now these studios have been shared by Mr. Schulberg and Louis B. Mayer, who has made all of his pictures there. Increased production plans of Preferred, however, necessitated greater space and additional equipment. Among the first improvements to be made in the property will be the building of a large new stage and a big tank.

The Selig studios, from now on are to be called the Schulberg studios, were among the first to be built on the West Coast, and are among the landmarks of Los Angeles. Continual rebuilding and remodelling, however, have made them as modern and as completely equipped as any studios in the world. Space and equipment are sufficient to allow six companies to work simultaneously.

A large plot of ground adjoins the studio buildings, and this will be used for large exterior sets, such as the Colonial home in "Maytime," on which construction has just been competed.

The Alhambra ranch, which will also be used exclusively for Preferred Pictures, is about twenty minutes from Los Angeles, on the Pasadena road, and it contains some of the most beautiful exterior locations in all California. It was here that some of the exteriors for "The Virginian" were made.

The acquisition of this property will enable Mr. Schulberg to make more elaborate pictures at smaller cost, and is an important step in the increased production plans of Preferred.

Work on "Maytime" has already been started under the direction of Gasnier, with Ethel Shannon, Harrison Ford, Clara Bow, and William Norris in the leading roles.

Tom Forman will start soon on his production of "White Man," starring Kenneth Harlan, from the novel by George Agnew Chamberlain, and Victor L. Schertzinger is making preparations for "The Boomerang," which is an adaptation of David Belasco's famous stage success.

"Romola" With Gish Girls to Start Shortly

The departure on the Homeric last Saturday of Henry King, the director, together with the heads of the technical departments of the Inspiration studios in Rome, William M. Ritchey, Robert Haas and Miss Marie Vallero, means that the production of the motion picture, "Romola," based on George Eliot's novel, in which both Lillian and Dorothy Gish will appear, will begin very shortly.

One part of the "Romola" unit has already left for Italy. This included William Powell who plays the part of Tito; Charles Lane, character man; Joseph Boyle, assistant director, and Roy Overbaugh, cameraman. Among those whose departure is scheduled for early in September to join the unit in Italy, are Ronald Colman who will be Miss Gish's leading man in "Romola," and Herbert Grimwood who will take the part of Savanarola.

Truart Advances New Sales Policy

Will Call Upon Exhibitors to Make Own Propositions on Semon Series

ONE of the biggest problems of the forthcoming season will be the solution of the question of rentals, according to Truart Film Corporation.

"In advancing its policy of selling the series of Larry Semon comedy feature productions Truart is throwing aside every precedent ever established in the selling of motion pictures to the theatre. M. H. Hoffman, vice-president and general manager, and Alexander S. Aronson, general manager of sales, under whose guidance this new sales policy will be placed in operation, have assured themselves by the basic principle under which the plan will be carried on, that the arrangement with the exhibitor will be an equitable one because the theatre-manager is the one who is going to off the basis of that arrangement," says the announcement.

"Truart in advertising pages which will shortly appear in the trade journals will offer the series of four Larry Semon feature comedies to the exhibitors of the country, calling upon the exhibitors to make their own proposition on the series, one which they will consider equitable to themselves and equitable also to the producer.

"Theatre owners are familiar with the common practice of charging higher prices for each succeeding picture of a star series.

"Under the new sales plan of Truart the theatre will avoid this because the arrangement entered into will be such that release No. 4 will be rented at the same figure as release No. 1. Furthermore, the contracts thus entered into by exhibitors with the home office of Truart Film Corporation will be lived up to regardless of any distributing affiliations on the series, because the series will be sold to a distributor only subject to such contractual bookings.

"Truart has not entered into this plan merely as an idea. It has committed itself by contractual obligation to the star for an extended period of time. It has further obligated itself in the purchase of well-known plays and novels. The properties which will be the basis for Semon productions have value.

"'The Girl in the Limousine' is the first. This successful stage play not only held the stage in New York for one solid season but the play has been on tour in every part of the United States. Following this will be "The Wizard of Oz." After that there will be "Let's Go!" and "Yankee Doodle Dandy," two unusual stories uniquely adapted to the needs of this stellar comedian.

"In exchange for this product Truart will ask an offer which the theatre believes equitable to itself and to the producer; the opportunity only to get and give a square deal.

"Truart will be represented in the independent producing field with eighteen eminent photoplays during the season 1923-24. There will be at least five producing units during the entire year, of which three will be star units. These are Elaine Hammerstein, Larry Semon and Richard Talmadge. A fourth is the Carlos Productions units, making all-star attractions."

The first Elaine Hammerstein production, "Broadway Gold," directed by Edward Dillon from W. Carey Wonderly's story in Young's Magazine, will be released generally on September 1. This will be followed by "The Drums of Jeopardy," now being directed by Edward Dillon. This second production will be released in November, 1923. It will be followed by a novel being adapted under the tentative title "Good Women and Bad," for release in February, 1924.

The first Larry Semon feature comedy will be released in December, 1923. It will be an adaptation of the famous stage success, "The Girl in the Limousine." To follow this in March, 1924, will be "The Wizard of Oz." In September and November, 1924, will be released "Let's Go!" and "Yankee Doodle Dandy."

The first Richard Talmadge production, produced by Carlos Productions, under the working title "Fast Freight," will be released about October 1 to be followed in January, March and May, 1924, by further productions of this series.

Vitagraph promises an abundance of action and exciting incidents in "Pioneer Trails," scenes from which are included in the layout.

Long run premieres for "Potash and Perlmutter," Samuel Goldwyn's production for First National, have been arranged in a number of cities. It will be given a pre-release at the New York Strand September 19, and the engagement will probably be for three weeks.

Balaban & Katz will play the picture at their big Chicago theatre September 24. Detroit, Kunsky's territory, has offered Mr. Goldwyn the option of playing in either the new Capitol, a 4,500-seat house, or going into the Adams theatre for an indefinite run.

Sol Lesser, now in New York, has wired his colleagues on the Coast to hold an indefinite number of weeks at the new Criterion for the film. Other indefinite runs are scheduled by the Imperial, San Francisco, the Stanley interests in Philadelphia and the Rivoli, Baltimore.

Long runs abroad are planned in London, Paris, Berlin, Vienna and Warsaw.

Chester Conklin Has Role in "Anna Christie"

Chester Conklin, comedian of the screen, has been signed by Thomas H. Ince, for an unusual bit in Ince's screen adaptation of "Anna Christie." The role, while it offers comedy relief from some of the tensest emotional scenes of the drama, nevertheless is said to require some fine dramatic touches. Conklin has just completed his first dramatic-comedy role of his career in Eric Von Stroheim's "Greed."

Mayer Productions Enlarge Quarters

Constantly Growing Production Program Makes Additional Space Necessary

INCIDENT to the announcement that the Selig studios in Los Angeles, now occupied jointly by Louis B. Mayer Productions, Inc., and Preferred Pictures, are soon to be taken over exclusively by the latter concern, Louis B. Mayer, president of the Mayer company, has disclosed pending negotiations which will provide the Mayer company with studio facilities second to none on the West Coast.

The Mayer company have been working at the Selig plant ever since they began producing. Under an arrangement with William N. Selig, improvements and enlargements have been made from time to time to meet the requirements of the constantly growing Mayer production program. During the past few months it has become apparent that the studios occupied so long could not possibly serve the Mayer company satisfactorily in the immediate future. With three production units working constantly on pictures of the size and character of the current Mayer offerings—John M. Stahl with "The Wanters," Reginald Barker with "The Eternal Struggle" and Fred Niblo with "Strangers of the Night" ("Captain Applejack"), it has been necessary to go outside for additional studio facilities. Mr. Niblo's last picture was made at the Clune studios and he is working there now on his next production.

The proposition which Mr. Mayer has just disclosed calls for the immediate construction of a brand new studio in the heart of the Hollywood section, the studio to be erected for the Mayer company. It will be sufficiently large and well equipped to take care, not only of all the present Mayer units, but also of other units which are about to be added. Its better location—in close proximity to the other big studios in Los Angeles—is expected to make Mayer production even more efficient than it has been in the past. The size and importance of the productions on which the Mayer directors are about to start has had a great deal to do with the change which Mr. Mayer has decided upon at this particular time.

With "The Wanters" ready for release, Mr. Stahl is about to make "Why Men Leave Home," with Lewis Stone and Helen Chadwick. Mr. Barker, finishing up "Pleasure Mad," from Blanche Upright's "The Valley of Content," will next tackle the big New England epic based upon "Cape Cod Folks," for which a Mayer company are now making scenes up in New England. Mr. Niblo's next production will be "Thy Name Is Woman," from the Broadway play of the same name, which will be filmed with all the colorful atmosphere which was suggested in this story of smuggling adventures in the Pyrenees Mountains.

He had only time to jump before his car was washed down a steep embankment.

Fox Opens Coast House in Oakland

Dignitaries Attend Inauguration Which Completes Chain Across the Country

WITH the formal opening of a new theatre in Oakland, Cal., on August 25, William Fox completed his chain of houses extending across the country and established himself on the Pacific coast in a single stroke.

The opening was most auspicious. Motion picture stars from Los Angeles, officials of Oakland and San Francisco, together with notables from the East, were in attendance. Mr. Fox opened his new theatre, known as the Oakland, with "The Silent Command," a J. Gordon Edwards production, which has its New York premiere at the Central theatre on September 3.

A feature of the occasion was the arrival of Tom Mix, talented Fox star, riding his wonder horse, Tony, through the lobby and down the center aisle. Just before reaching the orchestra pit, Mix touched spurs to his mount and Tony bounded forward, leaping over the heads of the musicians to the stage. Responding to the burst of applause which greeted this typical Mix act, Tony kneeled and bowed. Mix replied with a brief speech of welcome to the brilliant audience, which occupied every seat in the house.

The presentation was in harmony with the magnificence of the new theatre and was in charge of S. Barrett McCormick, who will manage the house. Mr. Fox will conduct the Oakland according to the policies which govern the leading theatres in principal cities throughout the country.

Members of the faculty and students from the University of California at Berkeley rubbed shoulders with luminaries from the studios of Hollywood and with officials of California's leading cities. It was a marked feature of the occasion that this mixed audience was unanimous in its appreciation of the picture, "The Silent Command," a drama dealing with international intrigue on the high seas, with Edmund Lowe, Alma Tell, Betty Jewel, Martha Mansfield and Florence Martin in the principal roles.

The slogan of the new Oakland is "the utmost in photoplay presentation." Gerardo Carbonara, noted musical director, wields the baton before an orchestra composed of sixty musicians, which intersperses the symphonic with lighter compositions. Every patron of the Oakland is considered a guest. Nothing has been omitted to make the theatre the utmost in comfort and convenience.

The entire stage and screen are visible from every seat. The aisles are wide and seating arrangements, with luxurious loge chairs, are such as to insure the maximum of comfort. A charming rest room for women, club room for men, a magnificent lounge and similar modern conveniences combine to make the theatre one of the finest in existence.

S. Barrett McCormick, the manager, is widely known in the theatrical world as the man who established the enviable reputation of the Circle theatre in Indianapolis. He was among the first to arrange elaborate musical programs to accompany pictures and was among those who first introduced the prologue idea in picture houses. Success of the Oakland under his management is accepted as a foregone conclusion by experienced showmen.

Following the opening last week, Mr. Fox and his colleagues received scores of congratulatory messages, indicating the sincere appreciation of those who attended. The opening was followed by a remarkable patronage, corroborating the judgment of Mr. Fox in his initial Pacific coast enterprise.

Public Is Now Partner, Says Lasky

New Paramount Sales Policy Will Place Value of Picture Up to Theatre Goers

"THE public—which up to the present has had only a faint, indirect voice in the motion picture business, has now actively entered into the production of pictures—has become a third partner in an enterprise which embraces the producer, the exhibitor and the public."

This is the view expressed by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in an interview with the MOTION PICTURE NEWS on the subject of Paramount's new policy of letting the public decide the value of its pictures before selling them to exhibitors. Mr. Lasky returned this week to New York after having spent several months in the Lasky studio in Hollywood.

"I think," said Mr. Lasky, "Mr. Johnston in his editorial in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, hits the nail right on the head when he says that this new policy of playing our pictures to the public before selling them to the exhibitor is the greatest move this industry has ever made in the public interest.

"Up to this time, producer, distributor and exhibitor alike have been so absorbed in their own affairs that, while they made every effort possible to please the public, the very restrictions of the business made it difficult for any of them to give more than a passing glance at the public's interest. The producer and exhibitor, trying their best to interpret the public's mind through exhibitor reaction, have centered most of their attention on selling their wares to the exhibitor. The exhibitor, in turn, has been obliged in most instances to substitute his own opinion, or the opinion of the producer, for the only opinion that counts at all in the amusement business—the opinion of the public.

"Suppose for a moment that the exhibitor always had the opportunity to book his pictures according to his own opinion of them. Would the exercise of such a privilege be just to himself? Should he accept responsibility of betting that he knows what the public wants? If he can escape that responsibility he is foolish if he doesn't welcome the change. I know, because I have been in the amusement business for years, and I never was so happy in my life as I am at this moment when I realize that our new selling policy is going to give me an almost instantaneous reflection of public taste. I am glad to get rid of this responsibility of trying to guess the public demands over long periods of the future. I am glad the responsibility is going to be placed right where it belongs—upon the shoulders of the people who pay their money at the box office—or, for that matter, who fail to pay.

"You will observe that I have used the term 'amusement business.' I do this because I feel that at last we have entered the amusement business. In all other forms of the amusement business nothing stands between the producer and his public. A producer puts on a play in a Broadway theatre. Usually within a week's time that producer knows whether his play is eventually going on the road or immediately going to Cain's storehouse. The public reply is instant and unequivocal, and there's no going back of the returns.

"But up to now in the picture business the marketing of motion pictures has been so hedged about with restrictions, with machinery, with taboos, that the public had to push its likes or dislikes upstream through a flow of exhibitors and film salesmen until by the time its approval or disapproval reached the producer at the source the effect was faint indeed."

Universal Has Milwaukee House Warming

What is conceded by film men to be one of the most up-to-date film exchanges in the world has just been opened by Universal Pictures Corporation in Milwaukee, Wis., where a commodious, fire-proofed, well lighted branch office, with 5,000 feet of floor space and every possible contrivance for the service and comfort of visiting exhibitors, last week was officially put into commission by George L. Levine, Universal exchange manager in that territory.

The housewarming for the new exchange was featured by an open house week, during which more than 250 exhibitors from the city of Milwaukee and from the surrounding territory were the guests of Universal. The big film company paid the round trip railroad fare of all out-of-town exhibitors and their families, and saw to their comfort while in Milwaukee. This included automobile trips, luncheons, theatre parties and other amusements.

One of the new Paramounts: Pola Negri in a Herbert Brenon production, "The Spanish Dancer," with Antonio Moreno, supported by Wallace Beery, Kathlyn Williams, Gareth Hughes, Adolphe Menjou and Robert Agnew.

"THE CHECK-UP"

"The Check-Up" is a presentation in the briefest and most convenient form of reports received from exhibitors in every part of the country on current features, which makes it possible for the exhibitor to see what the picture has done for other theatre managers.

The first column following the name of the feature represents the number of managers that have reported the picture as "Poor." The second column gives the number who considered it "Fair"; the third, the number who considered it "Good"; and the fourth column, those who considered it "Big."

The fifth column is a percentage figure giving the average rating on that feature, obtained by the following method: A report of "Poor" is rated at 20%; one of "Fair," 40%; "Good," 70%; and "Big," 100%. The percentage ratings of all of these reports on one picture are then added together, and divided by the number of reports, giving the average percentage—a figure which represents the consensus of opinion on that picture. In this way exceptional cases, reports which might be misleading taken alone, and such individual differences of opinion are averaged up and eliminated.

No picture is included in the list which has not received at least ten reports.

WHAT SHOWMEN THINK OF CURRENT RELEASES

Exhibitors' Box-Office Reports

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATRES

FAMOUS PLAYERS

Homeward Bound—

The star is always a big drawing card here, and he had a good vehicle this time. Stood them out several evenings during the week, despite warm weather. Consistently good business. (West.)

Salomy Jane—

Was well received by critics and patrons. Receipts held up. (Middle West.)

A charming Bret Harte story well acted. (East.)

Lawful Larceny—

If the play was a great success the film ought to be a knockout anywhere. One of the best pictures we have played this season. Very good business. (East.)

Bluebeard's Eighth Wife—

Admirers of Gloria Swanson like this feature. Played to good business. (Middle West.)

Hollywood—

Played to a very good business and was held over for the second week and possibly longer. Was highly praised by the press. (East.)

The Law of the Lawless—

A fair picture. Buiness fair. (Middle West.)

The Purple Highway—

An average picture, that appealed better than some of the so-called specials. (Middle West.)

FIRST NATIONAL

Children of Dust—

Well played picture with good heart appeal. Business good. (Middle West.)

Dulcy—

Splendid picture which met with instant response. (East.)

Penrod and Sam—

Played to exceptionally good crowds. (Middle West.)

Wandering Daughters—

With a good lobby display caught the transient crowds in good numbers, and seemed to please immensely. (East.)

Slander the Woman—

Did a very fair business and caught the approval of the audiences, which acclaimed it very good entertainment. (East.)

The Woman Conquers—

Katherine McDonald makes a strong appeal to a certain following and they lined up well for this picture. Seemed to please. (East.)

Slippy McGee—

Just a fair program picture. Cool weather, however, and Colleen Moore's popularity drew in large crowds every evening. Matinees off. (East.)

The Brass Bottle—

A novelty in the way of stories helped put this over. Some liked it and many others did not. Many believed a good cast and director should have had something better to work with. Business only fair. Did not finish the week's run. (West.)

GOLDWYN-COSMO.

The Spoilers—

Very fine show, with a splendid fight. Played big for two weeks. (Middle West.)

A good box office attraction here. (Middle West.)

Enemies of Women—

Did a smashing business throughout its engagement and was declared by the majority to be one of the best pictures of the season. (East.)

3 Wise Fools—

Charming throughout. Appealed to best classes. Did very well. (Middle West.)

METRO

Hearts Aflame—

A fine dramatic production. Played to good business. (Middle West.)

Success—

Stars not well enough known in this one. Picture fair. Business good account of strong supplementary bill. (East.)

Where the Pavement Ends—

An unusual picture, which drew favorable reviews and drew better than average houses. (Middle West.)

UNIVERSAL

The Untameable—

Gladys Walton shows to advantage. Much favorable comment. Fair receipts. (Middle West.)

The Century theatre, Baltimore, used this on "Hollywood" (Paramount)

The Abysmal Brute—

Too much for the money. All the thrills in the world concentrated into one picture. It appealed only moderately well. (Middle West.)

Out of Luck—

Always a winner. Fine business for the whole week. (Middle West.)

The Love Brand—

Another western, that's all. Patrons like Roy Stewart, so business about average. (East.)

The Victor—

Another average production without any strong talking points to help it any. Business fair for a week. (West.)

Legally Dead—

Poor picture, heartily panned by the critics. Not much of an attraction. (Middle West.)

Blinky—

A really interesting story, and one that went well with reviewers and patrons alike. Very human work. Good business. (East.)

HODKINSON

The Man from Glengarry—

You ought to like this one. We did. Story is not over strong, but the cast and direction override that. Good business. (East.)

FOX

Youth Must Have Love—

A light and pleasing Shirley Mason picture that was satisfactory for that type of entertainment. Business pretty good. (West.)

SELZNICK

The Common Law—

Attracts certain classes that don't usually attend movies. Did very well with it. (Middle West.)

F. B. O.

Human Wreckage—

Second week as big as the first. (East.)

A wonderful picture. Business exceptionally good. Picture will be held three weeks. (Middle West.)

PREFERRED

The Broken Wing—

Nice little picture. Did fairly well with it. (Middle West.)

UNITED ARTISTS

One Exciting Night—

An excellent production, which packed them in for a week. (East.)

ASSOCIATED EXHIBITORS

Is Divorce a Failure?—

This one drew fair crowds for a week's run. (Middle West.)

WARNER BROS.

Main Street—

A very worthwhile picture, well done in all details. Brought back on a return engagement, after a two-week run only a month ago, and business was pretty fair, although not big. (West.)

The Little Church Around the Corner—

Did a crackerjack business all week and made a strong appeal to a very high class audience. (East.)

STATE RIGHTS

Broadway Gold—

Proved winning attraction. Elaine Hammerstein is favorite. Nice receipts. (Middle West.)

Excellent picture, which appealed to our audiences. Did better than average business. (Middle West.)

Temporary Marriage—

A well-produced picture, but nothing out of the ordinary. Some heavy advertising and excellent exploitation put it over for a week to good business. (West.)

The Empty Cradle—

One of the best pictorial sermons shown here in some time. Not only does it hit the heart, but there are plenty of thrills, too. Good business. (East.)

Tansy—

Here are no thrills and bloodthirstiness. It is rather a clean, simple, and enchanting little tale, with wonderful photography and a sheep herding dog that is worth the admission alone. Good business. (East.)

Perfect Foot Contest for "Trilby"

Stunt Feature of Many Campaigns

THE Perfect Foot Contest, particularly appropriate because of its close connection with the story, is being extensively used in exploitation campaigns on "Trilby," reports show.

Loew's Ohio theatre, Cleveland, took this logical angle for exploitation when they played "Trilby." The contest was inaugurated in Cleveland by M. H. Malaney, advertising, publicity and exploitation general for the circuit.

In Cleveland the News sponsored the search for the most beautiful feet.

Here are the measurements, to be exact: Length, from large toe to heel, 9 inches, width at ball of foot, 7½ inches; ankle measurements, 8¼ inches; calf measurement, 13¾ inches; size of stocking, 8½; size of shoe, 4-B.

Autumn shoes were the award for the girl who could match this foot and dozens of ambitious young ladies tried it.

The stunt is good for any locality in which "Trilby" is played and where Andree Lafayette can gain a good measure of publicity.

Strong Window Stunt

The Branford theatre, Newark, N. J., exploited "Trilby" heavily, featuring a window stunt that brought results. One of the biggest tie-ups was done through the co-operation of the Finery Silk Stocking store. A model was engaged to walk up and down in the store's window, behind a black curtain, showing her limbs from just below the knees, her feet and legs being bare. Whenever she appeared in the window a tremendous crowd assembled and the model would then lower a card telling of the beautiful feet that "Trilby" was noted for and to see them at the Branford theatre in "Trilby."

A Perfect Foot Contest was held in conjunction with Dreamland Park, Newark, which is the largest in the state, and with the newspaper of the city.

The Newark Star-Eagle, with a circulation of 85,000 daily, took advantage of the film running at the Branford and arranged to run a full page of ads, the theatre receiving a good portion of the full page.

"LITTLE OLD NEW YORK" HOOK-UP

Book window by Himebaugh and Bro. me on Fifth Avenue, New York City, for "Little Old New York" (Cosmopolitan), at the Cosmopolitan theatre

This newspaper and the theatre then picked a local girl who resembled Andree Lafayette, who plays the leading role in the film, and took motion pictures of her on a shopping tour of the city and winding up at Dreamland Park, in the pool where she gave an exhibition of diving and swimming. These pictures were then run in the theatre as a news event and proved very interesting.

James Peede, general manager of the Tully enterprises, was over personally and worked with the Branford staff, comprised of D. J. Shepherd, managing director; A. Gordon Reid, production manager, and M. J. Cullen, director of publicity.

Campaign in Omaha

H. B. Watts, managing the Rialto theatre in Omaha, and Ray Coffin, publicity director for Richard Walton Tully, collaborated on a campaign.

The serialization of the "Trilby" novel by du Maurier was planted in advance of the showing, in the Omaha Daily News, the city's most popular evening newspaper.

Window tie-ups were secured with good music stores on the records and sheet music of "Ben Bolt" and "Au Claire du Lune," two songs featured in the score. Hook-ups were accomplished with book stores on the novel, with the Walkover Shoe Co., who gave a window, featuring Andree Lafayette wearing the latest models of Walkover shoes, and with the Real Silk Hosiery Mills, who conducted a contest offering prizes of silk hose to ladies with same foot size as Miss Lafayette.

A laundry in the town permitted the imprinting of the shirt boards used in all clean shirts sent from their place of business for ten days, reaching six thousand customers direct. The billing on the cardboard called the attention of the recipient to the contrast between the old-syled French hand laundry as seen in "Trilby," now playing at the Rialto, and the modern equipment and work of this institution.

"Lucky" Thought Played Up in "Luck" Advertising

In putting over "Luck," Manager Thomas G. Coleman of the Galax theatre, Birmingham, Ala., emphasized the significance of the title, bringing out the thought in all advertising that "You will be unlucky if you do not see Johnny Hines in 'Luck.'"

In the lobby the 24-sheet was used to advantage by cutting out the letters of the title, as well as the figures. These were arranged then in horseshoe shape, the letters above spelling out the title. Atmosphere was created by, and attention attracted by, the "lucky" emblems of wishbones, horseshoes, four-leaf clovers, dice showing "sevens."

The three-sheet showing the automobile going through clouds was worked up into a center panel in connection with the black and white stills.

A transparent banner across the entire front of marquee attracted attention from a distance.

Tie-ups Made on "Ne'er-Do-Well"

Affords Chances for Hook-up Stunts of Many Sorts; Music and Books Used

EXCELLENT opportunities for mercantile tie-ups are offered by "The Ne'er-Do-Well," and exhibitors have been quick to take advantage of them. Two such campaigns are described below.

Manager Harold Horne of Loew's Palace theatre, Memphis, Tenn., created one specially strong tie-up of his own. There was a logical excuse for practically every music dealer in Memphis to give the Palace a display on "The Ne'er-Do-Well," because with it was linked up the name of a song, "Sweet Pal," which was being featured in the presentation of the picture. As the song had been written by a local composer, interest was strong, and twelve music store windows were landed.

Since the song was written and published locally, the dealers were sold on the idea of the mutual advantage to the tie-up with the theatre and to plug not only the song, but also that it was being featured with "The Ne'er-Do-Well." For in this way they would help the theatre to get people to hear the song, and then buy the music. As a result, the theatre printed cards stating that the song was being sung in connection with the showing of "The Ne'er-Do-Well," a Paramount picture, and the pluggers brought this fact to the attention of every booster's club, all the steamers that sail the Mississippi River, every dance hall, etc., always distributing the cards and exhibiting special posters made for the purpose.

The same idea was pushed further via the radio, the giant Commercial Appeal station mentioning "The Ne'er-Do-Well" at least fifteen times, reaching thousands of potential patrons.

The Palace arrows, which have previously been mentioned as a co-operative tie-up with various merchants, had their copy changed to suit the conditions, for instance, one arrow pointing directly into the entrance, read:

"Don't be a 'Ne'er-Do-Well': keep your shoes shined." And another, "Don't be a 'Ne'er-Do-Well'; Keep in trim with Hardin's body-builders."

Each time tying-up with something they had for sale. It is little wonder the merchants were willing to furnish the current to operate these signs, thereby gaining for the theatre illuminated boards in choice locations, which could not otherwise have been bought.

Book Display Is Given

Selecting the "book" angle from which to exploit "The Ne'er-Do-Well," a book store was approached on the matter of a book display by Manager J. Wright Brown of the Grand theatre, Columbus, Ga. As a result, a display of the novels was made on a center table near the front of the store. Cards made up from the paper tied up the display with the coming of the picture to the Grand theatre.

A leading drug store co-operated by selling during certain hours of the opening day tickets at one cent each, as trade-attractors.

Lobby display consisted of large book cut-out, a fac-simile of the original Rex Beach novel. The title stretched across the top, in the middle was a cut-out of Meighan's head.

Two Elephants and Boy in "Circus Days" Stunt

A boy who resembled Jackie Coogan, and two elephants, combined with the showmanship of Manager Joseph Hopp and Al Sobler, supplied the ingredients for the campaign on "Circus Days" at the Fort Armstrong theatre, Rock Island, Ill.

The campaign was extensive in scope and ideas alike. The decorations of the theatre, a special souvenir matinee for youngsters and the heavy pounding of the pachyderms on the pavements supplied a circus sight that Rock Island had not seen for many a day.

Exploitation in England on "Oliver Twist" Runs

London, England.—"Oliver Twist" has lent itself unusually well to exploitation in England, and big things have been done on that picture.

Here are a few of the things that were done to make "Oliver Twist" a success:

A special presentation at the Foundlings' Hospital, London, one of Dickens' fondest charities; showings for members of the Dickens Fellowship; newspaper articles by famous authors about cuts made by the censors; the presentation of a print to the Dickens Society Film Museum; a special daily sketch Jackie Coogan double competition; a special edition of "Oliver Twist;" mercantile tie-ups and exploitation and a 32-page press book that was distributed to exhibitors, incorporating every possible campaign need.

The fact that the picture was the first ever to be shown at the Foundlings' Hospital, together with the appropriateness of this idea for a Dickens film, was sufficient to make the English editors uncork with some space in their news columns. Messages from H. M. the Queen and H. R. H. the Prince of Wales, a source of publicity not available to American exhibitors. These messages were thrown on the screen as slides. A cabled donation of 100 guineas to the hospital from Jackie Coogan was announced at the same time.

Eleven hundred crippled children later attended a special showing at the Empire theatre, Leicester Square, London, and were provided with refreshments.

Fountain pens, sheet music, hot water bottles and photographs were a few of the articles tied up with Jackie Coogan for mercantile window display advertising.

Attractive Lobby Designed for "Rustle of Silk"

Manager Ollie Brownlee of the Palace theatre, Muskogee, Okla., advertised "Rustle of Silk" at the Palace with a very attractive lobby display, which consisted of two large beaver board columns, which were placed on each side of the lobby, supporting a beaver-board banner which was attractively designed, carrying the title of the picture.

Directly underneath this banner was another cut-out showing Betty Compson. Satin streamers connected central cut-out with the title panel.

Strong Broadway Campaign on "Rupert of Hentzau"

The showing of "Rupert of Hentzau" at the New York Mark Strand, New York City, was supported by an extensive exploitation campaign promulgated by Will Kraft, exploitation man for the picture.

It has always been the policy of the Strand management to treat a picture in a dignified way, therefore the outside ballyhoo had to be counted out. Horsemen dressed in dragoon uniforms mounted on snow white horses and carrying blue and gold banners, could be seen wending their way up Broadway or Riverside Drive at intervals during the day.

Many of the most prominent windows on Broadway were secured for window displays and attractive tie-ups. Thousands of one and three-sheets were posted on all the subway and elevated stations throughout the city. A novel proclamation herald was given out by the Strand for two weeks before the picture started. An attractive lobby display included a set of clever pen and ink drawings made by Al Hirschfeld, art director for Selznick, of the entire cast of "Rupert of Hentzau."

"Souls for Sale" Boosted by Tie-up With Fair

"Souls for Sale" was shown by Manager John C. Graham, Jr., of the Lyric theatre, Butler, Pa., at the time of the Butler fair. Also the big annual dollar day of the Butler merchants, so that every farmer for twenty miles around was in town with his family for that day.

Goldwynner Wm. M. Robson arranged for a moving picture camera man on that day to be carried around in an automobile to take screen tests of girls desiring to enter the movies.

Besides these pictures, the movie cameras were set up to snap political candidates and the large crowds at the fair grounds. These moving pictures of the crowds and of the popular local girls were shown by Manager Graham with "Souls for Sale" at the Lyric for the remainder of the week.

CAPITALIZING ON "SPOILERS" FIGHT

"Homeward Bound" Gets Effective Campaign

Manager Howard Price Kingsmore, of the Howard theatre, Atlanta, Ga., put over a markedly successful campaign on "Homeward Bound," embracing many novel features, one of which was a tie-up with the Georgia Railway and Power Company. The company has been putting on a campaign embodying the idea of "three tickets for 20 cents." In co-operation with the Howard, cards were carried on all street cars reading: "Whether 'Homeward Bound' or Pleasure Bent, Three for Twenty Will Save a Cent."

"Homeward Bound" stickers were attached to the windshields of automobiles all over town.

Circular cards, made to fit the spare tire of an automobile were printed, "Homeward Bound" and, through the co-operation of the Black and White Taxi Company, placed on all their taxis traversing the city.

The Jacobs' Pharmacy displayed in their various stores cards to the effect: "When 'Homeward Bound' take with you a box of candy." Oppenheim co-operated similarly on cigars.

The Phillips and Crew Music Co. co-operated, displaying a card suggesting: "When 'Homeward Bound' come in and hear the latest musical hits."

Horseshoes Are Featured in "Luck" Campaign

When "Luck" played at the Rialto theatre, Chattanooga, Tenn., Manager F. H. Dowler, Jr., used the horseshoe as the "trade mark" of the campaign.

Attention was called to this picture in advance by means of horseshoes placed in prominent cigar stands and soda fountains.

Horseshoes were the scheme of lobby decoration and sidewalks were stencilled the same good luck emblem, in addition to four-leaf clovers.

Baseball Atmosphere Aids "Trifling With Honor"

Sport page publicity was obtained for "Trifling With Honor" by Manager F. J. Miller of the Rialto theatre, Augusta, Ga.

A baseball atmosphere was created in the lobby by means of beaver board cutouts, painted to represent baseballs. On each ball was lettered a catch line from the picture.

A cutout of the man at the bat was made from the three-sheet, and mounted in the lobby, lending additional atmosphere.

This decoration caught the attention of the sport writers, resulting in publicity on the sporting page.

"Lost" Youngsters Exploit "Lost and Found" Run

An effective street ballyhoo was used by W. D. Fulton of the De Luxe theatre, Hutchinson, Kan., to exploit his showing of "Lost and Found." He had two ten-year-old boys cutely dressed in stockings rolled down, dressed entirely in white with "Lost" in large letters printed across the front of the boys' blouses, stationed in the busiest corners of the city.

On the back of the blouses was a similar sign "and Found, De Luxe today." The boys gave away attractively painted displays. This was an inexpensive stunt which can readily be used by any other theatre.

Stunts on "Girl of Golden West"

Screen Version of Play Is Exploited in Campaigns Embracing Novel Ideas

CAMPAIGNS on "The Girl of the Golden West" have been featured by many unusual stunts, heavy exploitation effort being put back of it in many instances. Stories of some of these campaigns follow:

An atmospheric prologue featured the presentation at Newman's theatre, Kansas City, Mo. The scene taken for the tabloid reproduction was the bar room, with the seven characters in costume.

A prima donna of popular fame in Kansas City, Grace Foster, sang "The Girl of the Golden West" ballad as the theme for the film. The bystanders, gamblers and bartenders contributed several numbers.

The scene was set in a semi-lighted stage with the spot light shifting to the various characters as each did his specialty number. The prologue seemed to please, judging by the applause and build up a favorable attitude for the feature.

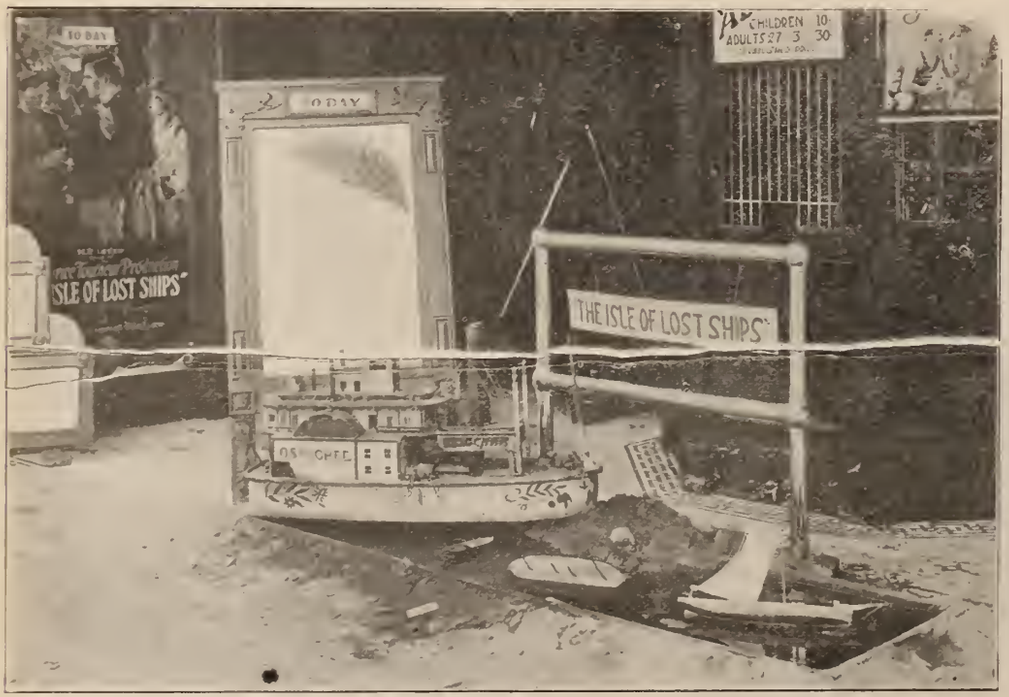
Illustrated Song Slides Used

The day of the illustrated slide for popular songs is coming back. We have had instances recently of such use in motion picture houses. The most sweeping acceptance of the popular song, however, has come in the case of "The Girl of the Golden West." At the Chicago theatre and in other houses throughout the midwest territory a complete set of slides have been prepared to be mailed to exhibitors to go with the picture and song tie-up. The slides are made from stills from the production, scenes showing Warren Kerrigan and Sylvia Breamer in the leading roles. The typed verses of the song were inserted on the stills in letters large enough for the entire audience to read.

Anniversary Week Hooked In

"Anniversary Week" offers one of the best weeks of the year for an exploitation that brings box-office returns. The Rialto theatre in Omaha, the metropolis of Nebraska and Iowa, is our sample in this instance. The Rialto, for every year during the five that it has been open, has stressed its anniversary week.

Julius K. Johnson, whose abilities as a manager have been responsible for the Rialto's continued success during the last three years, has continued to emphasize and to profit by the Anniversary Week idea. The 1923 anniversary was celebrated recently with "The Girl of the Golden West" and "The Love Nest." The exploitation for the week was centered about these two pictures as well as about the "Anniversary Week" idea, celebrating the Rialto's fifth birthday.



Fifty bill-board twenty-four sheet stands were used for the specially prepared sheets. Little anniversary flags or banners, supplied by the Rialto, were used to form a canopy over the sidewalk in front of the theatre, which occupies a prominent corner space downtown. These, together with large banners announcing the Anniversary Week, and the specially painted signs displayed in the arches over the doorways, attracted a great deal of attention.

A hand-drawn, pen and ink, western scene by Gordon Bennett, Rialto staff artist, was used in special newspaper ads. Two of the city's three big dailies, the Omaha Bee and Daily News, featured the picture, "The Girl of the Golden West," in full page displays of advertisements by firms that had traveling and vacation articles to sell.

Gypsy Shadow Box in Lobby on "Law of the Lawless"

Manager Hugo Plath of the Palace theatre, Fort Smith, Ark., used as a lobby display to advertise "Law of the Lawless" a shadow box, which was a miniature setting of a gypsy camp with small tent, tripod, under which was a small red lamp to represent fire.

The floor was covered with sand and the figures used in this scene were cut out of the 11x14 photos. Flasher system was used to attract attention.

Window Displays Tie Up to "Trifling With Honor"

Manager Edgar Hart, of the Old Mill theatre, Dallas, Texas, advertised "Trifling with Honor," by arranging two window tie-ups with the local hardware stores, in which were displayed baseball equipment in connection with the cut-outs of the baseball players. The largest department store in town allowed Mr. Ha t to place heralds in all packages sent out from the store.

Rain checks printed and announcing the greatest of baseball romances were handed out to the baseball fans at a local ball park. These rain checks were nothing other than announcements about the picture and that it was of considerable interest to baseball fans.

A special showing of the picture was held for the newspaper men and for captains of fifteen local amateur ball clubs, three days in advance of play date. A special prize contest was held among the different ball clubs to stimulate interest among its members to see the picture at the Old Mill.

Manager Warns Patrons to Keep "Within the Law"

Reedsport, Ore., recently went through a flurry of excitement, occasioned by a publicity scheme concocted by A. F. Edwards, owner of the Edwards theatre, and E. L. Fitzgerald, press representative.

All Reedsport woke up one morning to find the front door placarded with a card that read in big boldface: "Warning. Keep Within the Law."

Then all kinds of strange rumors went around. It was reported that two police officers were under arrest and the arrests, on a charge of accepting bribes, were actually made on the "implied understanding" that the briber would not be arrested or informed upon. Several other arrests were reported to be imminent, and a general clean-up campaign was inaugurated under the slogan "Keep Within the Law."

By the time public suspicion had reached its climax Edwards made his announcement of the coming attraction. The Reedsport Courier regarded the incident as a news story and printed the explanation.

Three Newspaper Contests Aid "Penrod and Sam"

An unusual exploitation achievement was recently put over by the Chicago theatre and the local publicity office of Associated First National in connection with the showing of "Penrod and Sam" at the Balaban and Katz house in Chicago.

With six newspapers to draw from, the "Penrod and Sam" publicists succeeded in persuading half that number to run contests on the picture simultaneously.

The Chicago American conducted a newsboy contest in which prizes were awarded for the best essays on "Smart Dogs." The contest was open only to news carriers of the American, but several columns of space was devoted to it daily. The major prizes consisted of two sets of "Penrod and Sam" clothes and eight copies of the Tarkington book, furnished to the newspapers gratis by local retailers.

Fifty tickets for the showing was sufficient to secure a vast amount of space in the Chicago Post, which ran a contest termed "Timothy Twisters." Members of the Post's Kiddy Club competed for the awards by writing six-word tongue twisters in which appeared the word "Penrod."

The Chicago Tribune was the third paper to feature a "Penrod and Sam" contest, awarding tickets to those of its readers who wrote the best essays on the subject "What Motion Picture Have You Seen That You Liked Best?"

The Chicago theatre newspaper campaign was further augmented by six elaborate window displays in the loop district, devoted to a tie-up between the "Penrod and Sam" book and the showing of the picture. The outstanding feature of the window tie-ups was the exceptionally attractive display in the window of the Marshall Field store—one of the best locations in the city—the value of which for advertising purposes is regarded as inestimable.

All Around Campaign Puts "Safety Last" Across

An unusually complete campaign was used by Manager Roy Smart of the Noble theatre, Anniston, Ala., to put "Safety Last" over, including a dummy on building, cut-out of the climbing figure of Harold Lloyd, penny matinee staged through co-operation with the paper, street car dashboard signs, generous use of the various accessories, slides, newspapers, etc.

STUNT TO BOOST "THE MAIL MAN"

Two weeks in advance the newspaper advertising was started. The campaign was begun also with slides announcing the picture and expressing the belief that more persons would see "Safety Last" than had ever attended a picture engagement in Anniston.

A dummy dressed in a white suit and straw hat was placed on one of the highest buildings in Anniston in advance and removed to the theatre during run. A cut-out from the six-sheet was also used in the center of town, the figure of Lloyd being so arranged that he appeared to be crawling over the cornice.

A forty-foot banner was stretched across the main street and remained there for a week. Street car dashboard signs were used just prior to opening and during entire run. Three windows were obtained and these carried photos and appropriate cards.

A week in advance a display was made in the lobby of "Safety Last" balloons, photocards and lithos, and these were given away to the children.

Through co-operation with The Star, a Penny Matinee was staged. A coupon appeared in the paper entitling any child fourteen or under to admission to the first performance by presenting the coupon and one penny. As a result 571 children attended the opening performance, blocking the street before the theatre opened. This crowd attracted lots of attention. The children were delighted and went out talking the picture, while many of them came back the second time, at regular admission prices.

Chamber of Commerce Boost Aids "The Go-Getter"

Thomas G. Coleman, manager of the Galax theatre, Birmingham, Ala., profited by a Chamber of Commerce tie-up on "The Go-Getter." A private screening in advance was arranged, to which the officials of the Chamber of Commerce were invited, with the result that they gave their unanimous endorsement to the film, as follows:

"It typifies the spirit of boosters, go-getters and energetic pushers. Both employer and employee should see it. It is not only inspiring, but exceptionally entertaining."

Post cards carried this message to a worthwhile mailing list, including the entire membership of the Birmingham Chamber of Commerce, the cards being run off by them on their addressograph, after being printed. They bore the signature of O. L. Bunn, general manager, Birmingham Chamber of Commerce, and said plainly: "Don't Fail to See 'The Go-Getter' at the Galax Week, July 2d." Newspaper ads also featured the endorsement.

Another bit of advance work arousing interest was teaser cards, size 11x14, printed in black on white: "Join the Birmingham Go-Getter Club." These were placed in downtown windows, fastened on automobiles, etc., and owing to the absence of any theatre name or date created unusual attention.

Fan Letter Contest Boosts "Souls for Sale" Run

Flowers' jewelry store, Junction City, Kans., tied up with Goldwynner Homer Gill in a fan letter tie-up to exploit the showing of "Souls for Sale" at the Cozy theatre, Manager Maurice Jencks and Mr. Gill went to the proprietor of the store with the loving cup stunt.

The jewelry store offered a loving cup as the prize to be awarded to the person writing the best fan letter to Eleanor Boardman. The loving cup was displayed in the window of the store together with photographs and special cards. The contest was further tied up with the local daily newspapers, which printed several stories on the contest and also the best of the hundreds of fan letters to Miss Boardman which were received. Other prizes were tickets to the screening of "Souls For Sale." A copy of the winning fan letter was sent to Miss Boardman.

Special Displays on "Love Piker"

Poster Cut-outs Used Effectively by Exhibitors in Fronts for Production

POSTER cutouts and similar special display material have been used to good advantage by first-run exhibitors in preparing their lobby displays for use during the showing of "The Love Piker."

A beautiful but simple and inexpensive lobby display was made at Rowland & Clark's State theatre, Pittsburgh. The house artist was called upon to wield his brush under the guiding eye of William N. Robson, Goldwyn Cosmopolitan exploitation man.

Above the entrance doors in the lobby was placed a large painted cutout figure of Anita Stewart, with parrot on shoulder and toy spaniel with forepaws on her arm. On each side of her was a parrot in a ring screaming "Piker!" at her. Across the bottom of the painted figure was the title of the picture in cutout letters. The background and the letters were painted in gold and given a mottled effect by roughly sprinkling plaster of paris on them. The letters which came from the parrots' mouths, forming the word "piker," were cutouts and stood away from the background.

On the wall on either side was a six-sheet poster. One of these was made by using the figure on the three-sheet as a cutout with the background hand-painted. Three large frames of stills were displayed in the center of the lobby. The usual newspaper advertising and billing was done.

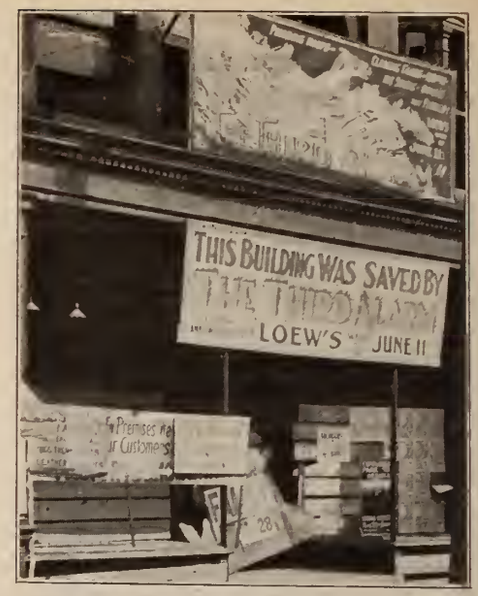
Heavy Newspaper Advertising

When "The Love Piker" was shown at the Merrill theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., a newspaper campaign was depended upon almost exclusively to exploit the showing. The advertising was somewhat increased and the papers used an unusually large amount of special articles and photographs.

The lobby was decorated with an especially painted banner over the entrance door, which reproduced a scene from the picture in which several of the principal characters appeared. "The Love Piker" heralds and accessories designed by the Goldwyn Cosmopolitan exploitation department were used freely.

Signboard Contest is Used on "Rustle of Silk"

In addition to his usual advance advertising methods, Manager Albert Hill of the Imperial theatre, Jacksonville, Fla., conceived the idea of a Signboard Contest on "Rustle of Silk," which got attention because of its novelty in Jacksonville.



On a lighted twenty-four sheet board on the corner of Jacksonville a teaser ad was painted. By outlining only portions of the letters of the ad, a most tantalizing series of hieroglyphics was accomplished. Beginning more than a week in advance of playing date, teaser ads appeared daily calling attention to the strange looking board, getting people's curiosity aroused in trying to figure it out.

The painters worked on the sign only during the busiest hours of the day, when the streets were more or less crowded. And it is needless to say that the stunt attracted attention, for this is one thing the crowds will always stop to watch. Day by day he sign became more legible until it was completed. Then, at the bottom appeared the line in red letters "If It's a Paramount Picture It's the Best Show in Town." Hereby hangs the tale of the contest. After seeing the completed sign, re-writing it on a sheet of paper, a prize was offered to the person who would write the best article of twenty words, telling why they thought this statement was true.

Mr. Hill reports that the contest was satisfactory in every way, and is confident of having capitalized on its advertising results.

TIMELY TIE-UP ON "THIRD ALARM"
Showing how Loew's theatre, Ottawa, took advantage of a local fire to exploit "The Third Alarm" (F. B. O.)

Campaign in Australia for "One Week of Love"

"One Week of Love" was accorded a heavy exploitation campaign recently in Australia by Selznick, a wide range of stunts being used to attract public attention to the picture.

One of the outstanding tie-ups made was a special screening at the society ball in Sydney, the biggest social event of the year in that city. The city's elect was represented at this function and the screening of a picture at such an affair is probably without precedent.

A formal dinner dance was also given by Selznick Pictures (Aus.), Ltd., at the Wentworth Hotel in Sydney, at which "One Week of Love" was also screened. Invitations were issued to Sydney society folk to whom it proved to be a very interesting innovation.

A motor lorry was fitted as a traveling ballyhoo, having both sides used for posters and the inside being very comfortably appointed with sleeping quarters, a stove and everything that goes to make up a traveling home. This was used in a very comprehensive tour of every country town in the state. It created much interest among the country folk.

Novelties of all descriptions were used by the various theatres, in addition to heavy newspaper advertising campaign.

Midnight Showing Given on "One Exciting Night"

The midnight show angle was used by Manager H. B. Clarke, of the Garing theatre, Greenville, S. C., to put "One Exciting Night" over, and 200 invitations were issued to a selected list of prominent people and newspapermen. This proved a real success. In addition to the 200 invitation passes there were many paid admissions. All doubts as to how a thing of this nature would take in Greenville were dispelled by the furor which resulted and the numerous requests of patrons to know when the theatre would again pull a similar event.

The papers gave much publicity to the event, which was really one of the principal reasons for having this performance. The result was two-column head lines.

Duplicates Own Street for "Main Street" Lobby

In planning his "Main Street" campaign, Manager F. J. Miller, of the Modjeska theatre, Augusta, Ga., selected one of the principal business blocks of the city for reproduction and had his house artist duplicate every building in the block by painting it on beaverboard. Then each one was cut out and set up in the lobby against a painted background of blue sky and scuddy clouds. The duplication was exact, even to color, including all signs appearing on the original building, as well as flag poles and flags. The windows were transparent and were illuminated, showing up effectively at night. The small flags on top of the buildings were kept in motion by means of a small electric fan concealed behind them.

In front of the buildings, the Confederate Monument, also reproduced, loomed up, and two street cars, each with transparent windows attracted attention with their flashing lights. The trolley line poles with street lights on them were also illuminated. These were small electric lights, the same that are used with miniature train sets.

APPROPRIATE "HEART RAIDER" LOBBY
F. J. Miller of the Rialto theatre, Augusta, Ga., prepared this special lobby for the showing of "The Heart Raider" (Paramount)

Varied Publicity Campaign for "The White Rose"

Howard Price Kingsmore, manager of the Howard theatre, Atlanta, Ga., recently put "The White Rose" over with an exploitation campaign which embraced every possible feature, a few of which are enumerated below.

The Howard theatre does not make a custom of holding special showings, but on "The White Rose" 500 invitations were issued to the most representative people of the city.

This was the first picture in some months to have received Mr. Kingsmore's personal endorsement. However, newspaper advertising incorporated his endorsement and laid stress on its premier showing, that it was one of the greatest love stories ever told, and also that the scenes were laid in the South. It was heralded as Griffith's best picture since "The Birth of a Nation."

A special letter was mailed out over a mailing list comprising 5,000 patrons. The stationery carried a cut of a white rose and the letter included the manager's personal endorsement, as well as a number of convincing criticisms.

One week in advance of opening the entire lobby was decorated with artificial white roses, which hung in streamers from the central chandelier. A three-sheet board, as well as one-sheet boards, displayed about the lobby had white rose decorations. At the foot of the grand stairway in foyer, tall baskets held real roses. These were replaced daily and kept fresh by placing the stems in glass tubes filled with water. Thus was produced the effect of roses growing at the foot of the stairway. The ledge in the main lobby, or foyer, which is the size of a 24-sheet, carried a huge cutout of a white rose, in the center of which the two main characters were depicted in the love scene in the garden.

Triple Exploitation Given "Mighty Lak' a Rose"

When "Mighty Lik' a Rose" played Wilmer & Vincent's Colonial theatre, Allentown, Pa., the manager worked a triple play.

He used the two for one admission ticket for juveniles at matinees. He obtained the services of Dolly Parker, a child actress, to give a prologue symbolizing Rose of the picture. Finally free roses were given to women attending the first evening performance.

At the Colonial theatre, Easton, Pa., Manager Fred Osterstock also gave out roses. He introduced a novelty in the running of the picture by having the projectionist break off just before reaching the first leader. From a concealed part of the orchestra the song "Mighty Lak' a Rose" was put on from a record made by an operatic star. At the conclusion of the song the picture went on again.

"ONLY A SHOP GIRL" CENTRE-PIECE

"Main Street" Campaign Is Well Varied in Nature

The campaign put over by Manager H. C. Farley, of the Empire theatre, Montgomery, Ala., embraced a number of appropriate and novel features. In addition to the usual advance work, posters, photos, etc., 1,000 especially made stickers were put out, reading: "Be careful on all streets and watch for 'Main Street.'" These were not only stuck in every available spot in town, on buildings, fences, posts on all streets leading to town, but they were also sent out in packages from a number of stores.

A "Main Street" contest was featured, offering a prize of $25 to the person naming the "Main Street" of Montgomery and giving his reasons for believing that it should be. This contest was put on through the auspices of the leading newspaper, the Advertiser, and it was given lots of publicity, including a front page cartoon and article on editorial page. The only cost attached to the contest was the prize money.

The window cards put out by Mr. Farley were quite novel. They were constructed of beaverboard, in the shape of lamp-posts, and in place of the light, a still from the picture and on the cross arm, the title, "Main Street," Empire theatre and date.

Lamp-posts were prominent in the lobby, four of these, seven feet high, were placed one on each side of the box office and one on each corner under the marquee. They were of beaverboard and were fitted up with electric lights installed with flasher sockets. The title, "Main Street" was printed in large letters on the cross arm. These lamp-posts were so placed that they must be seen, no matter whether a person was going in or out of the theatre, or from the opposite side of the street.

Clown Street Ballyhoo is "Three Wise Fools" Aid

Excellent results are reported by Manager Roy McMullen of the Merrill theatre, Milwaukee, on a street ballyhoo which he used on "Three Wise Fools."

Three young men dressed in clown costumes, white with big red spots, clown white make-up, pointed clown caps and marked signs on their back, "Three Wise Fools," Merrill theatre, August 18 and all week. Then these men were sent on the streets four hours daily on Friday and Saturday, attracting much attention.

"HAS THE WORLD GONE MAD" LOBBY

Minuet is "Shot" to Boost "Ashes of Vengeance"

In connection with the showing of "Ashes of Vengeance" at the Apollo theatre, New York City, the public picture taking stunt that was first used throughout the country on "The Cross-roads of New York" was employed to give New Yorkers a thrill. In the center of Central Park Mall twelve costumed ladies and gentlemen went through the minuet that formed the opening scenes of the picture and the camera clicked to their movements.

The actual taking of the picture was the result of several weeks' ardous work. Dancing schools were combed for talent. The best amateur applicants were considered and prospective picture stars were even advertised for. In all 600 men and women responded to the call of the camera.

From these about 100 were tentatively retained. Rehearsals made the process of elimination easy, and the field was finally narrowed down to the necessary dozen.

The actual taking of the film was well broadcasted so that newspaper reporters and news service photographers were on hand. It required about an hour to film the scene, including close-ups. At the conclusion of the performance each of the girls was presented with a necklace of Norma pearls by Mr. Lichtenstein, head of the jewelry house manufacturing them. The film, as had been announced, was subsequently shown at all the Loew houses.

Fur Fashion Show Prologue to "Girl of Golden West"

A fur fashion show, presented as a prologue, was one of the attractive ways in which Manager H. B. Wright of the Strand theatre put over "The Girl of the Golden West" in Seattle recently.

The prologue was presented through Manager Wright's co-operation with the Baker Fur Company of that city. Latest style evolvements in fur were attractively displayed by four living models furnished by the store. During the style prologue, an atmospheric musical background was provided by the Strand orchestra.

Aside from the entertainment of the theatre audiences, the prologue was good for a full page display in color process work in the Sunday magazine section of the Seattle Times. The Times used five photographs of the models, displaying various modes, as a full page fashion feature. The page was done in several colors, and each garment was appropriately described. Large type emphasized the fact that the garments were furnished by the Baker Fur Company and were shown on living models at the Strand theatre four times daily in a specially prepared fur fashion prologue; along with the presentation of the picture, "The Girl of the Golden West."

Grumpy Is Tied Up With "Opportunity Days"

Manager H. W. Larned of the Victoria theatre, Tamaqua, Pa., put over an effective and inexpensive campaign on "Grumpy" with the assistance of Bud Gray, Paramount e ploiteer.

The merchants of the town happened to be having a drive called "Opportunity Days." This was tied up by window strips and pennants. These pennants were fastened around the marquee of the theatre in addition to being placed in the windows. These streamers and pennants were placed in about eighty windows, but only a few displays were played up in the heart of the town. Cutouts of Theodore Roberts from one-sheets were mounted and placed along with the streamers in the windows. One thousand heralds were distributed in the newspaper.

Teasers were placed five days in advance, stressing the mystery angle and offering reward for information leading to the recovery of the missing diamond.

NEWS AND VIEWS OF THE SHORT-LENGTH PRODUCTION

Short Subjects and Serials

COMING ATTRACTIONS FOR THE DIVERSIFIED PROGRAM

E. W. Hammons Going Abroad on Business Trip

E. W. HAMMONS, president of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., has arranged for a trip abroad and will sail from New York aboard the Belgianland, Wednesday, September 5.

Mr. Hammons will be gone for about six weeks, most of his time abroad being spent in London, where he will take up the arrangements for the handling of the large program of Short Subjects which Mr. Hammons recently announced for Educational.

"Foreign business on short subjects has never been better," said Mr. Hammons, "and at the present time the releasing schedule on Educational's product in the United Kingdom and parts of Continental Europe is practically up with our domestic release schedule, although most feature subjects do not make their appearance abroad for many months after their showing here.

"The thirty per cent. increase in our product will, of course, make necessary considerable extensions in our foreign connections, and we confidently look forward to our biggest year in foreign lands, as we do here."

Charles Christie, general manager of the Christie Film Company, producing Christie Comedies for Educational, is at present in London, where he will meet Mr. Hammons.

Revival of Old "Imp" Subject for Special Showing

A film revival that is a record-breaker in several respects is that of "Through the Air," a melodramatic thriller that was produced under the "Imp" banner in 1909. The subject has been reproduced at the request of Captain Frank Goodale, manager of the Loew theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, who was the star of the picture along with Mary Young. "Through the Air" had to do with an airship flight and Manager Goodale, who is well known as a balloonist, was featured in the early production.

Thanks to the efforts of the Canadian Universal Films and through the kindness of Clair Hague, general manager of Canadian Universal, the picture was traced at the request of Captain Goodale. The negative was discovered among some Universal archieves at New York and a print has been made for the Ottawa manager who is arranging to screen it on a special occasion in the near future.

Urban Classic Release of Current Interest

The current Vitagraph release of Urban Popular Classics is of particular interest to hikers who are enjoying tramps through the woods during the season of Indian summer. It is called "Sagebrushing Through Yellowstone National Park." In this great national preserve hikers who own their own camping outfit and who "go it alone" are called "sagebrushers."

Sunshine Comedy Staff Augmented

Additions to Directorial and Acting Forces Part of Plan for Extension

THE SUNSHINE COMEDY, produced by Fox Film Corporation, has been embellished during recent weeks by important additions to the directorial staff. And advancement has been made not only in the direction of the short subjects. Comedians from every stage and lot have been marshalled to complete the efficiency of the laugh producers, declares the Fox announcement.

Much of the addition and elaboration of existing conditions relative to the making of Sunshine Comedies is declared to be directly due to the favorable reports from exhibitors in the United States, England, France, Italy, Japan and Australia. Letters, too, have poured into the New York and West Coast headquarters of William Fox in strong commendation of the excellent comedy values in this brand, it is stated.

Included in the staff of directors now engaged in their production are Thomas Buckingham, Jack G. Blystone, who recently directed Tom Mix in "Soft Boiled," a special for 1923-1924; George (Slim) Summerville, Lou Seiler, Erle Kenton and Bryan Foy, son of Eddie Foy, the noted comedian, who was recently promoted from the scenario staff to handle direction.

Among the new additions to the featured performers in Sunshine Comedies will be seen Lew Brice, brother of Fannie Brice, the Ziegfeld Follies star, who was recently signed by William Fox to a contract to appear in a series of the two-reelers.

Duane Thompson, new leading woman for Sid Smith in his series of twelve two-reel comedies for Grand-Asher

August 26 saw the release of the latest Sunshine, "Jungle Pals," a bit of fun work with a trio of "humanzees." "The Explorers" is scheduled for an early September release and "Unreal News Real" will be issued September 23. October 7 will be the date for distribution of "Dance or Die," previously announced as "The Marathon Dancers."

Hy Mayer to Direct Universal Comedies

Hy Mayer, well known cartoonist, has returned to Universal and is on his way to the Coast to make comedies for Carl Laemmle. Years ago Hy Mayer saw in the screen an opportunity which the newspaper field did not afford. It was not long before the New York Times cartoonist was putting his ability to caricature public men and to signalize public events in pleasant satire on the screen through the medium of the Animated Weekly, the news reel which Universal made and released. When Universal discontinued its Animated Weekly, Hy Mayer started making Travelaughs, and his work has been constantly before the public ever since.

Now Mr. Mayer is embarking in a new media. The comedies that he will make at Universal City will not be cartoon comedies and will not be taken from any of his cartoons or travels. He intends to make straight comedies, using his gift of humor as a director and not as a pen-man.

Ascher Circuit Closes for Four Pathe Series

The Ascher Circuit of Chicago has entered into the spirit of Pathe's new product two-reel comedy campaign by closing an unusually comprehensive booking contract including whole series of these subjects, featuring four different stars.

Releases of the comedies included in the Ascher Circuit booking will continue well into the coming season. The product under contract is Pathe's first series of Ben Turpin two-reel comedies from the Mack Sennett studios; the third series of "Our Gang" comedies produced by Hal Roach, and also from the Roach studios the first series of Will Rogers comedies and the third series of Snub Pollard two-reelers.

Second "Fighting Blood" Is Given B'way Premiere

"So This Is Hollywood?" the second of H. C. Witwer's Fighting Blood series, had its premiere at the Central theatre, New York, last week.

Roach Meets New England Exhibs

Conducts Informal Conferences With Boston and New Haven Theatre Owners

PRODUCER HAL ROACH during last week got together on a frank and informal basis with nearly a hundred representative exhibitors in New England and New York State territories. This was the start of Mr. Roach's long-planned tour of motion picture distributing key centers for the purpose of meeting exhibitors of all sections of the country and discussing with them details of the mutual interests of the exhibitor and the producer.

Prior to the beginning of this tour, Hal Roach's personal knowledge of the United States east of the Hudson River was limited to the results of his occasional visits to New York City to look over the field of picture talent with a view to discovering new types for one or more of his seven producing units or to confer with Pathe officials about contemplated new lines of product. On the Pacific Coast, however, he had for a long time kept in close personal touch with theatre owners, understanding their problems and dealing with them on a basis of mutual good will and real co-operation.

Mr. Roach's meetings with New England exhibitors were informally arranged by Stanley B. Waite, Pathe sales manager two-reel comedies, who was formerly branch manager at Boston. Mr. Waite accompanied the producer on his visits to New Haven and Boston. Formal appointments or introductions were entirely "out of the picture."

At New Haven, Pathe Branch Manager C. D. Haskett had more than a score of the progressive exhibitors of that territory assembled to talk things over with Hal Roach. The same kind of informal conference was arranged at Boston by Pathe Branch Manager Joseph Partridge. At Albany, at the end of the week, Branch Manager Frank Bruner had no difficulty in "rounding up" twenty-five or thirty live picture showmen, all eager to fire pertinent and pressing exhibitor questions at Producer Hal Roach.

Returning to his desk at the Pathe home office, having auspiciously launched Mr. Roach on his tour, Mr. Waite declared that the character of this get-together of producer and exhibitors missed nothing to be desired in the way of friendliness, frankness and the spirit of co-operation on both sides.

Here's One More Vote in Favor of Short Subject

Evidently our convictions concerning the appeal and box office value of the Short Subject are shared by some outside as well as inside the industry. Witness the following culled from a Salt Lake City newspaper:

"The value of the one and two-reel comedies is rapidly beginning to be realized as attractions that add to the box office receipts. Often these short films draw as much applause and enthusiasm from an audience as the main feature. This is particularly the case in modern-day comedies, which not only create an atmosphere but tend to leave an impression in the minds of the onlookers that is favorable to the theatre in which they are shown.

"The old-time policy used to be drawn-out comedies, chiefly featuring slapstick work. These soon became tiresome and were so overdone that naturally they fell into disfavor. Now comes the short, snappy style with something doing every minute.

"One exhibitor recently said at a Chicago moving picture convention that he wished he could get pictures that were not padded and tiresome, short pictures jammed with action, subjects handled in a way that made them the 'Spice of the Program.'

New "Pal" Comedy for Century Reaches New York

"Don't Scream," which was formerly known as "Pal Puts It Over," reached New York after three previews on the Pacific coast.

The cast is headed by Pal, the new dog star of the Century Film Corporation. Al Herman directed it, and the leading male role is played by Ernie Adams, creator of the role of Lester in "Listen Lester."

This makes number two of the Pal series.

Scenes from the Cameo comedy, "His New Papa," which will be released by Educational Film Exchanges. Cliff Bowes and Virginia Vance appear in the featured roles.

Paul Parrott and Marie Mosquini in "Live Wires," which appears on the Pathe schedule.

Prominent Boxing Promoter Commends Fight Series

The screen adaptations of H. C. Witwer's "Fighting Blood" stories, produced by F. B. O., were recently praised as wielding paramount influence in uplifting the ideals of boxing as a sport by no less an authority than James Wood Coffroth, better known as "Sunny Jim" Coffroth and for many years one of the world's foremost boxing promoters. Mr. Coffroth, who is now president of the Tia Juana Jockey Club, recently saw some of "The Fighting Blood" series and expressed the following opinion:

"Never before has any picture been brought to the screen that has done as much as the H. C. Witwer 'Fighting Blood' stories as produced by F. B. O. with George O'Hara as Gale Galen, to uplift the ideals of boxing as a sport.

"'Fighting Blood' exemplifies the very soul of America. The fight scenes are done perfectly. Cooke as the manager is superb. Of course, O'Hara will soon be the talk of the country. His work is corking. But beyond any of the splendid individual performances the spirit of the whole series is the biggest factor. It will do much to keep the invincible spirit of youth on the march—and it is this spirit that moves the nation."

International News Reel Sets New Speed Record

Through the co-operation of the newly established airplane service of the United States mail, which has cut the time between New York and San Francisco down to less than thirty hours, International News Reel No. 70 was shipped from New York Friday morning at 11 o'clock and was shown on the screen of the California theatre in San Francisco at 2 o'clock Saturday afternoon.

In the event that the government definitely establishes this coast-to-coast airplane mail service arrangements will be made for delivery of the issues of the International News Reel by this service, according to word from the International offices.

Pathe Announces Schedule of Releases for Sept. 9

TWO comedies, a serial episode, an Aesop's Film Fable number, a Pathe Review, a Topics of the Day issue and the customary semi-weekly editions of Pathe News appear on Pathe's schedule of releases set for September 9.

"Skylarking" is the title of the Mack Sennett comedy, which presents Harry Gribbon, Kewpie Morgan, Alberta Vaughn, Lila Leslie and the child actors, Jackie Lucas and Josephine Adair, in the principal roles. The comedy is built around a flying flivver, which precipitates all sorts of amusing adventures. An appreciation of this subject appears in the short-subject review column of this issue.

Paul Parrott appears in a single-reeler bearing the title "Take the Air." This subject is also reviewed in the present issue.

In the fifth episode of "Her Dangerous Path," the prophetic sands visualize the adventures that would befall the heroine (played by Edna Murphy) as the wife of a handsome young artist.

"The Walrus Hunters" is the title of the Aesop's Film Fables number and presents Farmer Al Falfa and Henry Cat in a series of amusing adventures in the ice-bound regions of the Northland.

Pathe Review No. 36 includes some striking views of chemical reactions, which bear remarkable resemblances to certain phenomena in nature, and a beautiful Pathecolor presentation of the Grand Canyon of the Colorado.

"My Pal" Is New Century Dog Comedy

"My Pal," now in the first week of production, will be Pal the dog's third comedy for Century. Al Herman will again direct the canine comedian in this picture. Alice Day, a new screen ingenue; Harry Pringle, Fred Spencer and Ernie Adams appear in support.

Here's an instance of a theatre giving the short-subject a chance to show its drawing power. Lloyd Hamilton in "F. O. B." shares a quarter page ad with Jane Novak in a feature attraction. The display was arranged by the Apollo Theatre, Indianapolis, Ind.

New Angle of Fun Is Christie Aim

More Broad Comedy Situations and Faster Action Sought in Product

ADVANCE information of the 1923-24 series of Christie Comedies for release through Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., indicate that Christie will this season contribute a number of unusual comedies to the Educational program.

The new series will evidently be a departure from the last in that there will be more broad comedy situations and faster action. The same quality in story, plot, settings and photography will be maintained, it is understood, and more of the "gag" situations, which are proving so popular with the theatregoers, will be incorporated in each picture.

Action and thrills are promised in a number of the new comedies, particularly those featuring Jimmie Adams, whose two pictures under the Christie banner last season, "Green as Grass," and the blackface comedy, "Roll Along," met with distinct favor, according to all reports.

The first picture of the series, "Navy Blues," with Dorothy Devore, is noteworthy in that the major portion of the action is staged aboard two of the biggest battleships of the Pacific fleet, the California and the Tennessee.

In Bobby Vernon's first picture of the new series, "Hold Everything," which is laid in an old maids' home, more action than usual is shown. The comedy plot embraces the effects of a few jazz phonograph records on the drooping spirits of the old maids.

Jimmie Adams' first picture of the new series, now in the course of production, is "Done In Oil," and has for its locale the extensive oil fields around Los Angeles. Beside the novel comedy plot, wherein Adams is seen as a hick oil stock salesman, there are reported to be a number of thrilling stunts performed around the derricks which are said to be of real serial calibre.

Neal Burns is working on a comedy which is declared to be exceptional in both plot and settings, the former being very "girlie," and the latter carrying the atmosphere of the theatre and cabaret.

Buffalo Stages Second Baby Peggy Resemblance Test

Buffalo has just witnessed its second Baby Peggy Contest. The first, held some seven weeks ago, was handled in the city itself. The second, which ran over a course of eight days before the choosing of the "doubles," was handled at Erie Beach—just outside Buffalo. Both were run by the Buffalo Times. Both of these contests received a great deal of newspaper space and came just about the time Baby Peggy's comedies were released to exhibitors.

Ten "doubles" of Baby Peggy were chosen at the Erie Beach, from hundreds of entries. The crowd of children with their mothers or fathers was so large that instead of holding the judging of the kiddies opposite the Casino the large open air pavilion had to be used. The children paraded past the judges, made up of Universal's exploitation man in Buffalo, Roland McCurdy and local business men. Papers carried ads with Baby Peggy screamers, and Erie Beach ads called attention to the great kiddie contest.

Many of the theatres showing Baby Peggy comedies worked along the idea that after the contest the kiddies could see Peggy on the screen.

"Yes, We Have No Pajamas" to Be Century Comedy

Announcement comes from the Centnry Comedy studio that president Julius Stern plans to make "Yes, We Have No Pajamas," with the Century Follies Girls, and possibly Jack Cooper. The story will have to be original, and it is not definite whether Edward Luddy or Al Herman will be chosen to write and direct it.

Picturesque Minuet of 16th Century Made in One Reel

The Central Park Mall, New York City, served as a location last Saturday afternoon for a company of players engaged in the filming of a one-reeler, which shows how the minuet was danced back in the sixteenth century. The inspiration for this unique single-reel production came from Norma Talmadge's current success at the Apollo theatre, New York, titled, "Ashes of Vengeance," and the costumes worn by the dancers were those employed in that picture. The twelve girls participating in the minuet were selected by Flo Ziegfeld from a total of over six hundred applicants who presented themselves as candidates. The single-reeler is to be shown at all the Loew houses ne t week and also at the Apollo in conjunction with "Ashes of Vengeance."

Coliseum, Seattle, Breaks Comedy on Sport Page

When Educational's latest Mermaid Comedy, "The Busher," which was adapted from the "You Know Me. Al." letters by Ring W. Lardner, was booked by the Coliseum theatre, Seattle, the great popularity of the Lardner baseball stories among baseball fans and other sports lovers was taken advantage of in the Coliseum's advertising.

Space was taken on the sports page of the Seattle Post-Intelligencer for special advertising on this comedy subject with no reference to the other items on the program. An "ad" seven inches by one column was carried, with a picture of Lee Moran, featured comedian in this comedy, in one of his comical poses on the ball field.

Variety Marks Pathe Product for New Season

THE policy which Pathe has steadily pursued of stimulating regular attendance at motion picture theatres through the release of a wide range and variety of subjects representing the best efforts of leading producers and screen favorites is emphasized in its announcement for the season of 1923-24.

The highlights of this inviting program—outlined on this and other pages of this issue—comprise some innovations that are among the best evidences that the motion picture industry is progressing along lines of the greatest interest and value to the increasing millions who support it.

Most conspicuous among these carefully prepared-for campaigns is the one that engages the co-operation of all classes of exhibitors in logical means of making regular patrons of the whole family. This is the perfecting of the well-balanced program of short subjects, together with material inducements offered to exhibitors for the regular scheduling of all-comedy programs and "comedy days" at their theatres.

That the popular demand for good short comedies was never greater as it is today, Pathe declares to be demonstrated in all sections. The further step of establishing definite "comedy days"—already taken with success by many theatre owners—finds its profit-insuring keynote in the enormously successful development of the two-reel comedy as a drawing feature to be depended on. It adds the needed final touch of exploitation advantages which extends to the entire all-comedy program the advertised attractions commanded by popular dramatic features.

Notable from the start on this account, have been the "Our Gang" two-reel comedies. They are "featured" wherever played—and that is now practically everywhere. During the coming year, in addition to thirteen "Our Gangs" Pathe will release thirteen other two-reel comedies from the Hal Roach studios starring Will Rogers, and an equal number featuring Stan Laurel. From the Mack Sennett studios come thirteen Mack Sennett two-reelers, and six or eight comedies of the same length starring Ben Turpin. In all probability there will be still others. More than an average of one per week of these all-comedy program features, and for independent screening with other classes of pictures, is assured release with the Pathe stamp.

Another important Pathe contribution is the ten-episode "short story" serial novelty beginning with the recently released "Her Dangerous Path," with Edna Murphy, from the Hal Roach studios. Two other examples will be released during the season—"The Way of a Man," adapted from Emerson Hough's novel of Western pioneer days and now being produced under the supervision of George B. Seitz, and "Leatherstocking," a serial screen version of J. Fenimore Cooper's immortal "Leatherstocking Tales." These three novelties in the way of Pathe Serials, contrasted with current fifteen-episode releases and Ruth Roland's forthcoming "Ruth of the Range," is expected to bring from exhibitors valuable opinions respecting the relative merits of these two serial forms.

Regarding feature productions, Pathe's policy is unchanged. When it acquires features of distinctive quality and entertainment value—such, for instance, as are represented by productions in the class of "The Call of the Wild," "Nanook of the North," "The Isle of Zorda" and "Black Shadows"—they will be announced for release.

Pathe News Special in First Coast-to-Coast Air Mail

When Miss Helen Wills, 17-year-old new tennis champion, "Wonder Girl of the Golden West," arrived on the Coast she found herself preceded by a Pathe News Special covering the scenes of her triumph over Mrs. Molla Mallory at Forest Hills, L. I., and was expected to make personal appearances at showing of the film.

The fact of Miss Wills being a Pacific Coast girl gave her defeat of Mrs. Mallory exceptional interest throughout that territory, and the Pathe News Special is its response in the way of extra service to exhibitors.

At Least Two from Harold Lloyd for 1923-24

IN the minds of several thousand exhibitors and a great multitude of picture patrons Harold Lloyd's feature comedies are the biggest attractions on Pathe's entire list of product now before the public or for future release. Of Lloyd's first release for the new season, "Why Worry," it is declared that the release date—September 16—will see first runs opened in every key center in the United States.

Before the end of the season Pathe will release at least one other Lloyd feature of those contracted for. This, now in production at the comedian's new independent Hollywood studio, is called "The Girl Expert." It marks Lloyd's beginning as his own producer following his amicable separation from the Hal Roach producing organization owing to the need of both for expanded studio facilities.

Lloyd's engagement of Jobyna Ralston under a three years' contract as his leading lady, following her pronounced success in "Why Worry," completed the personnel of his independent producing organization.

Fred Newmeyer and Sam Taylor, directors of many Lloyd comedies, continue as members of his present staff, on which also are Tim Whelan and Ted Wilde as "gag" men; Robert A. Golden, assistant director; Walter Lundin, staff cameraman; Gaylord Lloyd, Roy Brooks, Charles Stevenson and Wallie Howe, members of casts, and Gene Kornman, still photographer.

William R. Fraser, Lloyd's uncle, is general manager of the Harold Lloyd Corporation, and John C. Ragland Eastern representative. All product for some time to come is under contract for Pathe release.

Short-Subject Programs Increasing in Favor

WIDELY published announcements of the wealth of attractive new lines of two-reel comedy product added to Pathe's standard short subject output are stated to have furnished exhibitors with a fresh stimulus toward extending their use of programs of varied interest arranged to attract the whole family. The new season promises to see wide adoption of this policy.

With the addition of Ben Turpin, Mack Sennett, Stan Laurel, and Will Rogers two-reel comedies to the Pathe list, more than an average of one varied program per week will benefit by the drawing power of these two reelers, aided by their exploitation advantages. From the first issue of the "Our Gang" comedies, for example, the adoption of the policy of regularly presenting short-subject programs is reported to have made tremendous strides.

Pathe's reports from different sections show that picture audiences are made up of a few characteristic groups, and that the preferences of these groups are very plainly indicated. These preferences—outside of dramatic features—are particularly strong for comedy and for the news reel; other groups are drawn to the theatre by the serial episode, by the tense action of two-reel dramas, by the animated cartoons.

As illustrations of the kind of short-subject programs that are rapidly increasing in favor Pathe supplies the following:

Exploitation to Be Feature of Pathe Service

Concurrent with the listing of many additions to its programs for 1923-24, Pathe announces that its exploitation department will inaugurate a new constructive exploitation service to accompany short subject releases.

In the first place, short subject programs will be suggested, devised and encouraged. Second, Pathe comedy nights will be suggested as an attractive novelty connected with the playing of all-comedy programs. Third, Pathe's plan will stimulate the attendance of patrons three times a week who now go to the theatre only twice in each seven days.

In order to launch this campaign successfully for the exhibitor's benefit, Pathe's plans call for an augmented array of exploitation material for each and every item on its programs. There will be posters, ads, lobby displays, black and whites, press sheets, cuts, mats and a trailer on each two-reeler besides a nation-wide publicity campaign.

Abundant Array of Two-Reelers for New Year

ABUNDANT evidence is at hand that the season of 1923-24 will be marked by unusual prominence given by exhibitors to their short comedy programs. The campaign looking to this result, which has been pushed by Pathe with special vigor during the past two years, has received added impetus from the proved drawing power of noted brands of 2-reel comedies.

These cleverly constructed and carefully produced 2-reelers presenting favorite comedy stars and casts, and released with exploitation accessorics as appropriate and attractive as usually are issued in connection with big dramatic "features," have established themselves as the "box office backbone" of popular varied programs. With the single exception of the standard News reel, they are declared to have accomplished more in the way of promoting Pathe's campaign for comedy special days and all-short subject bills than any other type of product.

Owing to the rapidly increasing volume of business done with 2-reel comedies, and to their influence in enlarging the market for 1-reel comic items of the all-comedy program, Pathe has created a new sales department charged with the handling of them. Before the new season is far advanced the work of this department will be increased by the addition of new lines of 2-reeler comedy product which will bring the grand total of this list up to at least 64 subjects for the year, all from celebrated studios and featuring public comedy favorites.

The forthcoming new product of this type includes: From the Hal Roach studios—13 two-reel comedies starring Will Rogers; 13 featuring Stan Laurel, and probably six of another brand. From the Mack Sennett studios—13 two-reel Mack Sennett comedies with celebrated favorites in the casts, and 6 or 8 others starring Ben Turpin.

The tremendously popular "Our Gang" comedies made at the Roach studios will number 13 for the year. These studios also supply the all-animal single-reelers known as "Dippy Doo Dads," which have added a valuable new form of comic interest to Pathe's special comedy day programs. Universally attractive items on these programs will be more single-reel Hal Roach Comedies starring Snub Pollard.

"Spat Family" an Innovation

FOR the coming season Pathe's list of two-reel releases is again enriched by the creative versatility of Producer Hal Roach. The latest Roach screen comedy invention is a series of 2-reelers dealing with the realistic adventures and bearing the general title of "The Spat Family." An overbearing, know-it-all brother, a determined sister, and the sister's plaintive monocled young English husband, form a triangle of characters shrewdly calculated to carry out Mr. Roach's "Spat Family" idea.

Pathe announces a series of six 2-reel "Spats" for the new season. The first release, scheduled for an early date, is called, "Let's Build." It has been pre-viewed with results highly gratifying both to Mr. Roach and to Pathe—the spectacle of a family constituted as described erecting a "portable house" on a mountainside lot, each in the way of the other two and all at cross-purposes, was found to be uproariously funny. Other "bonehead" operations of "The Spat Family" thus far filmed are said to carry out the Roach idea with equally comic effects.

Film Fables and Topics of Day Stay on Pathe List

For the coming season Pathe announces that the most widely used of all animated cartoon subjects, Aesop's Film Fables, will continue to make their unique weekly appeal on its varied programs. Now midway in their third year, these modernized highly comic adaptations of the wisdom of the ancient Greek philosopher from the pen of Cartoonist Paul Terry are declared by exhibitors to be more popular than ever.

Wholly different as a type of screen productions, yet almost rivaling the Fables in popularity, is the Topics of the Day series, which Pathe will continue to release weekly as heretofore. These amusing nuggets of wit and wisdom culled from a wide range of sources, as now issued, mark an evolution covering half a dozen years of constant endeavor to select and present only the cream of the printed scintillations of wits and "Jokesmiths."

An Achievement in Single-Reel Productions

WITH the opening of the new season Hal Roach celebrates his ninth consecutive year as a producer of comedies on Pathe programs. During that period he has produced, and Pathe has released, more than four hundred of the celebrated single-reelers known everywhere as Hal Roach Comedies. This is a recognized record in business cooperation, and one of which both producer and distributor are proud.

Starting with a little money and Harold Lloyd, Hal Roach began making single-reel pictures which, to his surprise, Pathe accepted and later made the basis of contracts which have been continuous ever since.

Building up his organization on the basis of the exhibitor's need of single-reel comedies, Roach was soon turning these out at the rate of one every week. Today this product has reached a point of perfection that compares advantageously with single reels of any type of production.

Making one comedy reel each week for a period of nine years has given Roach an insight into that production specialty which has established him as an adept in the psychology of audiences and a shrewd showman who thoroughly understands the commercial angle. The experience of these nine years goes into every new single-reeler produced at the Roach studios.

More than four hundred of these have been shot, sealed and shipped to Pathe to date. This in itself is a record for continuously consistent effort to give the exhibitor what his public demands.

After Harold Lloyd, Snub Pollard starred in the series; then Paul Parrott and Stan Laurel.

The new year will see the "Dippy Doo Dads" all-animal single-reel novelties from the Roach studios following up the instantaneous success scored by the examples already released.

Snub Pollard, who holds the Roach record for playing in more single-reelers, and in more theatres, than any other comedian featured in single reels, will again be seen as the star in this series beginning with an early Fall release. It is said on good authority that the one-reel Hal Roach Comedies play regularly in more than eight thousand theatres during the life of the film.

Pathe News Out for New Laurels in 1923-24

EXHIBITORS everywhere are assured by Pathe News that its fresh record of unexampled service made during the last twelve months is to be accepted as a promise of even more thorough and speedy screening of big world events during the coming season.

A material expansion of Pathe News facilities for covering and transmitting world wide happenings and topics of interest is announced. To conclude arrangements looking to this result Editor Emanuel Cohen is now on a tour of European centres where Pathe News maintains branch offices and organizations. These points are headquarters of the staff cameramen whose feats of film news reporting and resourceful methods of breaking speed records in transmission of their negatives has done so much in keeping Pathe News foremost in this department of the motion picture industry.

To the alertness and experience, and the tireless energy of these members of its foreign staff Pathe News is largely indebted for the outstanding film news "scoops" of recent years which have drawn from American exhibitors the warmest expression of praise and confidence. The great Smyrna tragedy, other critical events connected with the war in the Near East, the famine in Russia, with the distribution of American relief, political crises throughout Europe growing out of the World War, the revolution in Ireland with its poignant human sacrifices and martyrdoms, and such convulsions of nature as the recent destructive eruption of the Mount Aetna volcano, promptly and first screened by Pathe News, are illustrations of the achievements of these men—who refer to them as, "all in the day's work."

While Editor Cohen is abroad completing the details of expanding service at the European sources, the Pathe News organization and facilities for exceptional service in connection with events in the home country are being strengthened and added to. With all these details perfected—for filming big news and big topics and speedily transmitting the prints to exhibitors—such feats of foresight and celerity as recently were illustrated in connection with President Harding's tour, his sudden death, the 3,000 mile journey of the funeral train and the obsequies at Washington and Marion, Ohio, are reasonably certain to become regularly "all in the day's work" of Pathe News.

Historical Series Adds to Screen's Prestige

THE announcement that Pathe has acquired for general theatrical distribution the 33 dramatic highlights representing the enormous undertaking of the Yale University Press in the production of 100 reels of Chronicles of America, has created wide comment throughout the picture industry.

Exhibitors as well as production experts and reviewers have expressed the opinion that the giving of these great dramas in 400 years of American history to the screen under auspices so unimpeachable would add the finishing touch to motion pictures as a universal art and literary medium.

Beginning with the intensely human drama of "Columbus" and screening 32 other outstanding events in the development of the new world—dramatic, spectacular or romantic—with their immortal heroes and heroines, down to Appotomatox, these screen Chronicles of America are declared to be of immensely greater value than accurately pictured history, as every one of them is of absorbing human interest.

"These pictures," declare the production authorities of the Yale University Press, "in order to be true history must and will have dramatic force and entertainment qualities. Heroic work on the part of a band of noble patriots—the true history of America as we are presenting it on the screen—is a story of human achievement where the great men and women of our past are made to live again, and we experience all their hopes, disappointments and achievements. Entertainment and great patriotic uplift will be found in each picture."

The Yale University Press which produces these pictures is entirely owned by Yale University. Its president is George Parmly Day, Treasurer of Yale University and also President of Chronicles of America Pictures Corporation.

Pathe Review Expanding Range of Subjects

IN the news of attractive new program material of particular interest to exhibitors everywhere is the Pathe Review announcement of interesting results of long preparation for the season just beginning. These preparations amount to a material expansion of the Review's range of natural subjects and industrial and scientific novelties for its weekly issues during 1923-24.

These subjects will include not only "Camera Visits" to the more important cities of the Continent, but others that lend themselves to color work. Along these lines production has begun on a short series dealing with American flowers. There will also be Pathecolor treatment of subjects along human interest lines.

Pathe Review has arranged on a broad and elaborate scale for the new season a Studio Production Program involving the building of studio sets that would do credit to first-class feature productions. Here will be created a series on the History of Fashions, to be released this fall in three consecutive numbers of the Review. The series has the benefit of the co-operation of New York's most famous fashion designers; both ancient and modern gowns have been specially made and used in the production of this series.

The technical staff of the Review has evolved a number of absolutely new mechanical effects which are promised to figure in future issues. For obvious reasons, the precise nature of these effects is not revealed in advance of their screen demonstration.

Pre-release Reviews of Features

The Drivin' Fool

(Regent-Hodkinson—Six Reels)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THIS one will recall to mind Wally Reid's auto stories—most of which were fashioned by Byron Morgan. The main situations are nearly identical, though the characters are cut from a different mould. For one thing the heroine's father is not a crochety old man though he does object to the speed fiend becoming his son-in-law until he settles down and gives up stepping on the gas.

Wally Van, who plays the title role, does not take his work as easy as the late lamented star. He is as quick and nervous in his walk and gestures as when he played in "Love, Luck and Gasoline" many years ago. Yet he is admirably suited for the role once he hops into the car and makes his wild flight across the continent to deliver a certified check to the Wall Street sharks. There is a reason for the mad dash—the trains are not running.

It's an easy story to follow, obvious always, nevertheless, it quickens the pulse as the car hits off for Carson, Reno, Cheyenne, Omaha and points East. One may wonder that the villain—a henchman of the oily financiers—is able to throw obstacles in his path. Certainly he seems to have a large clientele among highwaymen and crooked garage keepers.

The fore part of the picture reveals Wally having an easy time avoiding work and receiving summons to appear in court. But the ride saves the feature and gives it the necessary punch. The flight is shown against good backgrounds—and one shot showing the speed fiend and his colored mechanician stalled in the snowdrifts of the Rockies is punctuated with thrills.

As is natural with this type of story the hero reaches his destination barely in the nick of time. But he saves his dad and the latter's partner—the girl's father—from financial ruin. And, of course, is accepted as a good prospect for a son-in-law. The plot is well put together and kicks up plenty of dust and should prove enjoyable everywhere.

THEME. Comedy-drama of an irresponsible youth who is an auto speed fiend. Is not taken seriously by sweetheart's father until he saves him from ruin by a mad dash across the continent.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The pep and ginger of the mad ride across country. The thrills attendant upon the obstacles placed in path of speed fiend. The suspense. The effective backgrounds. The lively incident. Good scenario and titles.

DIRECTION. Keeps it ever moving with good suspense. Lightens the monotony of mad dash with good incident and thrills—and by flashing to "straight" scenes. Never slackens the speed. Makes the wild flight look genuine. Furnishes some adequate comedy.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Tie up with auto stores. Put on a ballyhoo after style of hero. Feature the title and the star. Feature Lincoln Highway, etc.

DRAWING POWER. Suitable for second class, neighborhood and small town houses.

SUMMARY. A moving story of a speed fiend cut after a familiar pattern, but which is pepped up with breezy incident. Implausible in its villainy. Should draw well most everywhere.

THE CAST

John Moorehead.....Alec B. Francis
Sylvia Moorehead.....Patsy Ruth Miller
Henry Locke.....Wilton Taylor
Hal Locke.....Wally Van
Richard Brownlee.....Ramsey Wallace
Howard Grayson.....Wilfred North
Horatio Jackson Lee St. Albans.....Jesse J. Aldriche
John Lawson.....Kenneth R. Bush

By W. F. Sturm. Scenario by H. H. Van Loan. Directed by Robert Thornby.

SYNOPSIS—Young speed enthusiast is not taken seriously by father or by the father of his sweetheart. An occasion arrives when he proves his mettle by offering to deliver a certified check to financiers in New York to save the two fathers in 'Frisco from ruin. Starts his mad dash and reaches Gotham in the nick of time—his journey being marked by many obstacles.

The Untameable

(Universal—4776 Feet)

(Reviewed by L. C. Moen)

GIVEN the proper role, Gladys Walton displays an emotional fire and abandon that is totally wasted on a sweet, simple, Pollyanna characterization. In "The Untameable," she is given a chance, for the first time, to show what she really can do, and the result is going to be a revelation to many. As Joy Fielding, the heroine, she is demure and pleasing, but as Edna, the heroine's other self, she takes rank as a real dramatic artiste.

Make no mistake—she can "troupe." Given more vehicles like "The Untameable" and Gladys Walton will cease to be regarded as a flapperish ingenue.

"The Untameable" is corking entertainment. Based on Gelett Burgess' novel, "The White Cat," it tells a romantic story of dual personality which is well fitted to the screen. The plot is simple, centering about an unusually small number of people, but its twists and turns hold the interest throughout. There are really only four people in the cast.

Theatres which have, in the past, played the other Walton vehicles, should cash in on this as the star's first heavy emotional role, and the picture should also find its way into new houses and win the star a new following of a different class.

The production, as a whole, is entirely adequate. Herbert Blache's direction is capable and he has built up the story values in good shape. There is one subtitle which jars, and which is likely to be taken as humor at the wrong time, when the hero, after seeing one of the heroine's outbursts for the first time, in which she whips the servant girl, smashes things up and goes on the rampage generally, is made to say, in a spoken title: "What is wrong with Miss Joy this morning, Ah Moy? She doesn't seem her usual self." This is a slight and easily corrected matter, however, which does not detract from the excellence of the picture as a whole.

THEME. Story of dual personality, with heroine under domination of unscrupulous doctor, from whom she is rescued by hero.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The story. Gladys Walton as Edna. Etta May as the Chinese servant girl. The good support by Malcolm McGregor and John Sainpolis. The interiors. The heroine's rampages. The climax. The general high entertainment value. Production as a whole.

DIRECTION. A workmanlike job, bringing out the values of the story excellently, and building up to the climax in good shape. Characterization kept within bounds nicely. Romantic atmosphere maintained throughout. Plausible and convincing.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. The theme of the story, that of dual personality and hypnotism, lends itself well to advertising and to publicity stories. The author, Gelett Burgess, is best known as the author of the lines beginning: "I never saw a purple cow," etc. Play up the fact that this is the star's first big emotional part.

DRAWING POWER. Should stand strong advertising and send them away pleased.

SUMMARY. Production of high entertainment value, with good story and direction, in which star is given best opportunity to date, which she takes full advantage of.

THE CAST

Joy Fielding / Edna.....Gladys Walton
Chester Castle.....Malcolm McGregor
Dr. Copin.....John Sainpolis
Ah Moy.....Etta Lee

Adapted by Hugh Hoffman from the novel, "The White Cat," by Gelett Burgess. Directed by Herbert Blache. Photographed by Howard Oswald.

SYNOPSIS—Heroine is possessed of a dual personality. Her one nature is sweet and generous and is in love with young architect. Her other side, a veritable "hell-cat," is under the control of an unscrupulous physician, who hynotizes her and marries her. The hero finally learns the nature of her case, marries her, and defies the doctor. In the fight which follows, the doctor is killed by the girl's hounds, freeing her from his spell.

Harbor Lights

(Associated Exhibitors—5200 Feet)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

AN old-fashioned melodrama of love and hate—which also carries the elements of intrigue and jealousy is "Harbor Lights," an English made production. There is nothing novel in theme and treatment, the situations evolving from the customary formula as it pertains to sailor-folk. Against the placid backgrounds, most of which are really attractive, one sees melodrama being enacted in the "raw"—the characters being a naval officer who is engaged to a girl, and the latter's sister who has been betrayed by a dissolute gambler.

The plot becomes intricate and confusing—which may be due to faulty editing rather than to a poorly arranged continuity. We discern, however, that the ruined gambler has hopes of recouping his fortune by marrying the officer's fiancee, who is lured to his house with the usual result—the inevitable struggle. During the conflict the villain is shot, the little sister meets an untimely end—and the skipper and his sweetheart continue their romance.

The plot is highly involved and releases much action of a very elemental character. But one thing in the picture's favor is its fast tempo. There isn't a moment when the action sags and because it packs quite a punch it is certain to invite a deal of suspense. Certainly the climax is there with a wallop. "Harbor Lights" is not punctuated by any "sweetness and light"—there being no sentimental flavor to offer relief.

Being an English made picture takes away a box-office value because the cast is unfamiliar with the single exception of Tom Moore. He looks rather out of place here, though he acquits himself creditably in a role not adaptable to his personality. The director, Tom Terriss, is well known on this side of the water—and it is possible that his name, coupled with that of Moore's, will invite a certain curiosity to see the feature. Patrons will see a conventional melodrama enacted against highly picturesque backgrounds. But it does move and furnishes a deal of excitement in its climax. Its dominating highlight is its fast tempo.

THEME. Melodrama of love and hate with villainy rampant. Features a girl's betrayal with quick vengeance.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The presence of Tom Moore in the cast. The many picturesque backgrounds caught against an English atmosphere. The quick tempo which arouses excitement and suspense. The climax bringing an adequate conclusion.

DIRECTION. Has provided a first rate production, seeing to it that it is staged against highly appropriate backgrounds. Handles his players in competent fashion. The scenes are not well united—wihch may be due to bad editing instead of poor continuity. Provides a punch throughout, but is unable to make characters and situations genuine.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. The name of Tom Moore and the director—the latter having directed many American productions. The fine exteriors. You might exploit that it is an English production with an American star. Produce prologue featuring sea atmosphere. A lighthouse drop and old "salts" for background and put on deep sea songs, etc.

DRAWING POWER. Suitable for program houses.

SUMMARY. A fairly interesting melodrama of love and conflict as they concern sea-faring people. Packs quite a punch in its climax, but interest strays occasionally by poorly arranged sequences.

To the Last Man

(Paramount—Six Reels)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

ZANE GREY has concocted a lively story of feudists against a primitive background—the picture having been filmed in the wild Tonto Basin of Arizona, which provides the setting for the author's vivid melodrama. As feuds go, this one is no different from dozens of others which have occupied the attention of Kentucky or Carolina mountaineers. But because it packs a wallop throughout with no let-up in action, one hasn't any time to recall that the plot has been used before. The ingredients, however, are the same.

Here are the two quarrelsome families who keep up their gun-play to the last man—and the feud—which started because one antagonist stole the other's sweetheart—is ended when the last survivor claims the daughter of the opposite house. You can see the finish in sight once the youth is introduced. But he must remain and fight and avenge his father's death. Being a half-breed his Indian cunning and woodcraft carry him through safely until the rousing climax. And then there is a version of the road agent hiding from the sheriff in "The Girl of the Golden West." He has found refuge in a deserted cabin. Lying wounded up among the rafters he is unable to protect the girl from attack by one of her own kin. So she kills the would-be seducer—and the feud is over.

There is considerable suspense in the picture. Which means there are no gaps in the action. Every sequence is neatly dovetailed and the punch carries it along and the spectator with it. Death stalks continually through the story taking its toll from each family. There is much treachery—much hard drinking—much agitation of two or three dozen trigger fingers. And against it all are the primitive backgrounds giving it an elemental flavor whch harmonizes perfectly with the plot and characterization.

The figures seem real—there being nothing of make-believe in their interpretations. The picture hums with vital melodramatic strokes—is finely played and directed with a sure touch upon its realities.

THEME. Melodrama of feudists among the primitive cattlemen and sheepherders of the Tonto Basin, Arizona.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The realities. The gun-play. The ever-increasing suspense. The crisp action. The excellent acting by Richard Dix, Lois Wilson, Noah Beery, Jean Pallette, and others. The exceptional backgrounds.

DIRECTION. Keeps it moving and packs it with suspense. Makes action realistic and leads up to his climaxes with effective melodrama. Gets his players into their characters and makes them live their roles.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. The author's name and fame. The leading players. The background. The title. The punch and suspense. The possibilities for a prologue with a cabin background, etc.

DRAWING POWER. Will be enjoyed wherever westerns are popular.

SUMMARY. Excellent western drama packed with real moving action and suspense. Keeps the interest. Obviousness is entirely eliminated. Good acting.

Bright Lights of Broadway

(B. F. Zeidman-Principal Pictures—Seven Reels)

(Reviewed by Frank Elliott)

WITH an excellent cast, well produced and directed, this picture can well lay claim to serious consideration on the part of exhibitors. The story does not get far from the beaten path, but one can easily overlook this when it is so well presented on the screen.

The production has some novel views of the Gay White Way, showing Electric Lane flashing forth in the dark. One also gets an eye full of the famous Tiller Girls in a real ballet novelty which is elaborately staged and into which Charlie Murray injects an amusing dance number with a very buxom lassie. The photography is one of the features of this picture, much of it being in natural colors. All the lighting effects are attractive. There are some fine shots of a theatre interior during the progress of a show in which Doris Kenyon as the June Girl is introduced to Broadway.

The picture is replete with elaborate interiors, bachelor apartments and cabaret. There are some dramatic third degree scenes culminating in a climax in which the wife, knowing her husband guilty of murder, is not allowed to testify against him and so an innocent man is sent to the death house. Tyrone Power dominates these scenes.

Lowell Sherman is an ideal type for the Broadway theatrical producer and he gives to the screen another one of his inimitable characterizations. He is ably supported by Harrison Ford in the role of Tom Drake, the minister's son in love with Irene Marley, who has succumbed to the lure of Broadway. Miss Kenyon does some fine emotional work as Irene. Claire Dolorez contributes some colorful acting as the castoff mistress of the producer.

The picture is brought to a close with a whirlwind climax in which Irene forces her way into Sherill's apartments, demands a confession of his guilt at gun point and gets away in an auto with which she races for the jail to save her sweetheart from the electric chair. A wheel comes off the auto and she is taken aboard an engine. Sherill bards another train and then ensues a wild dash along the line.

THEME. Romance of a beautiful country maid who answers the call of Broadway in spite of her love for a rural swain. Rises to ethereal heights after many dramatic experiences but in the end sees the folly of her ways and ends up in the old home town.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. Lowell Sherman's characterization and his fine supporting cast which is distinctly all-star. The shots of Broadway at night. The Tiller Girls ballet in the elaborate cabaret scene. The fine photography. The auto-train race and wreck.

DIRECTION. Webster Campbell has brought the best out of his players in this well directed work. He has not allowed the interest to lag for a moment and has succeeded in putting over several well placed thrillers.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. The title. Use the black and white photos showing Miss Kenyon's elaborate gowns and coats to put over a fall fashion display window in one of the downtown stores.

DRAWING POWER. Should appeal to audiences most anywhere. Picture has ingredients which appeal to present-day patrons.

SUMMARY. A highly satisfactory drama of the ever-interesting life of Broadway which is produced in an excellent manner, even if the story is not an innovation in film plots.

Tea with A Kick

(Halperin-Associated Exhibitors—5950 Feet)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

BY calling this a hodge-podge of comedy high jinks with some melodramatic incident thrown in for good measure we are not casting any aspersions upon it. "Tea With a Kick" carries dynamite in the title, but the explosive quality is largely missing in the collection of scenes. The piece goes merrily along, introducing a long list of characters and much—oh, very much incident. In fact there is so much of it that it is hard to follow the story. It's a picture that doesn't carry continuity. Events just happen in other words—and before you have time to pick up any particular thread the plot is off on another tack.

We gleaned from the contents that it concerns a girl who opens a tea room in order to free her father from an unjust prison sentence. This bit of incident—the father's imprisonment—is rather neglected, and one doesn't have an opportunity to make his acquaintance because it is preceded and followed by comely slapstick which is emphasized by trick titles.

The heroine is first seen operating a "Lesson Factory" in the seminary she attends. She is expelled and her aunt demands that she marry a rich bounder—a plan which fails because the dominie turns out to be a crook. The tea room episodes are next introduced which gives the director a chance to put on a cabaret scene. The high jinks carry on apace for the bounder, guided by jealousy because the girl is attracted to a young lawyer, advises the Purity League that she is selling "tea with a kick." But the puritans enjoy the stuff. So the story develops a conflict when the "rich and conceited sap" advises the manager of a roadhouse to stage a fashion review in opposition to the tea room. Which gives Louise Fazenda a chance as the hostess to appear in the familiar scene of having her dress cut in the back and making a rapid exit.

The finish brings the moral when father is freed. Translated it spells: "Let's get our kick out of life now or we'll get it in the end." A haphazard story running wild in most of its action, but which because of its pep furnishes first rate summer entertainment. The cast includes several favorites. It should prove entertaining to most picturegoers.

THEME. Farcical melodrama dealing with spirited girl determined to marry the man of her choice and manage her affairs without advice from relatives.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The fast-moving tempo. The cabaret shots. The tea room episodes. The large list of players.

DIRECTION. Keeps it moving even though the plot ramifications destroy the continuity. Has staged it adequately. Has provided some amusing incident. Inability to introduce properly all the characters makes the story lose its thread.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Title affords excellent chance for a teaser campaign. Put pep and humor into your copy. The cast is large. The curious patrons will want to see it. Excite their curiosity.

DRAWING POWER. Should please average audiences in downtown houses.

SUMMARY. Haphazard story difficult to follow because of variety of scenes and many characters. Affords light entertainment and its pep keeps it moving.

Where the North Begins

(Warner Brothers—Six Reels)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

STRONGHEART has a rival. Everything that this dog did to build up a screen following has been duplicated by Rin-Tin-Tin, who is also of the German police breed. We have seen the intelligent canine in several pictures and it was only a question of time before he would have the spotlight in a story written around his talents.

Any tale carrying as its central character a dog or horse is invariably made to order. What does it matter if it fails to pass muster in plot and incident? Who cares if it is perfectly obvious? Naturally every scene is conceived to emphasize the dumb beast. And if it places him at his best—then that is all that could be expected from it.

"Where the North Begins" is the familiar tale of the open spaces—the inevitable factor (crooked this time), the French trapper, the native girl, the human wolf—a henchman of the villain, the red-coats, and the vast expanse of snow. This may all be easy to anticipate—and the action is really old stuff. But one is not troubled so much by the regulation hokum. What one is interested in is Rin-Tin-Tin. He positively causes one to grip the arms of the chair with his intelligent grasp of the situations. And he is so well trained that except for one or two brief instances he never cocks his head on one side after the manner of the Victor trade-mark (His Master's Voice) and awaits upon Director Franklin's commands. He's a regular he-dog who proves his loyalty in saving the life of the hero—who registers jealousy when love intrudes in the figure of the girl—and who brings the picture to its finish with a real comedy flash. The final fade-out shows him introducing his wife and seven or eight litle Rin-Tin-Tins.

The suspense mounts when the hero is ordered to kill him, and real pathos creeps in when the dog, broken-hearted, runs away from home. We especially liked the conclusion. A happy departure from the dying sunset or glowing fire-place fade-out. The dog, like all canine actors, is natural. And this quality is one which should be adopted by more than one of the human variety. The picture had the Capitol crowd applauding. A mark of honor in this sophisticated house.

THEME. Northwest melodrama dealing with the loyalty of a dog who saves his master's life on more than one occasion—and who brings the villain to account.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The great intelligence displayed by dog star. His leap through the window. His hatred for the villain. His punishment of the factor. The comedy finish—a real novelty. The good exteriors. The capable work by cast.

DIRECTION. Has brought out the merits of picture so that dog actor shines to advantage. Shows careful training of his four-legged star. Puts punch in his climaxes and introduces a fine novelty finish. Keeps stereotyped story on the jump throughout. Staged it well.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Play up dog-star—and mention a dog's loyalty. Put out teasers. Ballyhoo the picture by means of identical breed of dog if you can secure one. Play up the exteriors.

DRAWING POWER. Suitable for any type of house.

SUMMARY. Old story takes on new values through presence of dog in hero role. An exciting tale of dog love and devotion calculated to invite suspense. Keeps moving with snappy incident.

THE CAST

Felice McTavish.....Claire Adams
Gabriel Dupre.....Walter McGrail
Shad Galloway.....Pat Hartigan
Marie.....Myrtle Owen
The Fox.....Charles Stevens
Scotty McTavish.....Fred Huntley
The Wolf-Dog.....RIN-TIN-TIN

Scenario by Fred Myton and Chester M. Franklin. Directed by Chester M. Franklin.

SYNOPSIS—Dog is reared by wolves and is befriended by French trapper in North Woods. Shows his loyalty by attacking his enemy—the latter the henchman of crooked factor, who has designs on hero's sweetheart. The dog's life is in jeopardy when hero thinks he killed a baby, but is saved in nick of time. Runs away, broken-hearted, but his master finds him. The dog eventually kills the factor.

Daytime Wives

(F. B. O.—6700 Feet)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

ONCE in a while a domestic drama happens along which bears all the qualities of approaching life—which records accurately all the pitfalls of matrimony when wives refuse to become helpmates to their husbands. Such a drama is "Daytime Wives." It tells with a minimum of effort the reason why some husbands fail in business. There is nothing of the theatre in the story. The characters seem genuine, since they are not given to emotional display.

We are shown a cross-section of a rich man's home wherein the wife, unaccustomed to anything but idleness and spending money, entertains a male flapper for diversion. She is a millstone around her hubby's neck, but he is too much the gentleman to reproach her. For contrast he has a most adaptable secretary who keeps an eye upon his business—and so prevents it from going on the rocks.

How easy it would have been to spoil this human story with dramatic fireworks. The wife's flighty, jealous nature is deftly exposed. She would bring him to task for being attentive to his secretary unmindful of the fact that her constant companion is a lazy young bounder who receives remittance money from her. There is another picture, too. It shows a busy laboring man being married to a woman who serves him delicatessen food. And so the story builds revealing first one character, then the other—without losing its thread and still pointing a real object lesson which never becomes a preachment.

The settings are neatly appropriate—the figures just as they are represented. Only toward the conclusion does it attempt to display too much drama—showing a tendency toward an anti-climax. But the conflict is there and it is sound. And the big scene when the husband fights his foreman for abusing his wife, starting a catastrophe which results almost in the ruination of his business. The restaurant scene as the wife insults the secretary is staged with fine understanding—there being nothing of false heroics about it. A capital picure, capitally played and one surely to be appreciated.

THEME. Domestic drama of conflict in the home as wife refuses to be helpmate to her husband. Reaches the triangle in its main situation—and carries counter plot of domestic unhappines.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The even thread of story which tells vividly each scene and which points real drama. The good taste of the scenes. The excellent acting—particularly the male flapper by Kenneth Gibson—the best portrayal of its kind which has graced the screen in many a day. The fine climaxes. The moral value.

DIRECTION. Has built up a rattling good story using discretion at all times. Never becomes theatrical in touch. Keeps to his plot and makes his characters genuine. Provides good thrill in collapse of building and effective drama in restaurant scene.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Title is a winner. Play it up. Start series of teasers on what constitute daytime wives. Play up principal players. Interest the young married couples.

DRAWING POWER. Suitable for all select houses.

SUMMARY. A fine domestic drama free from theatrical touches. Serves up a lesson which never becomes a preachment. Scenes well built and story always even. A vital cross section of domestic life.

SYNOPSIS—Wealthy architect gets little response from indolent wife, who prefers dancing and drinking and chumming with male flapper to being a real helpmate. He is aided by clever business woman, which provokes wife's jealousy. She provokes a scene and mighty near ruins him. In the end she appreciates husband's sterling qualities and reforms.

Dulcy

(Schenck-First National—6859 Feet)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THE picture possibilities of this highly successful play must have been based upon the title and the excellent run it scored on Broadway. Certainly there was nothing substantial in theme or dialogue from which to build screen incident and action. But it is here, serving as a vehicle for Constance Talmadge—and it cannot be catalogued as the bright, merry comedy of the spoken version. One fault it has is its length. It takes nearly seven reels to tell a story the plot of which is very weak and which could have been compressed into three, or, at the most, four reels.

The humor is labored and is achieved through the subtitles—there being few mirthful moments in its incident. The result is a much padded comedy which relies upon a wealth of captions. We catch the idea that Dulcy is very much the bone-head, but in the transference from stage to screen she loses much of her character. The inane bromides of the brainless girl are not so conspicuous here.

"Dulcy" starts off with a honeymoon, after which several scenes are devoted to the silly bride's behavior in the home. There is a bright moment when she insists upon taking dictation during a conference in her husband's office. Then it develops into farcical hokum, the figures of which are the irrepressible flapper-wife, a crotchety old man who figures in the husband's financial coup, the aged millionaire's wife and daughter, and a few week-enders, one of which is broadly painted as a "nut" scenario writer. Easily a thousand feet is given up to his tedious recitation of his picture, "Sin." Such interludes as this and the playful manner of the bride in the early scenes do not add to the sparkle. Rather do they make it appear padded.

The best moments are when the young couple attempt to get backing for an oil project—a young dippy guest neatly sketched by Gilbert Douglas giving it a sort of belated humor. The padded incident takes away its farcical momentum. A thin plot at best—it has been stretched to the limit. The star gives an adequate performance and a small part is well done by John Harron.

THEME. Farce-comedy of a brainless bride, who through saying the wrong thing gets her husband into several difficulties.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The fine close-ups of the star and her players. The neat interiors. The scene in the husband's office as wife takes dictation. The good work by Gilbert Douglas and John Harron.

DIRECTION. Seems to have been burdened with weak story, so pads it with incident. Keeps it even, but fails to hold interest throughout because of pepless by-play. Has staged it well and lighted the players in an admirable manner. Holds the players within bounds with the exception of Beranger.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Adaptation of highly successful stage play gives it value. Play up title and feature star and cast. Use throwaways of bromidic remarks uttered by Dulcy. Any obvious expression would suffice.

DRAWING POWER. Should appeal to feminine audiences. Star will attract. For high class clientele.

SUMMARY. Not so good on screen as on stage, due to padded incident and lack of humor. Too many captions and not enough movement of characters. Would be speeded up if trimmed of much detail. Dulcy has lost her character.

THE CAST

Gordon Smith.....Jack Mulhall
Mr. Forbes.....Claude Gillingwater
Mrs. Forbes.....May Wilson
Billy Parker.....Johnny Harron
Angela Forbes.....Anne Cornwall
Vincent Leach.....Andre de Beranger
Schuyler Van Dyke.....Gilbert Douglas
Blair Patterson.....Frederick Esmelton
Matty, Dulcy's companion.....and.....Milla Davenport
Dulcy.....Constance Talmadge

By George S. Kaufman and Marc Connelly. Scenario by John Emerson and Anita Loos. Continuity by C. Gardner Sullivan.

Directed by Sidney A. Franklin.

SYNOPSIS—Dulcy is a young bride who, because of her stupidity expressed in terms of bromidic remarks and the faculty of embarrassing her husband, causes him to get into financial difficulties. She makes several mistakes, but fortunately they turn out O. K. Thinking herself a failure, she contemplates suicide, but is reconciled to her husband.

The Steadfast Heart

(Distinctive-Goldwyn—Seven Reels)

(Reviewed by Frank Elliott)

HUMAN interest has been packed into this entertaining picture which tells an absorbing story of the Horatio Alger type. It is a tale that strums on the heart strings—told by players who breathe life into the characters.

And right here we want to take off our hat to Master Joseph Depew for his interpretation of the Angus Burke of boyhood days. It is one of the finest bits of juvenile acting we'd seen in many moons. The children are going to enjoy the work of this lad. Then we have Mary Alden registering another one of her emotional portraits in the role of Martha Burke, the half crazed wife of a mountain ne'er-do-well. Miss Alden does not appear much in the picture but she'll hold every audience in a vice-like grip as she instills a high degree of fear into her son which leads the lad to shoot at the first man of the posse trying to capture his father and as he is led to believe to kill his mother and himself. The first man is the sheriff and the boy is charged with murder. His mother dies during the melee.

Then we find the boy in one of those narrow-minded country towns. He's alone in the world and faces trial aided only by a rural attorney. This trial scene is most absorbing and exceptionally well handled. The suspense is there every moment.

The boy is found not guilty and as there is at least one kind hearted man in the town he is given a chance. But the town won't stand for his presence, so he's sent away and then the story is taken up again after a dozen years or so and goes on with the trials and tribulations of Joseph who eventually attains success and the girl he loves. There are some fine scraps in the picture. The rush on the newspaper office by a gang of bums is a dramatic moment. So is the party at which the outcast is introduced to the polite society. The auto chase brings a satisfying finish. The cast is one of uniform excellence.

THEME. An Horatio Alger type of story dealing with the rise of a youth to the pinnacle of success in spite of tremendous obstacles. Freed of a murder charge in his teens, he is given a boost by a warm hearted citizen in a snobbish town and comes back to prove to the folks who shunned him that they were all wrong in their opinion of him.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The opening scenes in the mountain cabin and the shooting of the sheriff by the boy. The trial scenes. The fights between the lad and the bullies of the town. The attack on the newspaper office. The auto chase and wreck at the close of the picture.

DIRECTION. Deserves much praise for his work at the small end of the megaphone in this production. He has brought out some realistic moments and built up scenes packed with suspense.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Play up the fine cast, especially Marguerite Courtot, Mary Alden, and the fine boy actor, Joseph Depew. Emphasize the appeal for the family. Tell about the thrilling mountain cabin scenes.

DRAWING POWER. An exceptionally good audience picture.

SUMMARY. Stories dealing with the climb of youth to success are always popular. This one is well told in its screen form by a fine cast that succeed in keeping your interest every moment. A very satisfactory production.

Does It Pay?

(Fox—6652 Feet)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THE domestic upheaval in the home is registered here to the tune of the eternal triangle and it may be that many patrons will object in being given an object lesson in moralities if they attempt to follow the title too closely. Nothing is developed here that smacks of novelty, nor smashing dramatic climaxes. It is all easy to anticipate from the moment that the temptress is accepted in the rich man's home as a companion to his wife and daughter and to double in secretarial duties.

It's the old story of the successful husband and father who tiring of the monotony of wedded life rebels and tries to find happiness with a woman who still may be called youthful, though in the end he is brought back to his senses when he discovers her treachery. Rich men, fast in the throes of domesticity, are maintaining separate establishments in metropolitan centers. In this case the protagonist gets a divorce and marries the adventuress. There is much talk of moral obligation—also much painting of the other household with a loss on the part of the wife and daughter to understand the man's conduct. They extract a little sympathy from the spectator.

But the dramatic content is missing—even when the philanderer surprises his new spouse with her lover. The only scene created is when the latter remarks: "Even if you are her husband, a gentleman always knocks at the door." He is disillusioned and admits defeat when the temptress says: "You should have known that youth and age don't speak the same language." The story is crudely developed and uneven in its arrangement of scenes. The idea could be compressed into three reels but it is padded with inconsequential details such as showing comedy relief as exploited by a vapid secretary.

The story doesn't convince although Hope Hampton in the thankless role of the temptress succeeds in interpreting the part with a semblance of reality. Robert T. Haines as the erring father overacts. He gives a heavy performance and the director doesn't help him any when he permits him to register mental aberration with a derby hat—which he strokes affectionately for several minutes. "Does It Pay?" is of the theatre. It is regulation stuff—for the elderly scapegrace returns to his home a sadder and wiser man.

THEME. Eternal triangle showing an erring parent getting a divorce and marrying a temptress whose only asset is youth. Discovers her treachery and returns to his family—to be forgiven.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The effort of Hope Hampton to appear sincere. The good mounting of the production. The scene when the husband discovers his second wife's treachery.

DIRECTION. Has not developed it with finished sequences. Carries considerable rough edges. Doesn't create any real dramatic strokes. Plays up comedy relief when story sags—and it doesn't belong. Allows his action to drag. Has been burdened with regulation plot.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Play up star and leading support. Title might come in for campaign with stores, etc. Teaser line such as "Does it Pay to Carry Inferior Merchandise?" "Our Line Is Superior." Bill as domestic drama.

DRAWING POWER. Suitable for neighborhood and city theatres.

SUMMARY. This eternal triangle picture is heavily executed—lacking imagination and naturalness. Obvious and crude in much of its action. Adequately staged.

SYNOPSIS—Rich husband and father rebels in monotony of home. An adventuress is successful in intriguing him after she is employed in his home. He gets divorce from wife and marries the temptress. Is happy until he discovers her false, after which he is freed from her and returns to his first wife and family.

Rouged Lips

(Metro—5150 Feet)

(Reviewed by L. C. Moen)

PERHAPS no American writer today deals more intelligently with life backstage than Rita Weiman, and in "Rouged Lips" we have an adaptation of one of her best short stories, "Upstage." Naturally, short story presented a rather slender thread of narrative, and the story has been filled out with other incident, but the spirit of the original is fairly well kept, on the whole.

As a picture of life backstage, it is rather better than most, mirroring the petty squabbles and jealousies of the "chorines" with considerable fidelity.

Primarily, of course, it is a Viola Dana vehicle, and she romps through it in typical Dana fashion, her breezy "clowning" ably seconded by the equally breezy Mr. Moore. It is a picture of chuckles and giggles, rather than roars of laughter, but it goes along on its merry way at a smooth rate and should register well with Dana fans.

A well chosen supporting cast has been placed around the star, including the aforementioned Tom Moore as the wealthy young man who misunderstands the heroine, Nola Luxford as her chum, Burwell Hamrick as her chum's brother, Arline Pretty as a typical show-girl, and Francis Powers and Georgie Woodthorpe as the mother and father. As usual, the vivacious Miss Dana walks away with the picture, but the competency of the other members of the cast provides a balanced production.

The entertainment value of the production, as a whole, is high and the production is entirely adequate. One of the best things about the picture is the subtitling, which is snappy, colloquial and at times sparkling. The best of the laughs, in fact, come from the titles.

While the star can hardly be said to add to her laurels, she maintains them well, and "Rouged Lips" should find favor with her following.

THEME. Chorus girl's efforts to maintain a "front" and please wealthy suitor, leading to misunderstanding of her character.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The traffic scenes. The opening night of the revue. The comedy in the dentist's office. The work of the star. Tom Moore as leading man. The snappy subtitles. The itneriors. The excellent photography.

DIRECTION. Backstage atmosphere has been very well maintained, on the whole. Dramatic values and characterization of the Rita Weiman story well preserved generally. Good sense of comedy values. Tempo good, considering padding that had to be resorted to to lengthen short story into full length feature.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. In Viola Dana and Tom Moore you have two players whose names will probably mean something at your box-office, and they should be featured prominently in all your advertising. Also play up the story and author at your discretion. The picture offers an opportunity for many tie-ups. The most obvious of these, of course, is the cosmetic tie-up with drug stores, beauty parlors, etc., on the title. A good tie-up offers, too, with ready-to-wear shops, and the dressing room scenes should be good for a lingerie window hook-up. A discussion on the ethics of using rouge might also be stirred up. Teaser possibilities also suggest themselves.

DRAWING POWER. Should do well almost anywhere.

SUMMARY. Excellent vehicle for the star's comedy gifts, having high entertainment value and wide audience appeal. Not uproarious, but consistently amusing.

Mrs. Reid's work in connection with her national anti-narcotic campaign secured respectful attention from the women's clubs, church organizations and city authorities, and it is probable that a special institution for the care and cure of drug addicts will be established by the city as a result of her conferences with Mayor Dever, and Health Commissioner Herman M. PERHAPS the biggest thing that has happened along Film Row recently is an outing that was staged down the bay at Pemberton Inn by the New England Film Board of Trade. It was a large outing, and rightly so, since it was given to all employees in the exchange district in recognition of the work they did during the censorship fight last fall. It was the largest of its kind ever attempted in these parts, and more than 400 showed up. The committee in charge was made up of Stanley Waite, Pathe New England manager; John Scully, Educational manager; and George Fecke, of the Motion Picture Corporation. The Strand theatre in Lowell has put in a new Gardner screen of the velvet gold fibre type, and the purchase has been played up in the local papers as but another example of the theatre management's desire to give their patrons the best that there is to offer in the way of satisfaction. The fact that the screen is costly, that eye strain is eliminated, and that the view from side seats is equally as good as from the front, has been made much of.

The Empire theatre in Lawrence, Mass., will reopen on Labor Day with first run pictures and Keith vaudeville. James R. Sayer will continue as manager, a fact that has already brought forth expressions of satisfaction from his many friends among the patrons of the last season. The reason that Boston flappers are wearing such a preoccupied look nowadays, and absently practice dance steps as they stroll down Tremont street is that the management of Loew's Orpheum theatre having been more than satisfied with the success last season of the Orpheum Frolics, an amateur production, have issued a call for candidates for a summer frolic and bathing girl revue. Two men who have been out of the film game for some time have been pulled in again, unable to resist the smell of celluloid. They are Jim Donovan, who has taken over sales for Pioneer, and "Chubby" Davis will cover territory for Federated instead of selling Fords. At the same time two have left. The new manager of the Salamanca houses will be Walter Trass, formerly manager of theatres in Hammondsport and Dansville, N. Y. This is Mr. Trass' first connection with Associated Theatres. One of the officials of this company, in explaining the sale of the Olympic said that the organization wished to avoid competition with themselves, as the patronage of the Lafayette theatre will now be enlarged by the former patrons of the Olympic. Under the terms of the sale the property cannot be a theatre for at least 99 years so the Lafayette should worry.

The writ commands that Shinnick issue a certificate to the theatre showing that it has complied with all regulations, and that Taylor issue a license to operate the theatre, or that both appear in court and show why they have not done so. This action ends an alleged political frameup by competitors to "get" the Regent following a cut in admission prices, the house being located on Twelfth Street in the heart of Kansas City's movie row.

Arrangements have been made for a series of business luncheons to be held through the coming season, beginning in September at the Detroit Union League Club, between members of the F. I. L. M. Club and officials of the city and men prominent in the business and civic affairs of the city.

About Cincinnati Photoplay Trade Circles

CINCINNATI exhibitors are especially elated over the cool spell that has been prevailing for quite some time and which they hope will continue. In fact, so great has been the increase in attendance at the local houses that most of the exhbitors are open with their remarks that they will begin their fall program at a much earlier date than originally intended. Coupled with the cool weather for drawing the crowds into the theatres is the Cincinnati Fall Festival which opens on the 25th of August and which will continue for fourteen days. This will bring thousands of visitors to the city many of whom will undoubtedly patronize the movies. Following the Festival the Odd Fellows will have their convention in the Queen City, and they promise to bring more delegates to town than any other convention has ever done in the past.

This has caused unusual activities around the Broadway Film Building and the other film distributing centers in the city. As a consequence many managers who have already closed with exhibitors are on the road getting rid of their products in the territory. Salesmen also report that the coolness has had a marked effect upon their sales and everyone in the business is much elated over the prospect of a very successful start for the new season.

Activities around the Film Board of Trade have recently taken on a new aspect. There seems to be a greater degree of harmony existing between the exchange men and the exhibitors in the Cincinnati territory than ever before. This perhaps is due to a great extent to the efforts of W. A. Kaiser who as head of the board has brought the right kind of feeling between the two factions, the consequence being a united effort between the two which is bound to be beneficial to both parties in question as well as to the general movie attending public.

Among the out of town visitors to the Film Buildings during the last week were, Fred Dolle of The Broadway Amusement Co., Louisvills, Ky., and Fred Myers and Harry Silvers of The Palace theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. All three are also looking forward to a very prosperous season, so much so that someone who ought to know intimated to the extent that there was very little squabbling as to prices for pictures between these three gentlemen and the exchange managers.

Warner Bros. have opened up an exchange office in the Broadway Film Building. The office is under the management of Clay Brehm, well known in the film industry around Cincinnati and other parts of the country. In this he has the assistance of all of the press representatives of the city as well as Bob Irvin, advance man, who has been in town for several days attending to the numerous details. The Grand Opera House, which has been recently repainted on the outside, is undergoing numerous changes on the interior as well, such as recovering the seats and renovating and changing the draperies throughout this famous amusement house.

Quite a celebration indulged in by the members of the Cincinnati branch of the Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., at Steve's Roadhouse last Saturday night. The roadhouse is one of the fashionable resorts on the Dixie Highway of Northern Kentucky and afforded a picturesque background for the festivities.

The occasion was the winning of the Eastern Division March and April contest for the GO-GETTERS of more business. Maurice Strauss, manager of the Cincinnati exchange, acted as representative of the managers and salesmen of the Eastern Division, presented H. M. Herbel, assistant general sales manager, with a beautiful chest of silver, as a wedding gift, Herbel having recently married the charming Universal star, Gladys Walton.

Richard C. Fox, summer manager of the Grand Opera House, Cincinnati, will leave for New York some time during the week to assume his duties there with the Universal Film Co. While in Cincinnati he represented the Universal company who were the summer lessees of the Opera House and where they presented their Jewel productions with more than ordinary success. While in Cincinnati Fox made numerous friends all of whom wish him well in his new undertaking.

"Little Old New York" Wins London

Picture and Star Acclaimed By Reviewers Following Premiere at Empire

WITHIN a month of its sensational opening at the new Cosmopolitan theatre on Columbus Circle, New York, Marion Davies in "Little Old New York," has achieved what is said to be one of the greatest triumphs ever accorded an American film in London, where it opened last week. Following its London premiere at the Empire theatre, the critics of the London dailies lavished both star and picture with praise. Here are some brief excerpts from the London reviews of the film:

The Evening Star—"The very simplicity of 'Little Old New York' is its greatest charm. It is free from over-exaggerated scenes, has no villains, no triangular passions and never a dull moment from beginning to end."

The Pall Mall Gazette—"Marion Davies scored a great success last night at the Empire theatre in the dual role of Patricia O'Day in 'Little Old New York.' The fascinating, beautiful love story is cleverly filmed and is a most attractive production."

The Evening News—"As a simple love story, 'Little Old New York' can claim to rank among the best of the present time American productions. It lacks nothing in modern film production."

The Evening Standard—"'Little Old New York' is a picturesque film of American life of 120 years ago. Most effective use has been made of opportunities for recreating the New York of that era in a dramatic way in which the launching of Robert Fulton's steamboat is exploited."

The London Times — "Neither historian nor ethnologist can afford to miss the new film, 'Little Old New York.'"

The Daily Chronicle—"It is compounded like April tears and smiles, the latter greatly outshining the tears. Marion Davies' real difficulty arose less from her shape and figure than from the behavior of her heart."

The Westminster Gazette—"It is an emphatic triumph for Miss Davies, who reveals herself as an actress of varied qualities."

The Daily Telegraph—"It is difficult to believe that screen photography will ever attain a higher level of excellence than in these beautifully grouped pictures which charm the eye for two hours."

Sherman Announces Six Specials

Completes Deal With Publishing House For Screen Rights to Popular Novels

HARRY A. SHERMAN, president of the Sherman Productions, announces the completion of negotiations with the firm of Harper Brothers, publishing house, whereby his organization will have the screen production right to more than a score of their novels.

Among the authors listed in the Sherman announcement are Basil King, Mildred K. Barbour, Margaret Cameron, Will E. Ingersoll, Margaret Deland, Marie Van Vorst and Will N. Harben.

The first of the productions that will be put into work will be the Basil King novel, "Let Not Men Put Asunder," which is to be released some time in November. The director and cast for this picture is to be announced shortly.

This feature is to be followed with five productions, including "Cat and the Canary," by Margaret Cameron; "Borrowed Husbands," by Mildred K. Barbour; "The Road That Leads to Home," by Will E. Ingersoll; "The Rising Tide," by Margaret Deland: "A Successful Wife," by Marie Van Vorst and "The Fruits of Desire," by Will N. Harben.

"The three most important essentials in successful motion picture production," stated Mr. Sherman in making his announcement, "I believe are, first the title from a box office standpoint, secondly the story and author from a production standpoint, and finally the director who handles the visualization of the story for the screen. Too many producers are apt to lean too heavily toward the artistic side and not sufficiently in the direction of the box office in making pictures. From my experience of many years as an exhibitor I believe I have obtained considerable insight into the needs of the exhibiting fraternity, possibly that is my reason for insisting that the greatest value of a picture is a box office title."

The Burr forces staged fire scenes at an Englewood school. The local fire department co-operated with Director La Cava by both appearing in the scenes and being in readiness for an emergency.

Continue "Green Goddess" Praise

N. Y. Critics Follow Up Favorable Reviews With Additional Commendation

SUCH has been the success of "The Green Goddess" at the Sam H. Harris theatre, New York, that motion picture critics are still engaged in commenting editorially on its value two weeks after the opening. A week after the premiere of this Distinctive feature starring George Arliss, F. M. Hall devoted three-quarters of a column in the Sunday issue of the New York Times to an elaboration on his thoughts on the first night—on which occasion he termed the photoplay as an epic in the motion picture industry.

In conclusion Mr. Hall says: "This is a remarkable photodrama. Nobody could wish for a better entertainment than offered by Mr. Arliss and his cast in "The Green Goddess."

Mr. Hall devoted one-third of his Sunday review to an appreciation of the work of Ivan Simpson as the oily, tricky valet of the Rajah.

Writing also a week after the opening, Robert E. Sherwood in the New York Herald says: "The performance of George Arliss as the sinister Rajah of Rukh is superb. The camera has not lost an item of detail in his perfectly polished impersonation, nor has it overdone anything. Mr. Arliss is one of the few stage stars who have made themselves completely at home on the screen. His expressive countenace, his absolute control of pantomimic gesture and his remarkable poise all photograph beautifully, and add immeasurably to the general worth of 'The Green Goddess."

On the same Sunday Harriet Underhill in the New York Tribune gave an entire column to the work of Jetta Goudal.

"Rouged Lips" Pleases Washington

Viola Dana' Initial Metro Vehicle Wins Approval of Newspaper Reviewers

FIRST press reports upon "Rouged Lips," Viola Dana's initial Metro vehicle of the season, stamp it an unqualified success. It opened last week at Loew's Palace, Washington, D. C., and the newspaper reviewers of that city welcomed it as few recent pictures have been welcomed there.

The Washington Times in a lengthy review states that "Rouged Lips," in which Miss Dana's supporting cast is headed by Tom Moore, "rises head and shoulders above the welter of program pictures we've been saddled with lately—and incidentally gives everybody a chance to exercise the laughter muscles on some of the funniest subtitles flashed on a Washington screen since the proverbial Hector was an adolescent canine."

The Washington News and the Evening Star are just as emphatic in their praise, making it unanimous. "'Rouged Lips,' a Metro production now at Loew's Palace," reports the News, "is the best picture Viola Dana has made for a long time."

"It is a story of the stage and its little people, written by the capable Rita Weiman. It is filled with the atmosphere of back stage—authentic and compelling. It is, what is more to the point, a darn good entertainment. . . . Viola is an eyeful as the little chorus girl who makes a true lover out of the rich young loafer who began as a mere hunter of the fair."

The story was directed by Harold Shaw, and was adapted from Rita Weiman's story, "Upstage," by Thomas J. Hopkins. John Arnold photographed the production.

Fox Leases London Palace Theatre

Will Open British House with Premiere of Hutchinson's "If Winter Comes"

UNDER the terms of a lease recently executed, William Fox assumes control of the Palace theatre, in London, England. He will open this noted house with the picture "If Winter Comes," from the novel on contemporary English life by A. S. M. Hutchinson.

As a result of this announcement, British playgoers are evincing exceptional interest in the enterprise, particularly in view of the fact that the premier showing will be attended by royalty and leaders in the British literary world. Additional interest is centered in the activity of Mr. Hutchinson, who personally edited the film version and expressed his complete satisfaction in the following cable to Mr. Fox:

"I have just viewed your film version of 'If Winter Comes.' It is an absolutely faithful rendering of my novel filmed almost page for page and without any departure from the narrative. The characters step straight out of the book and do precisely as they did in the book. I think it will delight all who liked the novel and my thanks are gladly given to all concerned, actors and producers alike."

Mr. Fox has arranged for an orchestra of 75 pieces to lend the correct accompaniment to the picture on the occasion of its London opening.

The Palace theatre is one of the most popular houses in the British metropolis and according to the consensus of opinion among London critics, nothing could have been more appropriate than an opening with such an essentially English production, made on the broad, American scale with which Mr. Fox has handled it.

Hoffman Sees Big Independent Year

Truart General Manager Says Production Will Make Greatest Strides

"During the 1923-24 season independent production will make greater strides toward coming to its rightful position in motion pictures than during any previous period in the history the industry," is the statement of M. H. Hoffman, vice president and general manager of Truart Film Corporation.

"The reason for this is as simple as the result is inevitable," continues Mr. Hoffman. "It is that independent producers have at last come to the realization that they must offer a product in all respects as good, and if possible better, than that which is being presented by the old-line national distributors. And, having come to that realization the independents are going ahead and making the finest quality of product on the market.

"The one outstanding, proven fact in this more or less unsettled industry is that a good production, no matter whom it is produced by, be it an independent unit, an old-line producer or an individual, will meet with a great portion, even if not all, of the success it deserves.

"Forecasting the independent field for the forthcoming season, therefore, becomes a simple matter. That field will realize a greater measure of success than has ever attended it before, because it is making the calibre of productions that qualify it for such success.

"It is our firm conviction that independent productions will be found in just percentage in the first-run theatres of the country, that they will in their proportion be a measure of the success of the entire industry, that they will take their place along with all other productions as outstanding in the public's knowledge of the biggest attractions of the year.

"And because the industry must have independent effort to stimulate what might otherwise become a lethargy in production, because independent product fosters the competition which is a saving factor in the exhibitors' channel of the business, and because the independents are producing good pictures, 1923-24 will not only be a big independent year, but it will be one of the biggest the industry as a whole has ever known."

"Richard, Lion Hearted" Due Soon

Associated Authors Provide Lavish Settings for Celebrated Story

FROM a story familiar to millions of book lovers the world over, "Richard, the Lion-Hearted," a stupendous pictorial romance based on Sir Walter Scott's celebrated novel, "The Talisman," has been filmed by Associated Authors with a wealth of lavish settings and historical interest, and is now announced for immediate release by Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation.

"Richard, the Lion-Hearted" inaugurates something new in the motion picture industry. While it forms in itself a complete and finished narrative, at the same time this big feature supplies a gap in the story of "Robin Hood" as produced by Douglas Fairbanks and which proved such a film sensation and has shattered attendance records in every section of the country.

Combined with the Douglas Fairbanks' feature this picture presents a pictorially comprehensive record of that historical period between the time King Richard left England on the Third Crusade until his return, and the story of the "lion-hearted" monarch's adventures in Palestine has been pictured with the fine sweep of an epic and the warm appeal of romance and exceptionally strong heart interest.

As the initial offering of Associated Authors, "Richard, the Lion-Hearted" represents the best efforts of three nationally known photoplay authors and directors—Frank Woods, Thompson Buchanan and Elmer Harris. It was produced under the personal supervision of Frank Woods, with the other two experienced motion picture men in close advisory co-operation.

"Richard, the Lion-Hearted" is said to have been produced on a scale that makes it truly a "spectacle." Massive sets were constructed as the background for the stirring tale that has been a world favorite for many decades. Gorgeous costumes, weapons, and scores of properties typical of the period of the Third Crusade were obtained with great effort and after weeks of painstaking research.

Kathleen Clifford was cast for the role of Queen Berengaria, and Marguerite de la Motte, who has won an enviable niche for herself in costume parts, was engaged to play Lady Edith Plantagenet. John Bowers is seen as Sir Kenneth, Knight of the Leopard. Charles Gerrard, as the Sultan Saladin, ruler of the Saracens, Tully Marshal, Clarence Geldert, George Seigman and Wilbur Higby complete the remarkable cast.

Reconstruct County for Pickford Feature

Wolfe county, Kentucky, about the year 1870 has been reconstructed for Jack Pickford's forthcoming photoplay "Valley of the Wolf," being produced for fall release through Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation. This rural domain with its crude characteristics has been brought into actuality in Feather River Canyon, Calif., where Jack and his company now are filming the exteriors for the new picture.

The Wolfe county court-house, which, when not being used for feud-killing trials, serves as a school house, looms in the setting. The McCoy cabin is there, and "Ground-hog" Spence's shack is "just around the mountain and two gulleys, down."

Fox Announces Releases for September

A SPECIAL production, a William Farnum star series feature, an Imperial comedy and an Educational entertainment conclude the list of releases by the Fox Film Corporation for the first seven days of September, according to a statement this week.

The special is "The Eleventh Hour," prints of which have been in the exchanges for several days, where exhibitors have been viewing it prior to bookings. The production features the two popular Fox stars, Charles Jones and Shirley Mason, and it is a film version of Lincoln J. Carter's New York stage melodrama.

"The Gun Fighter" is the title of the William Farnum vehicle. Lynn Reynolds directed the photoplay.

The Imperial comedy, "Why Pay Rent," is the second of this new brand to be released. It will be ready for distribution September 2.

"The Mysteries of Yucatan," the Fox Educational subject, is one reel and is an exposition of the old ruins in Central America.

Famous Houses Book Two Selznick Pictures

David R. Blyth, director of sales and distribution for the Selznick Distributing Corporation, announces that negotiations have been completed with Harold Franklin, managing director of theatres for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, to exhibit "Rupert of Hentzau" and "The Common Law" in their chain of theatres included in the Southern Enterprises.

"This contract," continues Mr. Blyth, "takes these two pictures into the best and biggest theatres in the South, and with one or two exceptions into every city included in the circuit."

This makes the second big circuit that has booked the two Myron Selznick Master Pictures to date, the West Coast Theatres, Inc., having closed for them early in the season.

Set Record with "Port of Golden Opportunity"

A record of 46 scenes in one day was established recently by Wedgwood Nowell in directing "The Port of Golden Opportunity," a story of the amazing development of Los Angeles Harbor produced by Standard Film Laboratories of Hollywood for World Traders of Los Angeles.

All of the scenes were taken along the local water-front. A screen story with unusual entertainment values has been interwoven with facts about the industrial growth of Southern California. World-wide distribution of the film is being planned for disseminating knowledge of the trade possibilities through Los Angeles harbor.

Aronson Says Independent Prospects Are Good

AFTER a swing around the Middle West, Alexander S. Aronson, general sales manager of Truart, reports a healthy business with most exhibitors. The outlook for the coming season is unusually encouraging. He says:

"Exhibitors generally realize that most of the independent producers are creating box office attractions that are worth first-run showings and these independent productions are receiving the first-runs they deserve.

"The exhibitors further realize the independent producers are not burdened with excess overhead and can therefore deal with the exhibitor on a very equitable basis. It is my firm conviction, from contact with exhibitors and exchange men in most of the key centres in the Middle West, that independent product of merit will enjoy unusual success this coming theatrical season."

Special Fox Displays for "Silent Command"

Fox Film Corporation has prepared special twenty-four sheets of block design for the opening of "The Silent Command," the J. Gordon Edwards special production, both in New York and Chicago.

Both metropolises will be covered with the large, impressively-lettered posters this week as the premieres are scheduled for September 2nd in New York at the Central Theatre and August 31st at the new Monroe Theatre.

More than three hundred 24-sheet stands in New York City alone will bear the standards and about half this number in the Michigan Lake city, it is said.

Much eminence is being devoted to the indorsement of the picture by various Washington officials, including General Pershing and Theodore Roosevelt, Jr.

Film Big Scene in "His Children's Children"

Sam Wood was engaged the greater part of last week at the Paramount Long Island studio in filming the largest interior scene for his new production, "His Children's Children," which Monte M. Katterjohn adapted from Arthur Train's novel.

The scene shows the social debut of Sheila Kayne, youngest daughter of Rufus Kayne, New York millionaire and three hundred extra people were used for the party. It is the first scene in the picture where practically the entire cast of principals is shown at the same time, those appearing being Bebe Daniels, Dorothy Mackaill, Hail Hamilton, James Rennie, Mahlon Hamilton, George Fawcett, Sally Crute, Warner Oland, John Davidson, Lawrence D'Orsay, Joe Burke, Dora Mills Adams and Sidney Dean.

Warner Advertising Campaign On

Opening Gun Fired with Double-Spread in Eleven Leading Newspapers

THE opening gun of the Warner Brothers' three-quarters of a million dollar advertising campaign was fired last week in eleven of the largest newspapers in the United States. This was in the nature of a four-colored, double-spread in eleven selected publications. This advertising campaign will be carried on in the magazines and newspapers of national importance throughout the country.

In launching this campaign the Warner Brothers are taking a decisive step to help solve the problems of the exhibitor. The advertisements which will be carried throughout the United States are not placed to call the exhibitor's attention to the Warner Brothers' product, but to arrest the attention of the public at large and inform them of endeavors toward better pictures of the Warners. In other words, the campaign sells the picture not to the exhibitor, but to his public.

The combined circulation of a specially selected list of metropolitan newspapers and magazines which will carry the Warner advertising at frequent intervals amounts to over eighteen million, it is claimed. And more than one thousand newspapers in other cities and towns will be pressed into service. Among the prominent magazines selected are The Saturday Evening Post, The Cosmopolitan and The Literary Digest. Realizing that the theatregoers of the country read the "fan" magazines extensively, the Warners have selected the following: Motion Picture Magazine, Classic, Picture Play, Screenland, Photoplay, Film Fun and Movie Weekly.

In addition to this extensive newspaper and magazine advertising campaign, billboard space has been acquired by the Warners in all of the important cities, calling attention to all of the Warner product, particularly the eighteen features.

Chaplin Feature Is Highly Praised

Smashes Sacred Film Conventions with "A Woman of Paris," Says Critic

UNDER the headline "Chaplin Smashes Sacred Film Conventions" the motion picture reviewer for the preview section of the Los Angeles Times gives the highest of praise to Charles Chaplin's seven reel feature photodrama, "A Woman of Paris," the great comedian's first serious contribution to the screen, which is scheduled for premier showing in New York in October, prior to release through United Artists Corporation.

"A Woman of Paris" was written and directed by Mr. Chaplin and features Edna Purviance and Adolphe Menjou in the leading roles. In the course of his lengthy review the Times' critic says:

"Of late there has been considerable concern among producers over the fact that instead of developing along original lines the photoplays have been becoming more and more the victim of technical conventions of production and presentation. There has been a growing sameness in the manner of handling situations; originality has been, in most instances, lacking in the way of putting over scenes, emotions, plot developments and characters.

"Now comes something different; now comes a photoplay which smashes the old conventions and—what is more important—gives something better in place of what is smashed. The photoplay is 'A Woman of Paris,' and the man who wrote and directed it is Charles Chaplin.

"'I have tried to get away from the old system of doing things,' said Mr. Chaplin when he and I and a handful of people sat in the Chaplin projection room after 'A Woman of Paris' had been run off.

"'You haven't blazed a new trail; you have paved a new boulevard,' I replied. And there you have 'A Woman of Paris' reviewed in one sentence.

"People who have not made a study of the technicalities of photoplay production and plot building will probably not realize why they find this picture so refreshing. They will probably say that it moves along quickly—that there isn't a slow movement in the whole film. But those who study screen plays will find it packed with innovations.

"The story? It is simple and direct and has been told many times. It is the story of a girl from a small town in France who misunderstands the man whom she is to marry. She goes to Paris and becomes the mistress of the richest and gayest bachelor of the capital. Then she meets her old sweetheart, who has become an artist. The old love revives, and there is some shooting.

"Simple? Yes, but not too simple to hold one breathless with interest. And that is because of the way the story is told. And it is treatment, not material, which makes it a classic."

Oldknow Buys Principal's Five for South

Oscar S. Oldknow, president of the Southern States Film Company, returned to the South about two weeks ago, after his having secured a franchise for his territory from Irving M. Lesser, for Principal's five productions, "Bright Lights of Broadway," "The Spider and the Rose," "Temporary Marriage," "Gold Madness" and "East Side, West Side."

Mr. Oldknow's company covers practically the entire South, including, as it does, eleven states. Exchanges are maintained in Atlanta, Jacksonville, New Orleans, Memphis and Dallas.

Preferred Completes "Virginian"

"THE VIRGINIAN" has just been completed at the studio of B. P. Schulberg, producer of Preferred Pictures. Mr. Schulberg is highly enthusiastic over this production. In a wire to Al Lichtman, president of Preferred, he said:

"I am confident that 'The Virginian' is going to be one of the really big pictures of the season. Tom Forman has taken the supreme masterpiece of Western fiction and has made a picture worthy of the book. This picture has a tremendous audience appeal, and I have absolute confidence that it will be one of the biggest money-makers ever given to exhibitors."

Blackton Completes Work "On Banks of Wabash"

J. Stuart Blackton last week completed his super feature, "On the Banks of the Wabash," with a remarkable climax taken on Manhassett Bay, L. I.

This photoplay, which was inspired by Paul Dresser's famous song classic, deals with the people of a small town along the banks of the Wabash river in Indiana. Vitagraph built in Manhassett Bay a reproduction of one of these Middle West towns. The town was built on piling in a wide cove of the bay. The episode taken at Manhassett filmed a flood which swept down the valley and leveled the village.

The entire cast comprised, of James Morrison, Mary Carr, Burr McIntosh, Lumsden Hare, Madge Evans and Marcia Harris, as well as scores of women and children engaged as extras, participated.

Johnson Finishes Work on "Mail Man"

HAVING finished shooting "The Mail Man" at the Pat Powers studio, Emory Johnson has begun to personally supervise the cutting of the picture, which is slated for late Autumn release by Film Booking Offices.

Johnson is also planning a trip to New York at the end of September to begin shooting his next F. B. O. production, many of the scenes of which will be taken in the East.

Plan Second Production for Mammoth

With the return last week of A. L. Jaffe one of the directing heads of the Mammoth Pictures Corporation to the coast, plans were laid for the production of the next picture which the Fisher Productions will make for distribution under the Mammoth banner.

It is expected that within a short time announcements will be issued concerning the affiliation of several important coast production units with the Mammoth organization. The plan upon which the Mammoth will handle its distribution was formulated by Victor B. Fisher and has met with the unqualified commendation of a large portion of the independent exchangemen in the United States, it is claimed.

Universal Introduces Camerascope

Pocket Stereoscope with Stills from "Hunchback" Is Striking Novelty

A NOVEL departure in the supply of advance information concerning "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," the big super picture soon to be presented by Carl Laemmle, has been taken by the Universal Pictures Corporation. It is the distribution among Universal's exhibitor patrons of a Camerascope, or pocket stereoscope in which the exhibitor can see especially prepared scenes from the photo-drama.

By means of the three-dimension qualities of the little Camerascope, the great depth of the vast "Hunchback" sets can readily be appreciated, and unusual idea obtained of the picture qualities of the production. With each Camerascope ten double image stills from the picture are included. Universal announces it will distribute additional Camerascope-stills of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" later.

The Camerascope is to be retained by the theatre owner. Universal plans to make and distribute similar stills on its later Super Jewel productions. Stills from "A Lady of Quality," "Virginia Valli's next super picture, will follow "The Hunchback" collection. "Damned," the big anonymous mystery picture, also will be similarly treated. Universal has the exclusive use of the Camerascope, in the motion picture field.

The Camerascope is a folding edition of the familiar stereoscope which adorned every parlor table a decade or so back, and which used to be one of the most popular indoor sports, when looking at lifelike pictures of Niagara Falls, the Grand Canyon and such views was considered a highly exciting Sunday afternoon pastime.

This is the first instance of three dimension pictures being used to show off the artistic and picture qualities of motion picture production stills. When the idea was brought to the attention of Carl Laemmle, Universal president, he hailed it as an exploitation and sales move of exceptional value.

Crawford Tells Conditions Abroad

England Making Great Advances, Says Associated Exhibitors' Vice-President

ROY CRAWFORD, vice-president and treasurer of Associated Exhibitors, returned to New York this week on the Cedric, after a tour of more than a month in Europe. Mr. Crawford studied business conditions in London and Paris, passed several days in rural England, went over some of the French battle fields, and visited Fontainebleau, Versailles and other points of historical interest. He was accompanied by Mrs. Crawford and their young son, Roy, Jr.

"There is no denying the fact that both England and France are far behind us in the picture industry, as regards production, presentation, and theatres themselves," said Mr. Crawford. "But, in England in particular, a great advance is being made. The more important English producers realize now that their own field is too limited, and that they must make product which will appeal to American picture lovers also. That is why so many of them are now engaging American actors. In London a large new picture house is now being built, which, according to its projectors, will rival the best in New York.

"One thing which is certain to impress every observer of picture conditions and which naturally impressed me favorably, is the fact that Harold Lloyd is a great popular favorite in England. Mr. Lloyd makes a deep appeal to all classes, and the billing of any of his features is always the signal for a packed house.

"In France more American pictures are in circulation than are productions of any other country. One expects to find American-made features advertised in front of the leading boulevard theatres of Paris and he is seldom disappointed. The effects of the war continues to be felt in business circles in France much more strongly than in England. Notably in London I found a genuine spirit of optimism regarding the outlook for the fall."

Fawcett Working in Two Paramount Features

GEORGE FAWCETT is running Glenn Hunter a close race for the hard-working honors at Paramount's Long Island studio. Hunter is working in "West or the Water Tower," under Rollin Sturgeon's direction, and on the stage at the same time, while Fawcett is working in two pictures simultaneously. He is finishing up his work in Sam Wood's production, "His Children's Children," and is also appearing as Charles Chew in "West of the Water Tower" at the same time.

"Modern Marriage" Gets Novel Publicity

"Modern Marriage," the latest production starring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, now being released by the Selznick Distributing Corporation, has been the recipient of some of the most unique and novel publicity that has been offered to the industry in years, says the Selznick office.

The original print was constructed in three sections as a company composed of the principals in the picture, including Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne, has toured the principal cities of the country with the picture. When the break comes in the film, the screen fades out and the company appears on the stage and resumes the story with spoken drama. The picture is again flashed on the screen at the conclusion of the act and runs until the next break, when it is again resumed with the spoken drama.

Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne, with their company, have presented this innovation in all the key cities of the United States.

Dallas Critics Commend "Destroying Angel"

The Associated Exhibitors feature, Leah Baird in "The Destroying Angel," was the attraction at Manager L. S. Fohlman's Capitol Theatre, Dallas, Tex., last week, and scored a triumph, according to advices received at Associated's home office.

The reviewer of the Dallas News said: "By special arrangement, the Capitol Theatre is now giving the first showing since its premiere of Leah Baird's newest film, 'The Destroying Angel.'

"It is by far the most pretentious production in which Miss Baird has appeared in recent years. A strong and unusual story is found in the plot. There are picturesque beach scenes, sketches of society life and a thrilling kidnapping thrown in for good measure."

The Times-Herald said in the course of its review: "Laughs alternating with thrills and excitement enacted by the gifted Leah Baird and a cast of clever screen artists who also are stars, was the surprisingly good offering at the Capitol in 'The Destroying Angel.'"

Santschi Has Two Big Roles in Jewels

TOM SANTSCHI is completing the second of two important characterizations for Universal, both of which promise unusual interest for fans who watch for his work.

The first one was the polished heavy of "Thundering Dawn," a Universal-Jewel all-star production directed by Harry Garson, in which Santschi appears with Anna Q. Nilsson, J. Warren Kerrigan, Winifred Bryson and others.

The second is one of the leading roles with Priscilla Dean in "The Storm Daughter," which George Archainbaud is directing.

Viola Dana Is Popular In Germany

In a recent popularity contest conducted in Germany by Germany's leading film magazine, The Illustrated Film World, Viola Dana, Metro star, was adjudged the most popular American screen star appearing on the German screen. She received more votes than any other American competitor.

Although the contest was won by the German cinema stars, the American players, immediately following Miss Dana were, in this order of popularity, Charlie Chaplin, Mary Pickford, Priscilla Dean and Douglas Fairbanks.

Miss Dana, who has just completed "The Social Code" for Metro, under the direction of Oscar Apfel, has gone on to the filming of her newest Metro picture, Kate Jordan's story, "In Search of a Thrill," known to magazine readers as "The Spirit of the Road." It is being directed by Oscar Apfel and photographed by John Arnold.

Weber, North Will Rush "It's A Boy"

L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North are hard at work on production plans of "It's a Boy," the next on the program to follow Will Nigh's "Marriage Morals" and B. P. Fineman's "Don't Marry for Money." The success of the last two pictures has been such that it has prompted the producers to speed the preliminary work on the new comedy.

"It's a Boy" is by William Anthony McGuire, author of "Six Cylinder Love" and other Broadway successes, and enjoyed a prosperous run at the Sam Harris theatre, New York.

Dillon Will Make Elaine Hammerstein Series

Edward Dillon, who produced "Women Men Marry" for Truart Film Corporation, will be in directorial charge of the present series of Elaine Hammerstein productions being made by Truart. Dillon directed "Broadway Gold," which is already meeting with success throughout the country. He is at present assembling the cast to support the star in the picturization of Harold MacGrath's "Drums of Jeopardy."

N. Y. Praise for "Daytime Wives"

Newspaper Reviewers Commend Picture and Declare It Is True to Life

"DAYTIME WIVES," starring Derclys Perdue, Grace Darmond and Wyndham Standing, which opened last week for a prerelease at the Central theatre, New York, received unusual daily newspaper reports on the quality of the picture.

Robert Welch, photoplay editor of the Evening Telegram, allowed his enthusiasm to run amuck, while the other dailies were almost as much in favor of the picture. Welch said:

"There is a good picture at the Central theatre this week. It is entitled 'Daytime Wives,' and so true to life is it that almost every one, no matter what his station or position in life, sees himself or herself not what they are, but what they ought to be. There is a moral to it, and a study of this latest cinema will repay any one.

"The theme of the story has to do with two women, one the wife of a building contractor and the other his secretary.

"Throughout the story the wife indulges in everything that a dutiful wife should scorn, while the secretary is ever on the job saving money in suggestions and carrying out the hundred and one details that go to make or build a skyscraper.

"A male flapper, whose expenses are paid by the wife, persuades her to believe her husband does not love her, and following a little visit to the steel skeleton building, which has been constructed to the twentieth floor, results in its complete collapse, when, during a fight with the building foreman, the husband knocks him down and a donkey engine runs wild. The collapse of the building is a real thriller, and it also comes close to bringing ruin to the young husband. In a fit of pique the wife leaves home, only to find that the male flapper does not love her, and the curtain falls showing her repentant and in the arms of her husband, while the secretary marries a banker who has promised the husband all the money he needs with which to again start building."

Smith Takes Universal Sales Reins

New Department General Manager Predicts Great Prosperity for Organization

EDWIN J. SMITH, Universal's new General Manager of Sales, has arrived in New York from London and has assumed the managerial mantle extended to him by Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, following the resignation of Art Schmidt, former sales chief. Smith resigned his post as general manager of the European Motion Picture Company, Ltd., of London, a big British distributing organization, to take the Universal executive position.

Fired with enthusiasm for his new work and taking the sales reins at a time when Universal has a fall line-up of big pictures which is winning exhibitor approval in all parts of the country, Smith, upon arriving in New York, voiced his optimists of the future.

Smith bases his prediction not only upon the big pictures Universal now has ready for release or in the making, but also on the long list of super-productions that company has projected for the coming year or year and a half. It is asserted that Universal has almost two years' supply of "bigger" pictures definitely selected and being carefully adapted for the screen by the scenario staff at Universal City.

"You can't beat the combination of high class pictures and first class service and relationships," explains Smith. "Mr. Laemmle has built up the Universal Pictures Corporation on the high quality of its pictures and the constant good-will of exhibitors.

"As exchange manager of Universal's Cleveland exchange several years ago, and later as District Manager of this company's Atlantic seaboard division, I learned the value of Mr. Laemmle's 'live-and-let-live' policy and to what a great extent many exhibitors depend for their very existence upon his fair play methods. Add box office success to this reputation for reliability and square dealing and you have an invincible line-up.

"My principal endeavor, in developing my position as general manager of sales, will be to build on this exhibitor relationship and seek new means of cementing Universal friendship."

De Mille Company Back from San Francisco

Cecil B. DeMille and a number of the featured players in "The Ten Commandments," the story of which was written by Jeanie Macpherson, have returned from San Francisco where an important sequence of scenes in the modern story of this Paramount Picture was filmed on and about the structural work of a new church now under construction there.

In addition to Leatrice Joy, Richard Dix, Nita Naldi, Rod LaRocque, Edythe Chapman and Robert Edeson of the cast of featured players. Mr. DeMille was accompanied by his production staff including Jeanie Macpherson, author and scenarist; Paul Iribe, art director; Bert Glennon, chief of the camera staff and Cullen Tate, assistant director.

Many Franchises Closed on Truart Product

The Edward Dillon production, "Women Men Marry," featuring E. K. Lincoln and Florence Dixon, and "The Empty Cradle," Burton King's epic of womankind, featuring Mary Alden and Harry T. Morey, have been franchised to independent exchanges covering almost the entire country, it is reported by Truart.

Production on "Maytime" Under Way

WORK on "Maytime" has been started at B. P. Schulberg's studio. Mr. Schulberg has just announced the completed cast which will enact the Preferred version of Rida Johnson Young's famous stage play, which has been running on the stage for six years.

Ethel Shannon and Clara Bow will be the leading women players, and Harrison Ford will be the hero. William Norris, who played in the stage version, will have the comedy part of Matthew. Other prominent players will be Wallace MacDonald, Netta Westcott, Josef Swickard, Martha Mattox, Robert McKim, Betty Francisco, Edna Tichenor and Mertha

Truart Series Is Almost All Franchised

With the consummation of two deals which had been entered into by Truart sales officials the franchising of the first series of Elaine Hammerstein productions, starting with "Broadway Gold," has almost blanketed the entire country, it is claimed. M. H. Hoffman, vice president and general manager, closed a deal with Bob Lynch of Metro Film Exchange, Philadelphia, on this series for Southern New Jersey and Eastern Pennsylvania.

Alexander S. Aronson, general manager of sales, on a tour of the country, closed with Finkelstein and Rubin of Minneapolis, Minn., for the territory comprising Minnesota, North and South Dakota and the northern peninsula of Wisconsin, on the Hammerstein series.

MILTON CRANDALL, in a letter to Colonel Sprague, Commissioner of Public Works of Chicago, expressed his desire to present Mayor William E. Dever with the original harpoons used aboard the whaling vessel Charles W. Morgan during the filming of "Down to the Sea in Ships."

In appreciation of the offer, Mayor Dever invited Mr. Crandall and a party of friends to his offices, where the presentation was made.

Like "Bright Lights of Broadway"

Principal Pictures Production Scores Success at Indianapolis Opening

ACCORDING to reports emainating from Indianapolis the Bennie Ziedman production, "Bright Lights of Broadway" for Principal Pictures Corporation has scored a success at the Circle theatre. Irving M. Lesser, General Manager of Distribution has been advised that the capacity audience on opening night greeted the production enthusiastically. It also met with much commendation from the newspaper reviewers.

The critic on the Indianapolis Star says in part, "Doris Kenyon, as the simple country girl lured to the big city in quest of a career, is one of the most refreshing personalities on the silversheet. Opposite her have been cast Kenneth Harlan as the minister-sweetheart who stays at home and Lowell Sherman as the theatrical producer who gives Irene her chance and insists that she take one. Both are fine."

The News reviewer says in part in the Monday issue, "It has thrills aplenty and will provide entertainment that will be exciting enough for summer audiences. Doris Kenyon, as Irene Marley, does famously."

"Bright Lights of Broadway" was directed by Webster Campbell, and is one of the latest group of five to be offered by Principal Pictures Corporation, the others being "Temporary Marriage" "East Side, West Side," "The Spider and The Rose," and "Gold Madness."

Buster Keaton to Discard Pancake Hat

BUSTER KEATON'S famous pancake hat will not be so much in evidence in his next two Metro releases. In "Three Ages" the humorous lid is worn by Buster only about one-third of the time and in "Hospitality," his second feature-length comedy to follow, he will wear it even less.

"Three Ages," presented by Joseph M. Schenck, was directed by Buster Keaton and Eddie Cline. Story and titles were supplied by Jean Havez, Joe Mitchell and Clyde Bruckman.

Press Sheet Issued For "Strangers of Night"

Press sheets for the Niblo production, "Strangers of the Night," a Metro-Louis B. Mayer attraction, have just come off the press, and cover thoroughly every angle of publicity, exploitation and advertising on the screen version of Walter Hackett's famous stage play, "Captain Applejack."

The front cover, suitable for a lobby or window card is done in two colors and shows a striking pose of Enid Bennett as a pirate. Several pages are devoted to exploitation, many original and novel stunts being described such as the guessing contest, the treasure hunt idea and the tagging stranger stunt. Then there are tie-ups, novelty pirate hats, cartoons, card tricks and a hundred and one other suggestions that should prove of untold value to the exhibitor. Each idea is fully and carefully outlined so that it can be put over with the least possible outlay of time and money.

"The details of this plan have been worked out," says Mr. Fisher, "upon a basis which will assure a business profit to all franchise holders and at the same time will bring regular substantial returns to his producers."

"Broken Wing" Praised in St. Louis

"The Broken Wing," the first of the new season's group of fifteen Preferred Pictures, had its world premiere in St. Louis on August 19th, playing simultaneously at three leading houses, the West End, Lyric and Capitol.

All of the St. Louis papers were lavish in their praise of the picture.

The Star said: "This is one of the most entertaining films shown in St. Louis in recent months."

The Globe-Democrat: "Likeable players and an excellent vehicle."

Post-Dispatch: "Kenneth Harlan, Miriam Cooper, Walter Long and Miss duPont give a lively interpretation of this melodrama of aviation and the southwest, which has the laughs and the thrills evenly divided."

Mammoth Closes Deal with Marcus

Negotiations between Victor B. Fisher, general manager of the Mammoth Pictures Corporation, and Gene Marcus of the Twentieth Century Exchange organization of Philadelphia were brought to a successful conclusion last week. Mr. Marcus' concern signed up the entire output of Mammoth producing companies.

The first production on the Mammoth list is "Enemies of Children" prints of which will be shipped to the Twentieth Century office as soon as laboratory work is completed in New York.

"Wild Oranges" Company Back From Georgia

King Vidor and his "Wild Oranges" company are expected to return to the Goldwyn studios next week after their location trip to the dangerous swamplands of Georgia, where the entire picture was made. Those in the cast are James Kirkwood, Virginia Valli, Ford Sterling, Buddy Post and Nigel de Brulier.

Warners Effect Tieups on Features

Mercantile Advertising Developed for Exploiting Wesley Barry Pictures

A NEW angle of co-operative mercantile advertising recently developed by the Warner Brothers will be a great exploitation medium for all exhibitors who have contracted for "The Printer's Devil," "George Washington, Jr.," and others of the series of Warner features.

Each manufacturer who has entered the tie-up is furnished with play dates in the different towns where his dealers are located. On the Wesley Barry series of Warner productions, the exhibitor is said to have more than 100,000 window displays waiting for him to help exploit his picture.

These tie-ups call for appropriate photographs, life-sized cut-outs of the star and interesting lay-outs of Wesley Barry using or applying one of the selected kinds of merchandise arranged for. The Harlowe & Luther Drug Co., on the corner of Broadway and 46th street, New York, is at the present time using such a display, tied-up with the Ingersoll Redipoint Pencil Co.

This tie-up calls for window displays with 22,000 dealers handling the Ingersoll merchandise, and in all displays, Wesley Barry is shown, either in a life-sized figure or else in a special lay-out display.

Many other important tie-ups have been arranged for which will be of great benefit to the exhibitor who has contracted for the Warner Classics starring Wesley Barry. Among these manufacturers are the Van Houton Cocoa Co., Ben Weiner Clothing Co., Walter Janvier Drug Co., U. S. Rubber Co., tying up with Keds, Pittsburgh Water Heater Co., F. A. D. A. Radio Sets, Hohner Harmonicas, and the Westinghouse Electric Co.

Each manufacturer has arranged to do his share in the tie-up by using many columns of advertising space in newspapers and in his own advertising mediums.

Rapid Progress Made on "Day of Faith"

With arc lights flashing at night, and an enlarged battery of cameras clicking by day, Tod Browning's Goldwyn unit filming Arthur Somers Roche's dramatic story, "The Day of Faith," is making exceptional progress. The night scenes which have been taken on the New York street at the Culver City plant have been calling for from five to six hundred extras every night.

Eleanor Boardman, Wallace MacDonald and Ford Sterling are the three unlucky members of the large cast who have been called upon to work night and day.

Ford Buys "Down to Sea in Ships" for Europe

Harrison Ford of Paris and London has purchased the rights to "Down to the Sea in Ships" for distribution in Europe. He is planning extensive exploitation and advertising campaigns on the feature.

In New Bedford, Mass., where most of the photoplay was filmed he secured an old three-masted whaling boat and over three thousand implements used in the whating industry. These have been turned over to the city of Paris for exhibit purposes, according to Mr. Ford. They will be loaned to London to be exhibited in the Thames while the picture is being shown in London.

Dig A Little Deeper, Is F. B. O. Sales Slogan

F. B. O. salesmen start a new sales campaign this week under the slogan of "dig a little deeper." This was adopted at a recent sales meeting headed by H. M. Berman and the novelty of the phrase struck them as being a good sales motto.

As a result of a recent sales campaign five watches were awarded branch managers. The winners were Roth at Boston, Hull at Indianapolis, Metzger at Seattle, Young at Des Moines and McNamee at Washington.

Statistics Prove Mix Pictures Popular

According to statistics gathered by Fox Film Corporation, Tom Mix pictures are shown every night at 500 theatres somewhere in the United States, and witnessed by a daily average of 200,000 people.

Although Tom is now the owner and skipper of a handsome power boat he still remains true to his devotion to fleet-footed cow ponies. He has had a picture of Tony painted on either side of the bow of his yacht and swears there is nothing equal to horse power.

Giblyn Starts Work On "Leavenworth Case"

Charles Giblyn, who is directing Whitman Bennett's coming production of the famous mystery novel, "The Leavenworth Case" by Anna Katherine Green, has begun work at the Whitman Bennett studios in Yonkers. This is one of the six

Plan "If Winter Comes" Premieres

New York and Chicago Dignitaries to Be on Hand for Opening Performances

NEW YORK and Chicago will be shown the William Fox film version of A. S. M. Hutchinson's "If Winter Comes," directed by Harry Millarde, at premieres in both cities on September 3rd and 2nd, respectively.

The Broadway opening, scheduled at the Times Square theatre, has been prepared for one of the most elaborate and distinguished first nights a motion picture has ever experienced in the east. The theatre itself has been given over to the film for the first time in its history, and nearly every prominent newspaper man, magazine editor, critic, author, artist, social leader and business general has accepted an invitation for the first presentation, it is claimed.

In Chicago the picture goes into the Sam H. Harris theatre, which heretofore has been devoted exclusively to offerings of the spoken stage. Considerable preparation, here, too, has been given the pending exhibition and the same spirit which identifies New York's rialto is evident along the theatrical and picture thoroughfares of the Michigan Lake metropolis.

Percy Marmount, the noted actor who assumed the difficult role of "Mark Sabre" and whom San Francisco critics declared to be superb in his part, sent a last minute wire from the Pacific coast carrying his regrets at being unable to attend the New York opening. Marmount is engaged in the filming of "You Can't Get Away With It," which Roland V. Lee is adapting from the Gouverneur Morris story and which has been announced on the Fox list of 25 specials for 1924.

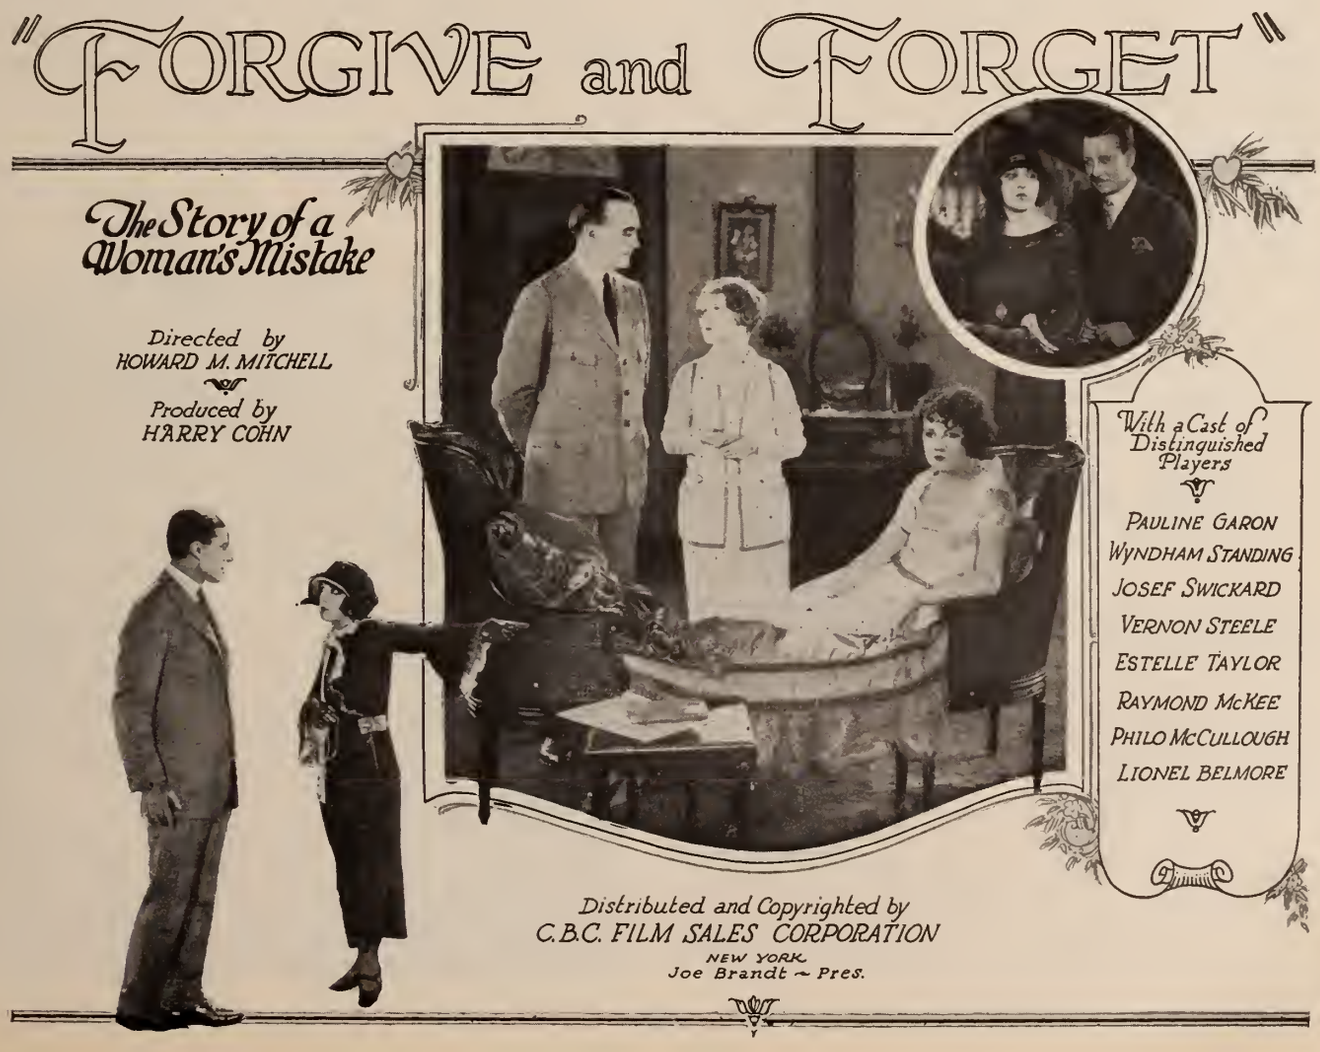
Constance Binney Takes Brief Vacation

Constance Binney, who is starring in a series of C. C. Burr pictures, is vacationing at Beverley Farms, Massachusetts, on the North Shore between Boston and Manchester. She is scheduled to be at the Burr Glendale Studio before the first of September. Her initial Burr pocture, directed by Kenneth Webb, is now being cut and titled for release through Associated Exhibitors.

Truart Producer Off For East With Prints

When A. Carlos, president of Carlos Productions, Inc., which unit is producing at the Coast for Truart Film Corporation distribution, leaves Los Angeles this week he will take with him the first print of "The Unknown Purple," an eight reel production, and "Fast Freight," starring Richard Talmadge.

Campaign Is Planned for "Michael O'Halloran"



An exceptional exploitation campaign has been planned by W. W. Hodkinson Corporation in connection with "Michael O'Halloran." Grosset and Dunlap, publishers, will issue a reprinted edition of Mrs. Gene Stratton-Porter's "Her Father's Daughter" and at the same time will publish a popular photoplay edition of "Michael O'Halloran," thus effecting a strong tie-up with the exhibitor. Every book store in the country and each salesman of the publishing house will centre their efforts toward Gene Stratton-Porter, tie-ups with exhibitors and all forms of exploitations between the book merchant and the theatre manager, it is claimed.

Seastrom Takes Company To San Francisco

Victor Seastrom, the eminent Swedish director, who is now well under way on his first American production, "The Judge and the Woman," left the Goldwyn studios this week for a location trip to San Francisco.

Conrad Nagel, Mae Busch and Patsy Ruth Miller, who have the leading roles, will take part in these San Francisco scenes. The picture is a screen adaptation of Hall Caine's latest novel, "The Master of Man."

New Title Supervision Staff For C.B.C.

A special department to supervise the mechanical end of the titling of the company's new features has been installed by the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation. The duties of the department are separate and apart from the actual writing of titles for the features, but have to do with the selection of special art subjects with which to dress them, the origination of new designs and styles of titles.

The titles of "Yesterday's Wife," first of the new features released this season by C. B. C. have already aroused much flattering comment from those who have seen the picture.

The new department is under the direct supervision of Jack Cohn.

Store Employees Benefit By "Safety Last"

Orchestra Hall, Chicago, Ill., utilized an effective exploitation angle in conjunction with the theatre's showing of Pathe's "Safety Last." The theatre used to advantage Department Store scenes in the Harold Lloyd comedy, as a basis for exploitation to stir up interest and comment among the many workers employed in those establishments.

Realizing that this class of workers would be particularly interested in "Safety Last" scenes which burlesque the every day trials of their own craft, the Orchestra Hall management arranged a special admission rate for members of that industry only.

Mary Alden Prominent In "Pleasure Mad"

Mary Alden, who had an unusually fine role in the recently completed Metro Premier Feature, "The Eagle's Feather," in which she enacted the feminine lead, has another big role in the new Reginald Barker production of "Pleasure Mad," a Metro picture to be presented by Louis B. Mayer.

Appearing in "The Eagle's Feather" as the strong woman whose hopes of love are shattered, she is, in "Pleasure Mad," a wife of moderate means whose domestic happiness is spoiled by the acquisition of sudden wealth.

"Pleasure Mad" was adapted by A. P. Younger from Blanche Upright's novel, "The Valley of Content."

Miriam Battista Appears At Loew's Toronto

Little Miriam Battista, who had just completed her work in Distinctive's "The Steadfast Heart," is making a week of personal appearances at Loew's, Toronto, Canada, in connection with one of her many photoplays.

The cast of "The Steadfast Heart" includes Marguerite Courtot, Mary Alden, Joseph Striker, William B. Mack and Joseph Depew. This production will be released in the early fall after "The Green Goddess," through Goldwyn Cosmopolitan.

Hughes to Address L. A. Lawyers on Divorce

RUPERT HUGHES, author and Goldwyn director, has been asked to address the members of the Los Angeles Bar Association on "conflicting divorce laws," the theme of his present production, the tentative title for which is "Law Against Law."

Mr. Hughes will make his address within the next two weeks, following his return from Yellowstone Park, where he "shot" scenes for his picture. In the cast are Helene Chadwick, George Walsh, Carmel Myers, Lew Cody, Hedda Hopper, Dale Fuller and other well-known players.

Roosevelt Pays Tribute To "Four Horsemen"

Added to the long list of tributes for Rex Ingram's Metro production of "The Four Horsemen"—a list which includes rulers of nations as well as the most humble—is one from Theodore Roosevelt, assistant secretary of the navy.

The New York Sun has been printing daily the opinions of prominent Americans as to the six plays they have enjoyed most during their lives. Asked to contribute, Col. Roosevelt responded last week with a list of only three plays, one of which was "The Four Horsemen."

Only recently the Russell Sage Foundation made a poll among 50,000 high school boys to determine which photoplay they regarded as the best they had ever seen. "The Four Horsemen" was first on the list.

Rotogravure Layout for "Broadway Gold"

A full-page layout of scenes from "Broadway Gold," Elaine Hammerstein's first production of a series for Truart Film Corporation, is the feature of a special rotogravure section prepared by the Picture Press, Inc. The roto section is a portion of daily newspapers, numbering in excess of fifty throughout the country, with an aggregate circulation of over 500,000.

This display is one of the many items of national publicity through which Truart films are being brought to the attention of the theatre-going public.

Fidelity To Make Race Track Feature

Wm. G. Smith of Fidelity Pictures Company, announces that his company will shortly release via the State Right market a race track production under the title "Wings of the Turf," from the published story, "Boy Woodburn," by Alfred Ollivant.

"Leavenworth Case" Is Making Progress

Rapid progress is being made at the Yonkers studios of Whitman Bennett Productions by Charles Giblyn, director in filming "The Leavenworth Case," the famous detective story by Anna Katharine Green. Producer Bennett will release "The Leavenworth Case" through Vitagraph. It will be the second of the specials he will contribute toward the twenty-six super features announced by Albert E. Smith, president for the season of 1923-24. Leading players are Seena Owen, Martha Mansfield, Wilfred Lytell, Bradley Barker, Paul Doucet, William Walcott, Francis Miller Grant and Fred Miller.

New York Rights Sold on "Barefoot Boy"

Immediately following announcement that the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation had been selected to distribute on the State Right market "The Barefoot Boy," and other products of the Mission Film Corporation, Greater New York and Northern New Jersey rights to the feature were disposed of.

Contracts have been completed with Sam Zierler, whereby the Commonwealth Film Corporation, of which he is president, will handle the feature in the territory referred to.

Elaborate Sets Feature "Rendezvous"

Topping his big ballroom set in "The Eternal Three," Marshall Neilan recently directed scenes for his latest Russian drama, "The Rendezvous," on the largest interior set of his career—an exact replica of the Czar's banquet hall in his winter palace in St. Petersburg in the year 1904.

Three hundred beautiful ladies in sweeping trains, and as many courtly gentlemen in gorgeous uniforms, dined in state in the immense marble hall, 152 feet wide and 200 feet long.

From his box the Czar, impersonated by R. C. Pennell, addressed the brilliant assemblage, which included, in the foreground, Richard C. Travers as the Prince, and Kathleen Key, as his betrothed.

Metro Animal Picture Is Hit In Sweden

In a cablegram just received at the home offices of Metro Pictures Corporation from Raoul Le Mat of Stockholm, Sweden, this enterprising showman tells of the enthusiastic reception tendered Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson's "Trailing African Wild Animals," a Metro release.

"Johnson film opened in Sweden's best house, the Red Mill, Stockholm, to capacity. Received finest press notices ever accorded a picture here," is the news contained in Mr. Le Mat's communication.

Goldwyn Pictures Near Completion

EMMETT FLYNN is putting the final editing and titling touches to "In the Palace of the King" and Tod Browning is nearing the end of his work on "The Day of Faith," Goldwyn productions.

Lowell Completes Work on "Floodgates"

John Lowell, star and producer of "Ten Nights in a Barroom," and "Lost in a Big City," is about through with his work in his latest feature, "Floodgates." The story, by L. Case Russell, is said to give Mr. Lowell his greatest characterization yet attempted.

Directed by George Irving, photographed by Joe Settle, the supporting cast includes Angeline Russell, Jane Thomas, Ivy Ward, and other capable players, this production will interest exhibitors looking for genuine screen value.

Return for Interiors on "No More Women"

After a week of ideal weather amid the scenic glories of Arrowhead Lake, the Associated Authors' company of players making "No More Women" for release through Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation, have returned to the Ince studios to complete the interior scenes of this Elmer Harris original story and production.

The players include Madge Bellamy, Kathleen Clifford, Matt Moore, Shannon Day, Clarence Burton, Stanhope Wheatcroft, H. Reeves-Smith and the director, Lloyd Ingraham.

Convalescent Veterans in "Call of Canyon"

Disabled war veterans and nurses from the Soldiers' Home, Sawtelle, Cal., providing true "hospital atmosphere," were motion picture actors for a day at Paramount's West Coast studio during the filming of scenes in Zane Grey's "The Call of the Canyon," featuring Richard Dix and Lois Wilson. The veterans needed few instructions from Victor Fleming, the director, but simply "Carried on" as they would in the convalescent ward at the Soldiers' Home.

"Pioneer Trails" Ready For Exchanges

Prints of "Pioneer Trails," recently completed at the Vitagraph studios in Hollywood, will be shipped from the Brooklyn headquarters to Branch exchanges shortly.

It is a David Smith production and the director is said to have gone further with this dramatic photoplay of the West than ever before.

A cast of exceptional talent has been gathered for "Pioneer Trails." Cullen Landis and Alice Calhoun have the leading roles.

Dutch Dance Prologue Explained in Detail

Specialty Used by Stuart of Missouri Theatre Offers Valuable Suggestions

FROM out Missouri way come some suggestions in the line of pantomime dancing which are quite interesting and worthy of consideration by all managers desiring to add a finished touch to his program.

Herschel Stuart, managing director of the Missouri theatre, St. Louis, Mo., father of these ideas, produces evidence that they are practical by submitting photographs and detailed information as to the proper application of his suggestions. Charles C. Dahl, technical director, also helped in the contribution. It being impossible to show all these suggestions in one issue, they will be shown separately from time to time.

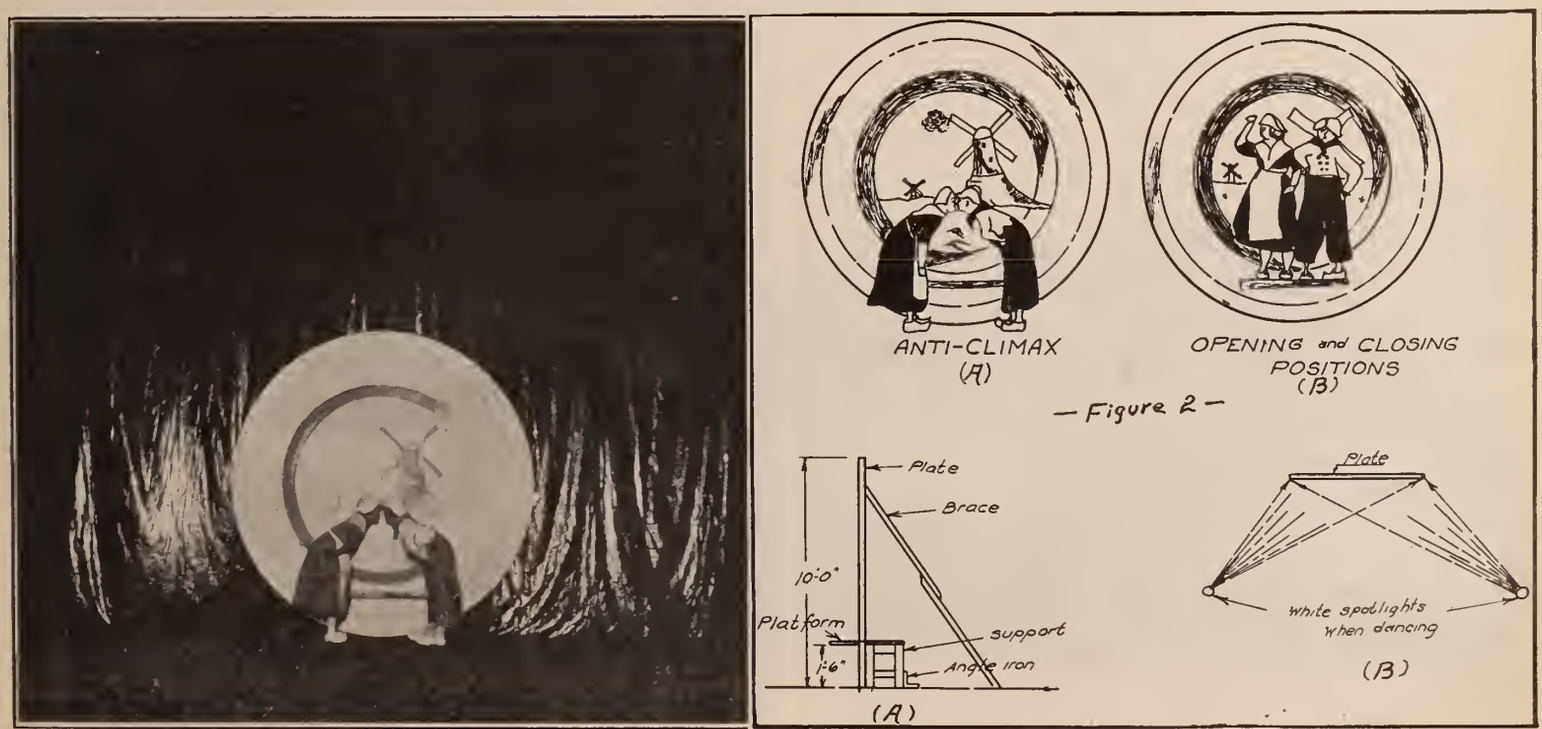
The first, called "A Study in Delft," in the nature of a dance divertisement, shows, at the rise of the curtain, two Dutch figures, boy and girl, standing posed before a huge Dutch Plate as if painted thereon (Fig. 2B). To the tune of familiar Dutch music the dance begins, the dancers jumping off the platform, on which they had been standing, and going into Flirtation Dutch Dance.

The dance is finished in a position such as that shown in Fig. 1 and Fig. 2A and then to closing music the dancers go back to the plate and assume their opening position shown in Figure 1B.

Costumes

So much for a sketch of the performance. The props and accessories necessary to carry out the act will now be described.

The costumes of the dancers can be made from a cheap grade of cambric, the colors thereof matching those painted on the Dutch plate. The principal ones being blue and white, the costume of the girl can consist of a blue dress with white starched apron, neckpiece and cap. White stockings for contrast and, of course, the indispensable wooden shoes will finish the touch. As for the boy, blue trousers, wide and baggy, in the Dutch style, a white jacket fitting snug and tucked into the trousers having two rows of large buttons down the front, supplemented by a blue neckerchief, white socks, cap and wooden shoes are required.



The Plate

The prop requiring the greatest expenditure of time and effort is, obviously, the plate (designed after the fashion of a Dutch dinner plate). This can be constructed of framed beaver board and should be cut in the form of a circle, 10 feet in diameter. Upon the surface of this should be painted in colors matching the costumes of the dancers, i.e., blue and white, some typical Dutch design. This can, if necessary, be copied from a real plate. If none is at hand, however, the conventional windmill can be painted in addi-

S. M. P. E. Local Chapter to Be Formed

THE West Coast members of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers recently held their first meeting at the California Country Club at Culver City where ten of the industry's best gathered for supper and formulated plans for the organization of a local chapter there. The members present were Roy J. Pomeroy, in charge of the Experimental Department of the Lasky Studio; his assistant, W. M. Hutchison; Earl J. Denison, projection engineer for Lasky Studio; Leslie Cuffe, projectionist at Lasky Studio; J. Lee Rauch, electrical engineer at F. B. O. Studio; Fred Rudolph, foreman of machine shop at Lasky Studio; A. G. Wise, foreman of machine shop at Standard Laboratory, and H. F. O'Brien. While there are not a sufficient number of active members to organize a local chapter, nearly all of the members present evidenced interest enough in the organization to change their associate memberships to active and to solicit new memberships during the next month so that the chapter may be under consideration by the first of September and be in shape to proceed with regular meetings.

The Dutch Delft number arranged by Herschel Stuart, managing director of the Missouri theatre, St. Louis, and fully described in the accompanying article.

tion to a canal or so. The country of Holland is flat, so hills are tabooed. However, too much detail is unnecessary and should be avoided and good results will be obtained by the use of one or perhaps two windmills.

No great artistic ability need be required for this painting but some attention should be paid to the shading to bring out the appearance of the run of the plate and the side of the dish. This shading is shown in Fig. 2A and B.

After the plate has been painted, a small trestle construction having a board firmly attached to the top of it should be built and used as a support for the bottom of plate. This trestle should be fastened to the floor by means of angle irons as shown in Fig. 3A. The board mentioned before is the platform upon which the dancers stand and should project through a slot cut in the plate for that purpose. The width of the platform need be only 8 inches or thereabouts since it should not be very conspicuous. The height above the floor is given as 18 inches.

In addition to the support attached to the bottom of the plate, braces must be applied to the top in order to prevent its toppling over. These can be made from either one long piece or two short pieces spliced together of timber measuring approximately one inch square. The ends of these braces should be fastened to the floor to prevent their slipping.

The plate itself should be placed before a black curtain to kill undesirable reflections and to make the plate stand out in the highlight.

Lighting

A variety of methods of lighting both the plate and dancers will no doubt suggest themselves to the active manager and in an effort to stimulate his thoughts a few possible methods will be briefly described.

The easiest method, involving also the least equipment, makes use of two spotlights throwing white light on the principals during the dance. These spots can be arranged as shown in Fig. 3B thus giving cross rays of light and breaking up the harsh shadows which would result from the use of only one spot directly in front. These two spots can, if possible, be placed on the stage, one on each side.

Another method involves the use of colored lighting. Some rather startling results can be obtained by painting thte Dutch plate in colors such as pale red (pink, to be exact) and pale green. Thus two windmills can be painted on the plate, one in red and the other in green. Two canals, one red and the other green, can also be added. If, now, red, blue and green spots be thrown on the plate, the objects will be seen in their natural colors.

By the use of a resistance or dimmer attached to each spot, the red, for instance, can be brought down making the green windmill and canal disappear entirely from sight, if the colors have been carefully chosen, and the red windmill and canal will show up as a blue-black. If, on the other hand, the red is brought up at the same time that the green and blue are brought down, the red windmill and canal will disappear and the ones in green will show up in black. These changes should be carried out slowly in order to get the proper fading effect.

Still another method, supplementing the use of the white spots before mentioned, calls for the use of blue footlights and blue spots from the sides. One white spot, however, should be used from the front with this method.

A little thought will bring out a host of other ideas suitable to the proper showing of the act and these are given merely to point out the way.

Pantages, Kansas City, to Re-Open

Work in day and night shifts on the new $50,000 adjunct to the air-cooling system of the Pantages theatre, a combination motion picture and vaudeville house of Kansas City, will be completed when the theatre is scheduled to re-open. A 150-ton plant which cools 60,000 cubic feet of air a minute is being installed by the Kiltz Engineering and Equipment Company of Los Angeles. Humidity is taken from the air by condensing the moisture and reheating it to the zone comfort, or whatever temperature is desired. A $60,000 washed air system previously had been installed in the theatre. The cooling system now being installed is the second to be placed in a theatre in the United States.

It is automatically controlled, requires 200 horsepower to operate and cools 550 gallons of water a minute. This is sprayed through pipes, cleaning and cooling with one operation, making a complete cycle.—True.

Exterior of the new Sawyer Lubin Studios recently dedicated at San Diego, Cal. This is the first of the studios of this group to be completed, being 256 ft. long, 90 ft. wide and 46 ft. from ceiling to floor.

Washington Building Permit Commissioner Reports

In his annual report the building permit commissioner of Washington, James Healy, declared that not only had the occurrence of the Knickerbocker mishap and other building casualties in Washington shown the need of limiting construction to qualified and competent contractors, licensed by the District of Columbia, but that it should be effected with the adoption of the new building code.

Last year construction totaled slightly over $36,000,000, and the total number of permits was 1,891 less than this year when construction was close to $58,000,000, and permits were 12,191. Among other figures, some showing declines, and others gains, he showed that "twelve new churches and two new theatres were begun during the fiscal year." Total cost of the churches is given as $721,500; while the two theatres account for $150,000.—Kanppen.

Industry Demands Big for Silver

Approximately 5,000,000 ounces of silver are used in the United States annually by motion picture and other photographers, according to estimates made by Robert Linton, president of the North Butte Mining Company, in a statement made public by the American Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers which will hold its one hundred and twenty-eighth meeting in Canada, August 20 to 31.

Both rich and poor are demanding silver, says Mr. Linton, who sees a world-wide increase in the use of this metal in arts and manufactures. Silver, he suggests, might play an important part in the readjustment of international business.

"The amount of silver required for use in arts and manufactures has shown a steady increase, rising in the United States from 13,217,284 ounces in 1900 to 36,252,596 ounces in 1918, from which point it dropped to 28,843,428 ounces in 1921, or a net increase for the period of over 100 per cent.," continues Mr. Linton. The most important single factors in this increase have been the development of the motion picture industry and the growing popularity of amateur photography.

Newsettes from the West

A new picture theatre will be erected at Gysum, Kansas. Erection of this new movie theatre will start in a few weeks and will cost $25,000. The Rialto theatre at Reno, Nev., owned by Turner & Dahnken Enterprises, is to be remodeled at a cost of $75,000 it has recently been announced by Manager F. Costello.

M. Phipps, of the Phipps & Layton Enterprises, Childress, Texas, will erect a modern picture theatre in this city at an early date. The very latest in projection room equipment will be installed.

A 500-seat picture theatre will be erected at Eureka, Kansas. by Meade Theatres Company. It will be known as the Regent and will be completed shortly.

A new picture theatre will be erected at an early date at Port Arthur, Texas, with the very latest in theatre equipment to be installed.

A theatre to cost $75,000, at Excelsior Springs, Mo. The theatre will seat about 1,000. Will be erected by William Beyers.

There are several new picture theatres planned to be erected in Oklahoma. The show business is on the boom and most every manager reports that his business is greatly increasing.—Trout.

PROVEN WORTH

AN evenly illuminated screen, steady, flickerless light, maximum illumination with minimum cost, are the features which are making incandescent lamp projection universally accepted as the modern light source in the up-to-date theatres throughout the United States.

There is no other proven method of projection which gives equal economy, quality of screen illumination and ease and dependability of operation.

The progressive exhibitor will not overlook the opportunity which incandescent MAZDA projection offers as a means of securing perfect projection and a satisfied patronage.

The Edison MAZDA motion picture lamp is now being used by hundreds of exhibitors.

There is a proper Edison MAZDA lamp for every requirement of the theatre; i. e., projection, marquee and sign; lobby and auditorium, stage, etc.

Motor Generators

Lesson VI—Part XII

Motor Generators

THE voltage ordinarily supplied the theatre by the central station ranges from 110 to 220 and since the voltage of the arc, where such are used, is in the neighborhood of 50 it can be seen that some means must be used to lower the voltage at the switchboard in order to project the picture.

There are a number of ways of accomplishing this apparently simple act and the methods employed by the various electrical manufacturers give rise to many types of machines. All these machines, however, have a common purpose and that is to change the voltage supplied to that suitable for operation of the arc. It would be hopeless to even attempt to describe one machine or method as being superior to another in view of the different operating conditions and so no attempt will be made to do so. Rather, a description of each type will be given and the reader left to form his own conclusions, supported no doubt, by personal experience, as to the merits of each.

Types of Machines

The methods most commonly employed for receiving this change in voltage are as follows:

1. Resistance.
2. Transformer.
3. Mercury Arc Rectifier.
4. Motor Generator.
5. Rotary Converter.

The use of a resistance alone is very wasteful and is seldom used where it can be avoided. The mercury arc rectifier has already been described and will not be mentioned further while the transformer will be described later on. This leaves only the motor generator and rotary converter for present attention. These two types of machines are usually included under the common name of motor generator, but, strictly, such is not the case, since the converter is different both in point of construction and principle.

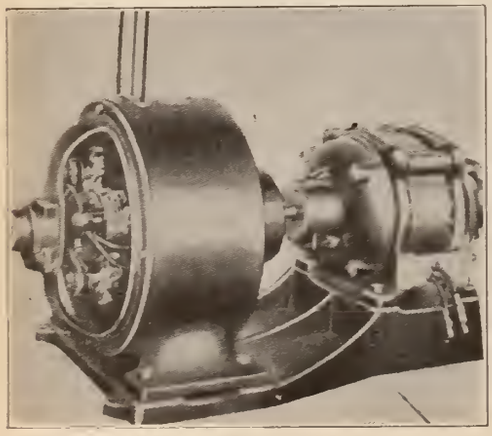

Figure 98

The various manufacturers have built their machines to have certain operating characteristics, and this gives rise to still further classifications. Thus we have machines classified as follows:

1. As to type of machine: Motor-generators, rotary converters.
2. Method of using two arcs: Series operation, multiple operation.
3. Kind of current supplied: Changing from A. C. to D. C., changing from D. C. to lower voltage D. C.
4. Regulation of arc intensity: Using ballast resistance, changing voltage of arc.

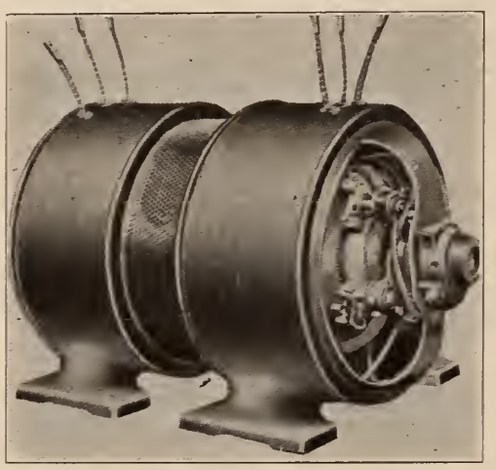

Figure 99

Some of the makes of machines most commonly used which come under the above classification are General Electric, Westinghouse, Wagner, Hertner and Hallberg. Since the Hertner machine was described in detail last week, no further attention need be given it here.

General Electric

The General Electric, or G. E. machine, as it is commonly called, is a motor generator which operates the arcs in series. Machines are made to change from either A. C. to D. C. to D. C.

Since both the A. C. to D. C. and D. C. to D. C. motor generator compensares employ the same specially designed generator, the larger part of the following information will apply to both sets:

These machines give an open circuit voltage of approximately 180 volts, which drops to 60 volts when one lamp is burning. The two lamps are connected in series without any resistance whatever. Short circuiting switches are provided to close the circuit around the lamp that is not burning, thus allowing the lamps to be trimmed without opening the circuit. When the second arc is struck the machine automatically increases its voltage to approximately 120 volts. The machine accommodates itself to the length of arc drawn so that it gives practically the same current whether one very short arc or two long arcs in series are burning.

The wiring scheme is very simple, since the panel containing the ammeter and field rheostat can be placed anywhere in the booth, while the individual short circuiting switches can be mounted on the stand of the picture machine. The very flexible source of current behind the lamp tends to keep the arc quiet and at the same intensity which allows the picture to be faded in or out without any change of light on the screen.

This generator automatically protects itself and the line fuses from burning out; in fact, the carbons can be left together indefinitely on direct short circuit without any trouble.

The projection arc circuit is completely insulated from the power circuit, forming a valuable safeguard to the operator while handling the projection lamps.

The ratings for the General Electric motor generator sets are as follows:

A. C. to D. C. and D. C. to D. C.

35 ampere 50 ampere 70 ampere 100 ampere	for either	110 volts 220 volts 440 volts 550 volts	for either	25 cycles 40 cycles 50 cycles 60 cycles

In addition to the above, the machines can be supplied for either one, two or three-phase operation.

All of the motor generator sets, with the exception of the 35 ampere set, which is thrown directly on the line, are supplied with either hand or automatic starters. Fig. 98 shows the A. C. to D. C. set and Fig. 99 the D. C. to D. C. set.

Westinghouse

The Westinghouse machine is perhaps more commonly referred to as a constant potential machine All the arc circuits are in multiple, making each circuit independent of the others. This, of course, means that the voltage must be the same at twice full load, during change-over, as at full load. The name constant potential comes from this fact. Constant current is obtained by the use of ballast rheostats.

Two or more circuits of different amperage can be used at the same time, either for projectors, spotlights or floodlighting. All sets can be used for single or double arc operation. The rheostats act as a ballast against fluctuations in the current caused by variations in the resistance of the arc circuit as described in a preceding article. A ballast rheostat is required for each arc.

Starting switches are used for starting the squirrel cage induction motors with full line voltage. The single phase motors are started by using two poles of the three-phase switch.

EASTMAN POSITIVE FILM

To protect the exhibitor against screening, unknowingly, film of inferior photographic quality we make Eastman Positive Film identifiable. The words "Eastman" "Kodak" are stenciled in black letters in the transparent film margin. Look for this positive proof that you are projecting the "film that carries quality through to the screen."

Eastman Film, both regular and tinted base, is now available in thousand foot lengths.

For starting the direct current motors a different kind of starter is used which is characterized by strong, compact, fireproof construction. An automatic starter can also be had if desired.

In Fig. 100 is shown a typical Westinghouse motor generator set employing a polyphase alternating current motor in connection with a direct curent compound wound generator. Other sets changing from single phase A. C. to D. C. and from D. C. to D. C. are also made along the same lines.

It might be well at this point to give a little information bearing on the proper construction of a foundation for the motor generator set. A good method is to build it as shown in Fig. 101. The bottom of the bed plate of the set should be about two feet above floor level. To prevent the magnetic hum and vibration being transmitted to the surrounding parts. such as the floor, it is desirable to build a vibration and sound absorbing base.

Solid planking two inches thick and layers of solid cork each two inches thick. Anchor bolts should be placed in the foundation so that they will extend a sufficient distance above the sound absorbing base to permit placing of nuts. The foundation should be preferably of concrete.

Wagner

The Wagner machine is in no sense of the word a motor generator, but rather a rotary converter. In fact, the manufacturers call it the Wagner White Light Converter. This machine depends upon the use of a ballast resistance for stabilization of the arc, as the claim is made that this method acts instantaneously, whereas the automatic regulation of the generator is slower in action. The latter method, however, has the advantage of using less power.

The Wagner White Light Converter was developed expressly for moving picture work. It is designed to give all the favorable characteristics discussed in the foregoing pages. It consists of three component parts:

1. Self-contained generating unit, which converts alternating current into perfect direct current.
2. Reversing switch with ammeter which is mounted in a booth near the projectionist.
3. Ballast rheostat for stabilizing the arcs.

Converter

The Wagner White Light Converter is made for single-phase, two-phase and three-phase circuits. It transforms or converts the alternating current of commercial frequency and voltage to direct current of the proper voltage for motion picture arc operation. The direct current furnished by this machine is the same as would be furnished by a direct-current generator of the same size and quality of design. This machine does not rectify the alternating current, it regenerates it; that is, it performs the same functions as a motor-generator set, although it has only one armature and a shaft of approximately half the length of the equivalent motor generator.

In order to provide for efficient reduction of voltage from the alternating-current line to that required by the converter, transformer elements are connected between the converter and the supply line. These transformers are mounted in the cast-iron sub-base of the converter, as shown in Fig. 102.

The switch which serves to make the necessary electrical connections when starting the converter is enclosed in a sheet metal box and mounted on the same sub-base with the converter.

The converter itself has much the same appearance as an ordinary electric generator. It has only one armature and one armature winding. On one end of the armature there is a large commutator, which contains a large number of segments. On the opposite end of the armature there are solid rings which provide for a connection to the alternating-current supply.

The transformer is so arranged that in the case of an emergency it can be used to supply the arcs with alternating curent without use of the converter. Therefore, in case of an accident to the converter, it would be possible to proceed with the picture, making connections directly to the transformer.

All wiring connections between the switch, the converter and the transformers are made in the Wagner shops, and terminals brought to outlets attached to the sub-base and arranged for conduit connection. There is one outlet for the alternating-current supply line, and another one for the direct-current line running to the projection booth.

Hallberg

The Hallberg motor generator, or "Economizer," as it is frequently called, is similar in appearance and operation to some of the other sets already described. It comes in two principal voltage ranges, 110 volts and 200-275 volts. The 110-volt outfit is provided with automatic starting box and light controller, which enables the projectionist to vary the current within the proper limits.

An automatic starter and light controller is also provided with the 200-275-volt set and has means for connecting a gas-driven engine to the generator, thus making it a good emergency outfit. The machine is also arranged so that a supply of low-voltage current can be drawn off to one side of the machine for operating the projection arc and high voltage off the other side to permit its being used as a motor.

TransVerteR

All Arcs in Series Two or More
Any Two Simultaneously Same Amperes In Each Arc.

Gives a Perfect Dissolve

TransVerteR (double arc type), furnishes two perfect arcs in series simultaneously. Each is of the same amperage and light value.

In striking the second arc the one showing is not disturbed in the slightest degree. This gives a perfect dissolve. No ballast is used as automatic voltage is provided.

The projectionist, by a slight turn of a convenient control handle, can instantly increase or decrease the amperage generated and furnished to the arc, thus obtaining the light best adapted for the film being shown.

The World of the Microscope to Be Filmed by Principal Pictures

TO have the marvels of the microscopic world brought within the compass of the youngest intelligence and to the interested attention of mature minds has been made possible by an arrangement effected yesterday whereby the Principal Pictures Corporation has taken over the Louis H. Tolhurst laboratories, films, miscroscopic apparatus and miscroscopic moving picture equipment, and in conjunction with Mr. Tolhurst will put forth a series of motion pictures of microscopic subjects for theatrical as well as non-theatrical distribution.

A new door has been opened by this arrangement for the development of a department hitherto closed to motion picture exploitation. And it is proposed to reveal the marvels of the microscopic world in a manner as entertaining and sensational as it is instructive and edifying.

For eight years Louis H. Tolhurst has been struggling with the problems that have till now prevented perfect motion pictures of microscopic life. One of the most baffling of these was the creation of a light sufficiently brilliant to illuminate tiny living objects without killing them. Mr. Tolhurst has solved this problem.

Another problem was faced in the mechanical difficulty of setting the apparatus at work instantly with the operation of the camera, but this difficulty has so far been overcome in Tolhurst's processes that before a spider can complete his leap from ambush to strike an unwary housefly, the entire intricate apparatus is set in motion and the flashing movement of the insect is recorded on the motion picture screen.

Still another problem that has been solved is one that relates to optics and perspective. All photographers are aware of the result of taking a picture of a horse, head on. The head of the animal is out of all proportion while the hind quarters are diminished. In microscopical photography, such as Mr. Tolhurst was studying, the image of a fly's eye or a bee's sting is raised on the screen millions of times. Yet the whole object photographed occupies a plane less than a half-inch square. To keep the various features of objects magnified in their proper proportion was the problem and Mr. Tolhurst has solved it.

The educational value of such motion pictures is declared to be incalculable. It means that the fascinating works of such writers as Maurice Maeterlinck, J. Henri Fabre and others who have written in popular vein on insect life, can be screened. In fact, Tolhurst's first completed picture under perfected conditions has been dedicated to "man's tiniest and truest friend, his co-worker, the bee." It might be called a film version of Maeterlinck's unique book, "The Life of the Bee." Other pictures now in the making or in contemplation will reveal the secrets of the life of the ant, the spider, the fly, the mosquito and the beetle.

Karl Struss Receives Prizes

Karl Struss, who turns camera for Gasnier and who was for three years with Cecil De Mille, is receiving high recognition for the art portraits that he makes in his own home studio. Several of these recently won prizes in London, four of his prints were chosen to appear in the exhibit at the Pittsburgh Salon and another group were hung in the exhibition at the Albright Art Gallery in Buffalo. He won a prize in the American Photographers' Annual Competition held in Boston and learned that he took second prize in the annual e hibit of photography held at the Frederick & Nelson Company of Seattle. Karl Struss formerly had his own photographic studio on Fifth Avenue in New York City.

Opinions on Current Short Subjects

"Yankee Spirit"

(Educatonal—Two Reels)

HERE is a thoroughly cnjoyable comedy which, in addition to its entertainment qualitics, possesses genuine exploitation possibilities. The gags for the most part revolve around a typical boyish character who is full of pep and mischief. Bennie Alexander, in the leading role, puts over a highly amusing performance and adds to his laurcls as an accomplished boy actor of the screen. The early part of the action presents Bennie in a series of laughable incidents, in which he pits his ingenuity against the parental authority, succeeds for a space, but eventually loses out. The devices which Bennie resorts to to circumvent all efforts to get him out of bed in the morning ought to win plenty of laughs from any type of audience. And there is action in this subject as well as comedy moments. In the first place, Bennie, after suffering from many indignities at the hands of the town bully, turns on his foe and licks him properly while the gang looks on in open-mouth wonder. The director has staged these sequences in such a manner as to secure a maximum of comedy from the situation. Another action highlight is the attack of the Boy Scouts upon the rendezvous of the robbers who have stolen an automobile into which Bennie's baby brother has crawled. Due to the effective work of the Scouts, the robbers are routed from their stronghold and subsequently arrested, and the baby is restored to the arms of its panic-stricken father. Opportunities for tying up with welfare organizations, concerned with the nterests of the boys in your community, are to be found here, especially with respect to the Boy Scout sequences of the picture.—E. F. SUPPLE.

"Skylarking"

"SKYLARKING" is a Mack Sennett comedy of above the average calibre, combining genuinely humorous situations with highly laughable incidents. The trick automobile has been used extensively as a comedy device in fun films, but "Skylarking" introduces a type of motor-vehicle which we have never before seen on the screen—the flying flivver. We predict that when Harry Gribbon fools the traffic cop by sending his airplane motor-car soaring above the streets and roofs of the city the audience will laugh with glee one second and gasp in wonder at the next. These scenes are strikingly handled, photographically, and add materially to the comedy appeal of the subject. Gribbon appears as the inventor of the ingenious flivver and Kewpie Morgan as a trffic cop. In the first reel much of the action is taken up by an unsuccessful demonstration of the flying flivver. Two clever children players, Josephine Adair and Jackie Lucas, take a prominent part in supplying the fun in these early sequences. In the second reel Gribbon goes joy riding with Kewpie's wife (played by Alberta Vaughn) in his balloon-auto. All goes well until the woman fints and forces a descent near a roadhouse. Kewpie sees the inventor enter the inn with a strange woman, not knowing the lady is his wife. Later Kewpie goes to warn Gribbon when the latter. wife also enters the roadhouse. The subsequent complications are extremely funny. In the end, Kewpie learns the identity of the woman with the inventor and immcdiately gives chase. While Gribbon is flying over a zoo, evading the angry traffic cop, his vhicle meets with disaster and precipitates both himself and the policeman's wife into a cage of lions, from which they are rescued after several mishaps. Here's a comedy with an abundance of laugh-provoking gags and at the same time a generous measure of thrills. This subject ought to go well in any type of house.—E. F. SUPPLE.

"Companions"

(Educational—One Reel)

"COMPANIONS" is the second of the "Sing Them Again" series recently inaugurated by Educational Film exchanges. These subjects are intended as a modernized revival of the old-time melodies and combine the words of the songs with appropriate motion-picture themes partly serious and partly humorous in spirit. We found this second contribution to the series even more entertaining than the first. The airs embodied in this number include "Comrades," "You Made Me What I Am Today" and "When You and I Were Young, Maggie." The method of introducing and carrying along the refrain of "You Made Me What I Am Today" is especially effective and ought to be good for a real laugh anywhere. The song is simply announced as one intended to be sung by the married men only, and a sub-title warns the men folks beforchand: "Don't let her stop you!" Then the title and words of the song are flashed on the screen, and during the repetition of the chorus the picture shows the master of the house washing the dishes while wifey lounges in the parlor with the latest best-seller and a box of bonbons. Where the audience can be induced readily to warble for awhile this number out to be a knockout as entertainment.—E. F. SUPPLE.

"Uncle Bim's Gift"

(Universal—Two Reels)

THIS is an adaptation based on the well-known "Gumps" newspaper cartoons with Joe Murphy and Fay Tincher in the featured roles. The most notable feature of the subject is the striking resemblance to the original cartoon characters, Andy Gump and Min, that Murphy and Miss Tincher attain with the assistance of clever make-up. The comedy is for the most part of a rather inferior calibre and offers nothing in the way of original gags or action. The story starts off with the arrival of a telegram from Uncle Bim ordering Andy to purchase a house in his name. A crook "sells" Andy a fifty-thousand-dollar residence for five thousand dollars. Andy moves in with his family and is dining Uncle Bim and a party of friends when the real owner arrives and proves to Andy that the sale of the house has been fraudulent and that he has been buncoed out of his five thousand dollars. Andy pretends he has committed suicide, but promptly comes to life on hearing Uncle Bim declare to his grieving friends that he would share his fortune with his departed nephew if he were only alive again. The subject closes with the announcement of the police that the crook has been arrested and the five thousand dollars recovered.—E. F. SUPPLE.

"Take the Air"

(Pathe—One Reel)

PAUL PARROTT is featured in this picture and plays the role of a bricklayer at work on a skyscraper. The narrow ledges of the rising skeleton-like framework of iron and the great swinging girders high above the strcets are utilized to mix comedy with thrill, and both the humorous and suspense elements are handled effectively. There is no real story embodied, the action consisting entirely of a series of mishaps and near-mishaps to the various workers on the structure. One of the comedy situations shows Parrott and a fellow-workman engaged in a card game, seated on boxes resting on the girders. Each time Parrott rises to argue some point in the game the girder on which he has been seated swings out into space and returns to its positon just in time to prevent his falling below. The reel closes with a brick-throwing contest between the bricklayers and the iron-workers, which precipitated some decidedly amusing results. A good action comedy reel of the slapstick order.—E. F. SUPPLE.

"His New Papa"

(Educational—One Reel)

HERE is a one-reel situation comedy with a generous measure of laughs embodied in its footage. Cliff Bowes and Virginia Vance are featured as bridegroom and bride. Cliff's rival decides to make it a double wedding and marries Virginia's widowed mother just to be near Virginia. After the wedding, however, mama turns out to be a veritable Mrs. Simon Legree, and both male parties to the nuptial contracts are put promptly to work setting the house in order for the grand wedding festivities. The rivalry between Cliff and his father-in-law is great, but ma's ambition to keep both of them at work is even greater. The resultant situations are decidedly laughable. At the outset, Cliff and Virginia have incurred the enmity of the law by accidentally breaking a window with a horseshoe. The reel closes with the seizure of the bride and groom by the police in the midst of the festivities. A sequence early in

"His School Daze"

(Universal—One Reel)

BERT ROACH is featured in this subject, and in the brief space of one reel rapidly passes from the role of mouse-trap salesman to that of deputy sheriff, and thence to the part of a country school teacher. The principal merit of the picture is its action, which takes Roach through a series of uninterrupted and diversified incidents. As a mouse-trap salesman he incurs the wrath of a housewife by allowing mice to run all over the house while demonstrating the efficiency of his traps. In evading the woman's husband he lands into the midst of a posse just about to pursue some bandits, and is made a deputy sheriff on the spot. He catches up with the bandits, but when they promptly shoot his clothes off he lics in wait behind a bush for the new teacher to pass by. When the pedagogue makes his appearance Bert attacks him and deprives him of his clothes. The children later identify Bert as their new teacher and drag him into the classroom. This reel ought to be good for some laughs.—E. F. SUPPLE.

PRINTS THAT LAST

THE condition of a print after it has been projected reflects the care with which it has been made in the laboratory. Photographic excellence, while the first essential, is not the only thing to look for in first class prints. Distributors and exhibitors have a right to expect durability as well. A poor print of a good picture does no one any good.

STANDARD PRINTS are not only better photographically. They stand up under hard usage. The scientific process by which they are made and the care taken in every phase of their creation give them longer life. Some of the industry's leading producers realize this and their work goes through STANDARD FILM LABORATORIES from camera to screen. They have found distributors and exhibitors better satisfied with STANDARD PRINTS.

Zane Grey says:

"To the Last Man" is the first picture made from any of my books that I have had any part in supervising. Regardless of what has been printed, this is absolutely true.

I made suggestions to Lucien Hubbard, production editor, and worked over the scenario with him and the director, Victor Fleming. I personally took both to the wilds of the Tonto Basin, Arizona, and showed them the settings of my story and what I wanted used as locations. Finally I had personal talks with Richard Dix and Lois Wilson, the featured players, and the rest of the cast.

"To the Last Man" is the best Western picture I ever saw. It has no fakes. It is full of sincere emotion. It has truthful and beautiful locations, real story interest, a sustained and growing suspense ending in a magnificent climax.

Many times the pictures motion picture people call "knockouts" are accidents. "To the Last Man" certainly was not an accident. It encourages me to do all in my power to help Jesse L. Lasky in future productions from my stories for Paramount.

EDWARD HORTON, ERNEST TORRENCE, LOIS WILSON, FRITZI RIDGEWAY, CHARLES OGLE AND LOUISE DRESSER

"The Covered Wagon," "Hollywood," and now "Ruggles of Red Gap"—three rousing box-office hits! And all distinguished for their wholesome, hilarious comedy.

You've got to hand it to James Cruze as a comedy-drama director. He's without a doubt the kingpin of them all. If there ever was the slightest question about that, "Ruggles" settles it once and for all. See this picture at your exchange and know!

A JAMES CRUZE PRODUCTION

From the novel and play by Harry Leon Wilson

PARAMOUNT doesn't believe it's enough just to rent pictures to exhibitors. The "follow through" in the picture business is just as important as it is in golf. Paramount "follows through" each picture with the best and most complete line of advertising aids offered anywhere.

For instance, on "Ruggles of Red Gap" every Paramount exchange has in stock for you not only newspaper ads of all styles and sizes, paper from one—to twenty-four sheets, press books, and star cuts but also special advertising in the shape of novelty heralds and a de luxe eight-page rotogravure section.

The ad above is the four-column newspaper ad from the "Ruggles" press sheet.

Foremost among motion picture booking agencies, The Stanley Co., is never concerned over WHERE its screen product will come from. But it does concern itself over the entertaining qualities of that product—a commodity with which it must serve its patrons.

Warner Pictures have made their mark as PHOTOPLAYS OF QUALITY. From carefully chosen story material, by nationally known authors, ably directed, faultlessly acted and lavishly staged, the Warner EIGHTEEN is the most sought-for product on the market today.

To the 6,000 Exhibitors Who Will Show "Mothers-In-Law"

THESE are the days when you are able to buy a lot of good pictures.

But one thing still is difficult to get—

A good picture carrying with it a big exploitation idea that can be put over easily and inexpensively.

There are several pictures on the market as good as "Mothers-In-Law". There aren't many better ones.

But there isn't one in existence that has as great exploitation possibilities!

I don't believe in wild boasting about productions. I seldom use superlatives. But I'm using them now and I'm telling you the absolute truth when I say,

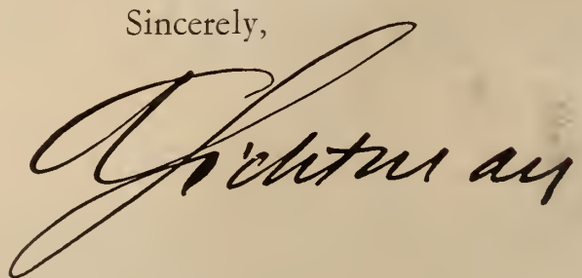
"Mothers-In-Law" is the Greatest Exploitation Picture of the Year!

It has the endorsement of Mrs. Lemira A Goodhue, President Coolidge's mother-in-law. Mrs. Goodhue has announced that she is in favor of a National Mothers-In-Law Day.

The Mothers-In-Law Day Association, with Mrs. Clara A. Griswold, of Boston, as President, is solidly back of this Preferred Picture and is agitating throughout the country for a National Mothers-In-Law Day.

The mother-in-law has become a national topic. The New York newspapers are giving an enormous amount of space to the mother-in-law in news and feature stories, letters to the editor and in editorials.

The wire services and national feature and photograph services are carrying the news throughout the country.

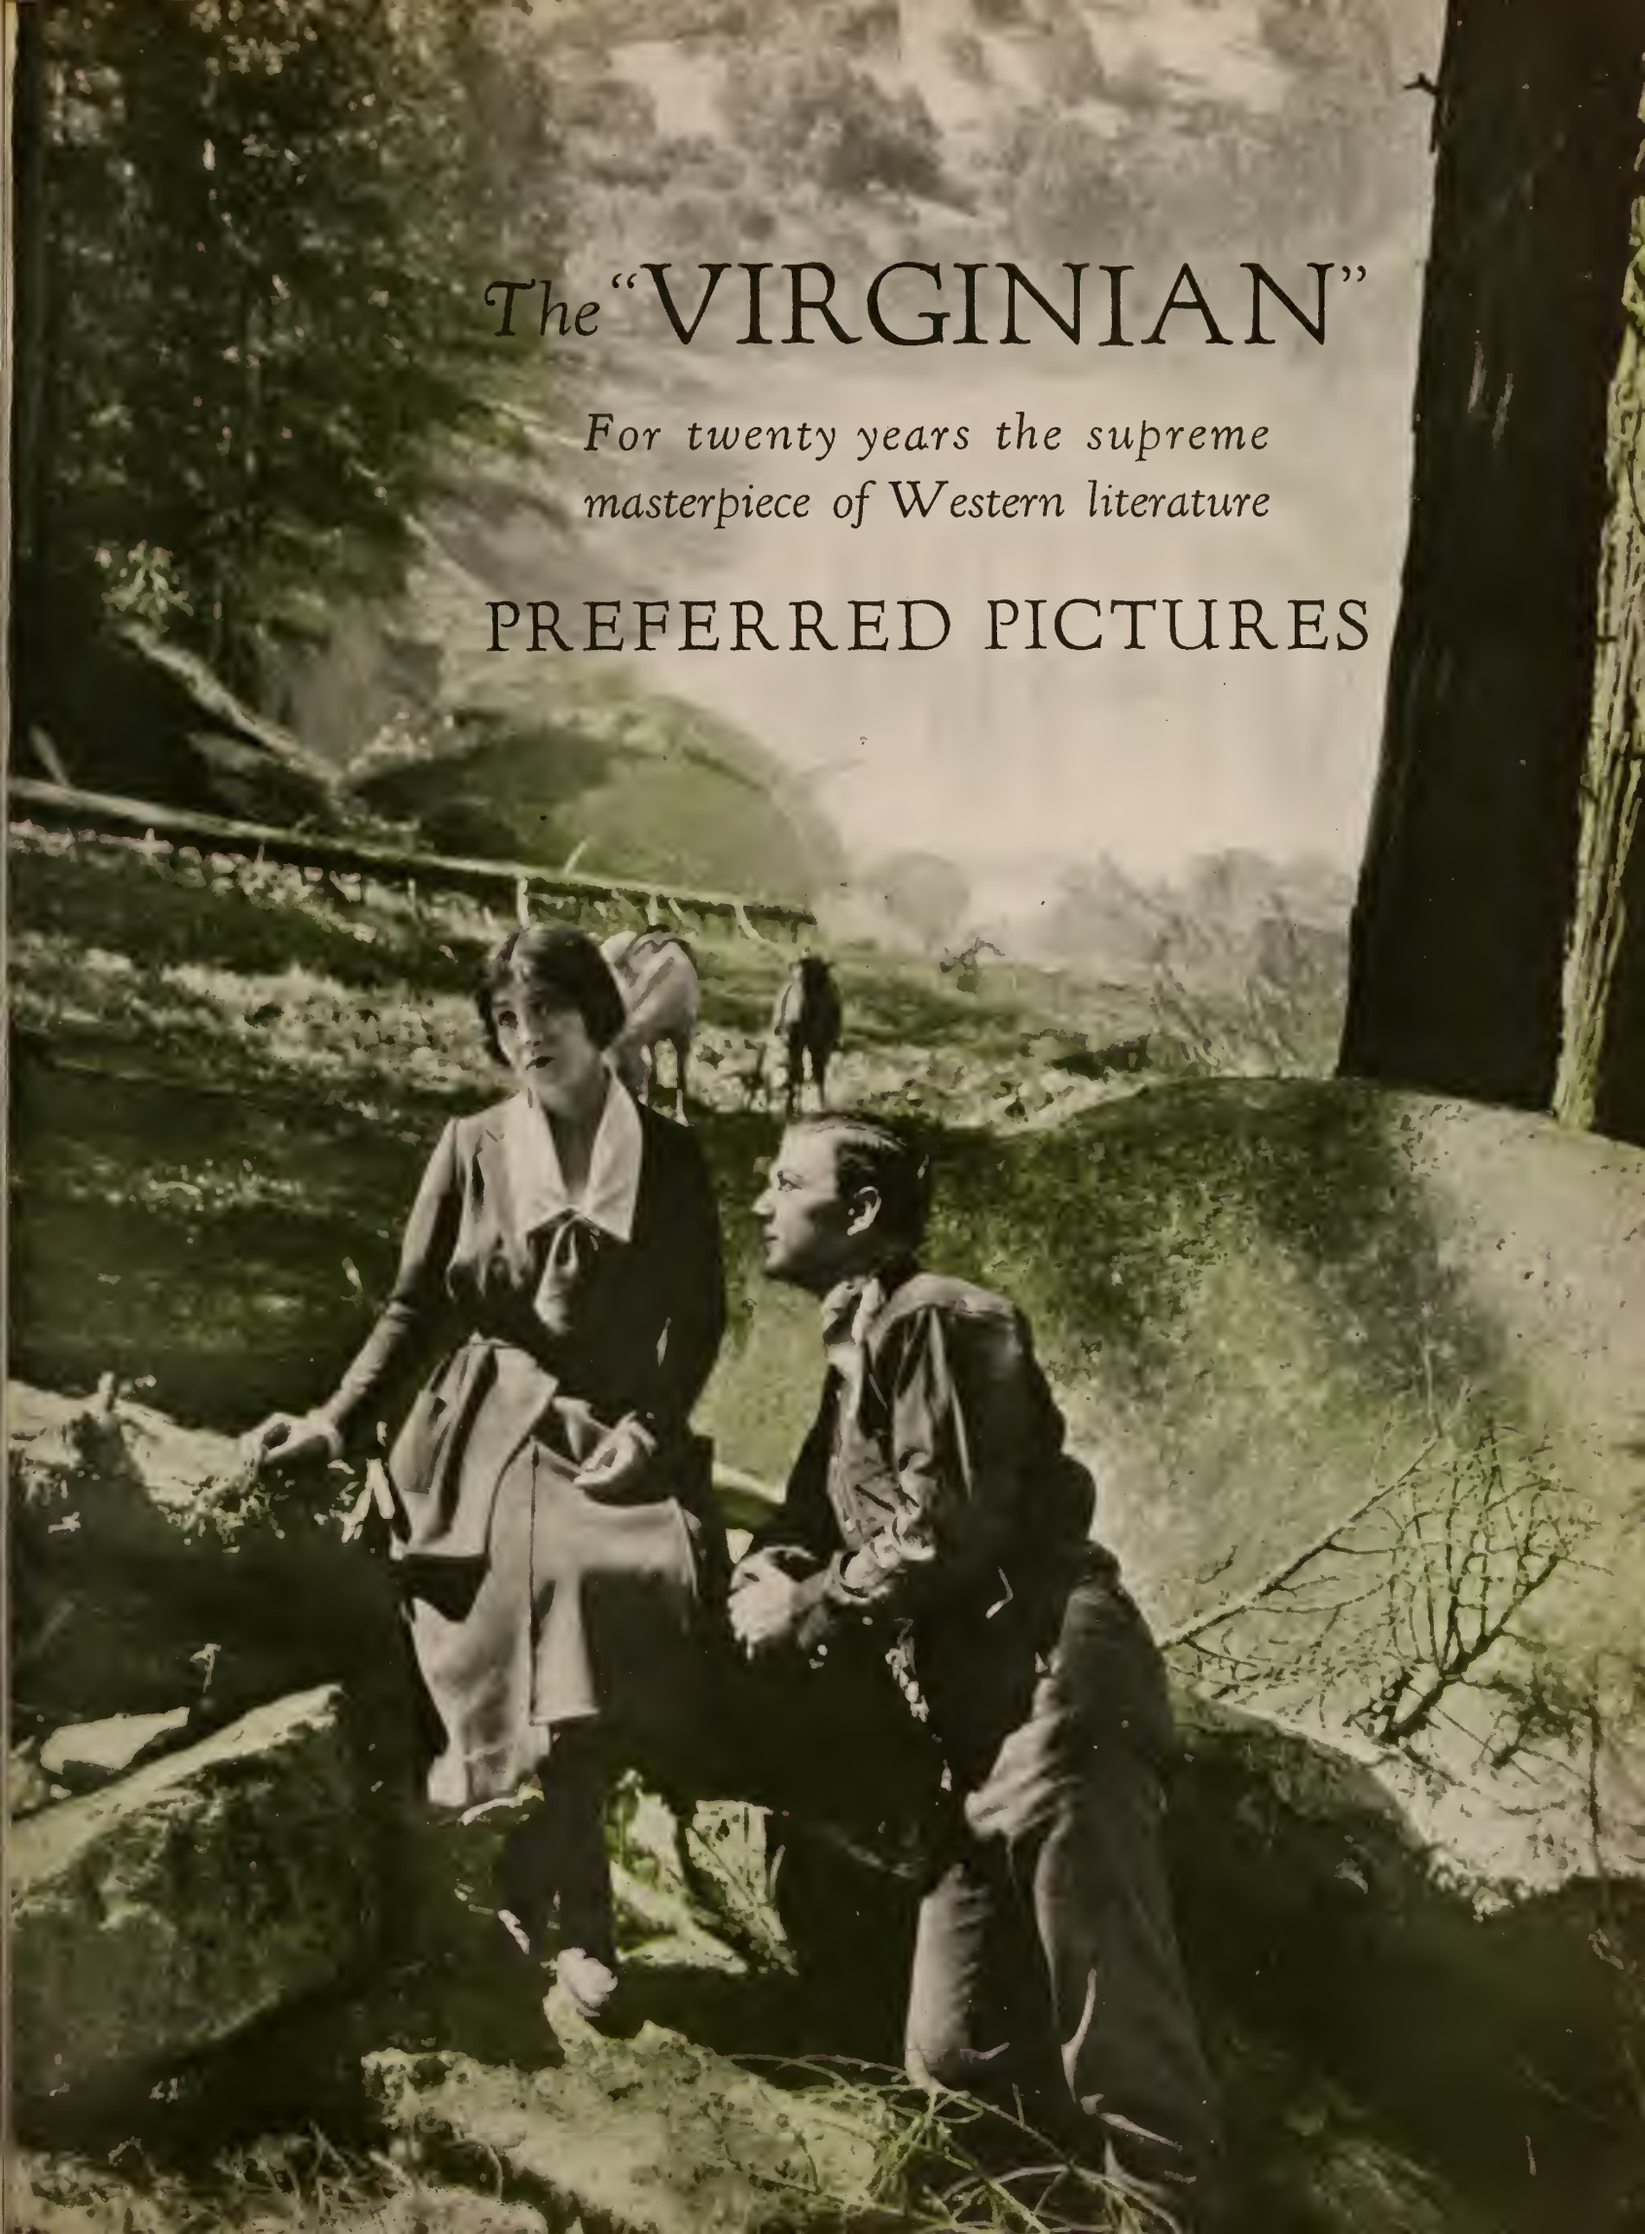


It's publicity made to order, for the theatre that books "Mothers-In-Law", for it is easy to have a Mothers-In-Law Day when the picture comes to town.

Tie up with the idea as B S. Moss did for the Cameo Theatre showing in New York City. The tremendous publicity assures him a long and prosperous run for "Mothers-In-Law".

You want pictures that can be exploited?

Here's the best of them all.



Sincerely,

Three to Come

There will be three big Mae Murray attractions this season, The French Doll by A. E. Thomas, Fashion Row by Sada Cowan and Howard Higgins, and Mlle. Midnight by Edmund Goulding.

All three stories were written especially for Mae Murray. They will be typical Murray pictures, full of color and charm with action that moves at a rapid pace.

Happiness in Every Box Office!

WHEN you see your patrons' faces radiate with joy over a picture, over the theatre that plays it, as the crowds grow greater every night, that's what makes the box office happy. And that's just what will happen when you play this delicious comedy-drama—a tale of strange and thrilling adventure in the picturesque Indian camps and the Western wilds—the romance of a white girl, brought up as an Indian maid, who flees her tepee, ropes, ties and kidnaps her mate, a young millionaire, who falls in love with his captor.

EVERYBODY'S doing it! The Big Showmen who know a Big picture when they see one are all playing it. A picture that is sweet music to the Box Office!

Why, at the Riviera and the Tivoli theatres in Chicago last week they didn't have room to jam them in. And they are two of the biggest theatres in the country. Throngs crowded the sidewalks for blocks.

For the first time in their histories these theatres gave morning shows to take care of the crowds.

"The Bad Man"

In his first picture for First National, Edwin Carewe gave the exhibitors of the country a production that was outstanding, not only from an artistic and entertainment standpoint, but from the box office angle. He repeated this fine quality of production in his second picture, demonstrating his unquestionable genius as a director, the pictures proving by actual returns two of the best box office attractions of the year.

Now he has outdone himself, for "The Bad Man" is his biggest yet. Make no mistake about it. This is one of the biggest Box Office pictures of all time.

The Greater Movie

The greater movie is with us at last.

A cohort of "big" pictures have marched upon New York and taken Broadway by storm. More are to follow.

Broadway legitimate houses are at a premium. The New York newspaper critics are almost emotional in their praise. The stage business is wondering just what is going to happen to its Fall season. It is a fact that "The Covered Wagon," "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," "Rosita," "The Green Goddess," "If Winter Comes," "Little Old New York" and "The White Sister" will call forth the highest grade audiences New York can boast of today, the kind of people the stage itself does not reach right along.

It is all very fine.

For almost ten years this publication has been calling for, and prophesying, the individual picture, the picture individually made and individually handled.

That kind of picture has appeared from time to time right along; we don't for a moment, discount the successes of the past. Some may never be parallelled.

But the point is this: not only is the individual picture here, but the era of making the individual picture has at last arrived. Formerly, it was a matter of better vision and inspiration here and there with a few. Today the industry itself is gearing itself, through a new production and distribution policy, to the point where the individual picture is an assurance rather than a hope. A new era has set in.

This is great progress. Practical progress, as well as artistic progress.

For the greater movie means greater movie audiences. We have more than enough seats but not filled seats. Five or six millions a day are not enough for our 14,000 theatres; and while the admission price is a factor so, too, is the attraction. Every exhibitor knows the stimulating effect on attendance of the occasional outstanding picture.

But as we write—and while the critics' praises sound and the billboards flash and the electric signs dazzle and the larger newspaper advertisements impress—we are thinking of the eighty percenter.

The ten thousand and more theatres in the four thousand communities of this country! Then there's the fifty thousand population town.

What are they thinking of the New York onslaught? What does the new picture era mean to them?

In short: when will they get these pictures? And how? On flat rentals or percentage? What kind of prints will they receive? And last but not least what advertising will they employ to get the greater movie audiences?

It is one thing to make greater movies.

It is another—to handle them.

Let's not lose our heads. One of Wallace Reid's pictures booked 8922 theatres.

Tom Mix is called "the life-saver" by thousands of exhibitors.

Hoot Gibson is preferred to the greatest present male star in many and many a picture house.

And at a little gathering in New York last week of hard boiled picture men, the question was propounded: if you could have any one of the line-up of big pictures now playing in the metropolis which would you rather have?

And most of them selected "Why Worry?" Harold Lloyd's picture at the Strand.

A GREAT ARRAY

A Review of Big Pictures

P. T. BARNUM once said "there is nothing new under the sun." The eminent showman uttered this philosophic slant upon life in a day when the wheels of progress were figuratively standing still. The expression may be employed today as it concerns the conventions of dress and deportment. It may still be employed as it relates to plot formulas and patterns. But P. T. Barnum lived in an age when the motion picture camera and its offspring, the photoplay, were unheard of—when celluloid drama was as far off in the imagination as the flying machine. Such a dogmatic expression as the above quotation may apply to the inevitable cycle of the manners of men—of their creations, be they created for commerce or amusement. Plays come and go; pictures come and go and nothing new is exposed beyond an attempt to improve upon ancient and accepted ideas.

Precedent Established

WE look about us, however, and we find a precedent established, the like of which may never be repeated. And what is this precedent? Simply the astonishing growth of the Greater Motion Picture as established upon Broadway—exemplified in an array of super-features which have ushered in the new season. We look about us and marvel that the screen could accomplish so much in the short span of its existence. Ten years ago—five, three—even a year ago, such an array of pictures would have been deemed impossible of presentation. Yet here they are bidding for our acceptance; and we of the screen, by the screen and for the screen have our moment of exultation—that this infant of the art has emerged from its swaddling clothes and cries out for expression. We look about us and up and down Broadway in legitimate theatres and elsewhere are housed nine attractions widely exploited for their merits—widely advertised as the best the silent drama has to offer—and being accepted as exceptional achievements. It is as if each company had vied with one another to produce the ultimate in screen production. There has been a prodigality of effort expended to achieve the seeming impossible. The sum total of this effort may be reckoned in the millions, and the results speak for themselves.

We Have With Us

WE look about us and playing in legitimate theatres at top theatrical prices are United Artists' superb canvas, "Rosita," with Mary Pickford as its star; "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," Universal's masterpiece; "If Winter Comes," which Fox produced from A. S. M. Hutchinson's enormously popular novel of the same name; "The Green Goddess," which stands as Distinctive's contribution to the higher art of the silversheet—with George Arliss as its ambassador; "The White Sister," Inspiration's throbbing canvas of romance and passion, with Lillian Gish in the title rôle; "The Silent Command," Fox's dramatic glorification of the American Navy. "The Covered Wagon," Paramount's brilliant canvas recording a nation in the making during the cry of "Westward Ho!" in '48, continues at the Criterion—a symbol picture production at its best—and still playing to capacity since its opening on a capricious March night.

The Cosmopolitan theatre, formerly the Park, ushered in its opening with "Little Old New York," a quaint, picturesque, whimsical and charming story of early Gotham, conceived and executed with artistic appreciation. The picture establishes Marion Davies as a broth of a lad who enacts her role so splendidly that it might have been written for her. It marks Cosmopolitan's supreme achievement. It richly deserves the patronage it is receiving from screen lovers, no matter what their station is in life. And to complete the array, Harold Lloyd is holding forth at the Strand with one of the most hilarious comedies ever filmed in "Why Worry." This star, a capacity player in any house, anywhere, is always dependable. One knows that he will deliver with all the ingenuity and originality of which he is capable. This effort of Lloyd's affords the only comedy relief among the nine aside from certain mirthful moments in "Little Old New York" and Mary Pickford's charming caprices in "Rosita," yet during its stay on Broadway it will tax capacity—for that is Lloyd's way. A long succession of better canvases has established him on the heights. He is destined to remain there, for he is a creative artist.

Varied Appeal Here

AND so we have nine distinctive patterns offering the ultimate in screen entertainment. Figures, real and imaginative, ancient edifices, bizarre backgrounds of the Orient, charming English country life, cathedrals and towers, picturesque atmosphere of New York of a bygone century, touches of romantic Spain, resplendent in color and design, ships at sea, nature in eloquent emotion, the desert plains of America with hardy pioneers crossing them with unbending courage, the aborigines of our native land in their vast circle of death—these people, designs and events are collected and transplanted to the screen with authentic coloring and detail. The artisans who fashioned them have worked surely and accurately.

Would you delight in a romance of old Seville? We recommend "Rosita." Would you go bicycling along quaint English highways? Then ride along with Mark Sabre in "If Winter Comes." Would you be enthralled in witnessing Lillian Gish's cloistered existence? Then follow her in "The White Sister." Would you be transplanted to ancient Paris—to its historic cathedral? Permit Lon Chaney to be your guide. Would you care to be involved in a fantastic net of intrigue? George Arliss, than whom there is no abler pantomimist, will make you forget time and environment. Would you live over the days of your forefathers who crossed the great divide and founded an empire in the West? Then trek along with the Liberty boys in "The Covered Wagon." Would you be ferried over to Staten Island by Commodore Vanderbilt or ride with Fulton on his majestic sail up the Hudson in his Clermont? Marion Davies will introduce you to the historic figures in "Little Old New York." Perhaps you would like an adventurous cruise aboard an American warship. We advise you to accompany the courageous "four striper" in "The Silent Command." Would you care to face frenzied revolutionists and enjoy the heartiest laugh of the season? Then by no means miss dashing along with Harold Lloyd in "Why Worry."

Any audience viewing one or all of these features is certain to be royally entertained. The spectator will see production and interpretation at its best. New worlds and old worlds, realties and fancies—all are expressed under one title or another.

Greater Movie Season

IT has been written that the Fall of 1923 ushers in the Greater Movie Season. Certainly it looks like an exceptionally Open Season for Better Pictures. This array on Broadway will be augmented from time to time. A few, doubtless, will be replaced by achievements now in the making. We hear great things of Douglas Fairbanks' newest effort, "The Thief of Bagdad;" DeMille's "The Ten Commandments;" Goldwyn's "Ben Hur" and "In the Palace of the King," and First National's "Potash and Perlmutter," which, according to reports, is one of the best satirical comedies ever made. The list is long. Meanwhile let us be content with the nine which have established such a precedent on Broadway. A few are destined to remain many weeks—even months. Witness the assault on the box-office at the Criterion, which houses "The Covered Wagon." Heretofore the Great White Way of New York has featured no more than or four screen attractions running in legitimate theatres. The nine offer mute testimony in the advancement of the screen. If it continues soaring to the heights what will be the outlook for next season? Will a new precedent be established? Surely there is no dearth of spoken plays. Yet they are held back because the screen magnates, sure of their wares, have stolen a march in ushering in their Greater Movie Season.

Mary Pickford in Spain

LET us see what these pictures have to offer. "Rosita," an adaptation of "Don Cesar de Bazan," thrusts Mary Pickford into a romance of old Seville—which is a marked departure for her. The Mary who was Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm has become a dramatic actress, the transition from shy girlhood to womanhood being accomplished deftly with a surety of touch and poise. Yet so excellently dovetailed are its scenes—so technically perfect its pattern that Mary, gifted actress that she is, never carries the entire burden of the story. It is a compliment to her ability to become a composite part of the dramatic scheme that makes "Rosita" so rich in color and background.

It isn't a one-character tale, as marked "Daddy Long Legs," "Little Lord Fauntleroy" and "Tess of the Storm Country." It is peopled with so many figures and detail that one has time to catch the star in a new light. And she shines radiantly in scenes of exquisite charm, and also in scenes which call for a flash of sophisticated comedy and emotional display. A new Mary—a different Mary, surely.

This "Rosita" is a dashing tale. We are transported to old Seville—to the public square where the little capricious dancer sways the carnival crowds with her banjo and a few songs against her king. She executes a Spanish dance with all the verve of a native senorita. Those who are in the habit of never associating the star with her role, but merely see Mary Pickford in whatever she portrays will have to abandon this fancy. She lives her role.

The picture is executed on a grandiose scale—with something of a "grand opera" flourish about it. It is seasoned with romantic adventure, whimsical humor, a dash of crisp melodrama—all of which elements are deftly balanced by Ernst Lubitsch, the German director. He has demonstrated his skill with breadth of outline before. Always a stickler at detail, he has brought forth the significance of every important character and emphasizes each one's place in the story—never once getting out of sympathy with the author's design. It is intelligent direction of the highest. The scenes are treated in such a manner that they impress with their freshness. Can Lubitsch handle crowds? We must admit that he handles them in a way that eliminates the usual orthodox arrangement. And, best of all, he seemingly understands his players and excites their talents much as a good orchestral conductor excites his musicians to play their instruments as if inspired.. Certainly the star and Holbrook Blinn have understood his demands. The latter makes a highly picturesque monarch—one richly sketched with blunt humor after the manner of Emil Jannings. And the supporting cast is excellent.

ON BROADWAY

——By Laurence Reid

"Rosita" boasts a rather slender plot, but its very slenderness and simplicity give it an appeal which would be lost if it were woven with threads of intricate drama. The settings—both interior and exterior—embellish the picture with most of its charm. They are artistic and colorful.

United Artists have reason to feel immensely proud of this achievement. They gave two openings; the first, a private showing for invited guests at the Ritz-Carlton, was preceded by a dinner, while the second at the Lyric theatre, Labor Day night, found the Pickford devotees—they are legion—and habitual first-nighters and the leaders of the social whirl storming the doors to see the star in what we must catalogue as her masterpiece.

Universal's Masterpiece

VICTOR HUGO'S "Notre Dame de Paris" has been approached by Universal with deep respect and feeling to accomplish something which would leave an imperishable memory. Translated to the screen under its English title "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," it carries on faithfully with the salient episodes of the classic. The streets of Paris of yesteryear, the mediaeval style of architecture in the structures, all of which bring forth an appearance of solidity and massiveness—the famous cathedral a most imposing edifice which causes the spectator to feel as if he had been carried back to another age—these backgrounds give substance to the tale and make it authentic with Hugo and history. To record accurately all the details of the novel would have called for countless reels. It is a compliment to the sponsors that they have selected only those portions which call for moving drama and sharply defined characterization.

So we sit back at attention and follow the relentless tide of misfortunes which accompany Quasimodo, the ape-like bell-ringer of the Notre Dame—a figure acted with a remarkable grasp upon its characterization by Lon Chaney, who had qualified for the role through his impressive studies of lesser unfortunates. He staggers the imagination with the uncanny presentation of the fearsome, crooked creature.

The story laid in the fifteenth century has all the touches of the seamy side of Paris—when the city was at a low tide of depravity. As is characteristic of Hugo's novels, the original tale was sharply punctuated with scenes of ghoulish terror. It would have been frightfully realistic and grewsome had it been adapted faithfully. But the Universal sponsors have allowed a little "sweetness and light" to trickle forth—with the result that its terrifying scenes have been robbed of their bad flavor. And the remarkable part of this transformation is its accuracy of outline. We catch the terror without actually encountering it. It is established by suggestion.

The repugnant bell-ringer is naturally the most interesting figure. He carries gratitude in his warped soul—it is as warped as his body—when he brings Esmeralda to sanctuary from the gibbet.

In all, it is a tale of a girl who befriended Quasimodo when he was arrested for a nocturnal attack, inspired by the wicked brother of the Archdeacon. She is finally arrested herself, accused of having stabbed her beloved Captain Phoebus, but is saved by the hideous hunchback.

The picture, through its massive sets, its picturesque backgrounds and atmosphere and the clever handling of its detail, coupled with capital interpretation by Ernest Torrence as the colorful Clopin, the king of the beggars, Patsy Ruth Miller as Esmeralda and Norman Kerry as Phœbus. The mob scenes are impressive. Surely unforgettable is the dramatic moment when the ragged, half-starved mob emerge from the sewers and hovels at the behest of Clopin and storm the cathedral, which is defended by the deformed bell-ringer.

Chaney's uncanny study and the cathedral set are the outstanding highlights in a picture which is saturated with them. Wallace Worsley has directed in manner which establishes fully all the intrigue, villainy, incident, pathos and dramatic movement of events. It wasn't an easy task, but he has made a living, moving canvas. Edmund T. Lowe's scenario from an adaptation by Perley Poore Sheehan has been constructed so that all of Hugo's salient chapters are thrust in the foreground. The editing by Robert E. Sherwood and Hugo Riesenfeld is most praiseworthy. They have heightened the action and brought forth incident vital to each scene. Thus sharpened it commands undivided attention from the spectator. So Universal has a reason to feel highly elated over its effort. Hugo's classic is always in wide demand by fiction readers. It should command a healthy clientele in its picturization.

Lillian Gish's Triumph

WHEN Inspiration decided to picturize F. Marion Crawford's love tragedy, "The White Sister," they presented Lillian Gish with an opportunity to distinguish herself in a role which was especially ideal for her. Her fragile type of beauty—her angelic expression—her wistful charm and poise—these are virtues which lend themselves readily to the interpretation of the pathetic study of the sad little creature whose love blossomed for a brief time and which, when it was over, inspired her to find consolation in the Church.

Look back on all past efforts; you will not find a more poignant drama of tormented souls than this heart-rending symphony of Crawford's. Inspiration well knew that it had a vital, throbbing document in its hands. But how to make it live—how to bring out its clash of emotions—to emphasize the heart torn asunder, laid bare with its sorrow and anguish? The thing to do was to entrust it to a competent director who understood frailties of human emotion—who understood humanities. So Henry King was selected. And to give it a perfect background, one in harmony with its tender plot and its very human figures, he took his company to Italy, where, against the Bay of Naples with Vesuvius in bold relief and with charming garden spots for further embellishment, the story was recreated for the screen.

And what a poignant story! You instinctively feel the pent-up emotions of the lovers. You are experiencing their tragedy. You extend the greatest pity and sympathy for the frail girl who, figuratively, speaking, carries her cross without complaint. Ostracised, compelled to find love's expression in furtive nooks and corners, she indicates her happiness with life. Then comes tragedy, and she is bowed down with grief. She has promised to wait for him forever. But he was dead. There was the sad account of the ill-fated expedition to Africa. So she will dedicate her remaining years to him by taking the veil, renouncing the world and administering to the stricken.

What an impressive picture King has painted of her marriage to the Church, the wedding finery, the half-choked sob ready to overwhelm her as she recalls the embrace with the flesh and her acceptance of the veil. She will not falter. Yet you will feel like crying out to her (you feel that she might understand) not to make such haste in renouncing the world.

We sit back enthralled over this ceremony. Once over she must lead a cloistered existence. And the cruel march of Fate steals upon her and shocks her by giving back her lover. How Lillian Gish transports one with these tender scenes! The conflict of soul with the flesh—the surging memories of the past at war with the awful realization that she must bow to the inevitable. Her tranquility saves her.

And then King guides us to an ensemble of crashing climaxes—showing the White Sister a victim of intrigue, but saving her lover by promising to wait for him when they have rounded out their earthly sphere. Vesuvius is trembling. The night is strangely oppressive. The little nun's half-sister, who had cast her out, comes pleading for absolution—the victim of an accident. Far up on the slope of the thundering volcano the soldier lover who had returned to find his sweetheart married to the Church, realizes the danger to the countryside. He rides madly to warn them, but perishes in the water of a broken reservoir after saving thousands of his people. They offer blessings to the "unknown" soldier whose identity is established by the good monsignor. Thus the Sister finds consolation that some day she will be reunited to him.

A throbbing, pulsating story, charged with humanities, striking deep at the heart and bringing anguish in its disrupted romance and the terrifying climax. No more tender love story fraught with such clash of emotions has ever been screened. It moves and, moving, holds one in a tight embrace.

Perhaps the long introductory episodes were necessary to build and emphasize the heart touches which formed the second half of the picture. These early scenes established a freshness of outline in atmosphere and background which offered a distinct relief from the usual setting. They gave the picture considerable appeal—to say nothing of tone and quality.

Henry King, always dependable, has cre-

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

AN event of interest to the industry at large is the observance this week of the first anniversary of the Eastman theatre at Rochester, New York, the gift of George Eastman to the University of Rochester and maintained for the promotion of musical interests generally in the city. Perhaps the most magnificent theatre in the country, it is unique among theatres in that it is not an enterprise for private profit, and it has maintained the highest possible musical and artistic standards. A review of the past year in the program states:

"That the aims of the donor have been appreciated is evidenced by the manner in which the public, in steadily growing numbers, has supported the theatre. The stronger this support the greater the return which the theatre will be able to make in the conception and elaborateness of its programs, to the community which it serves.

"The Eastman theatre orchestra during the year has established itself as an integral part of the musical life of the city. It is consistently, and in an increasingly large measure, fulfilling its mission of inculcating a love for and an appreciation of better music.

"Our first year has ended. The record of its achievements will be found elsewhere in this Anniversary Program. We have tried not to wander away after the will-o-the-wisp of visionary but impracticable idealism but to combine a comprehension of public taste with an intelligent adherence to the definite purpose for which the institution was established."

Another item of particular interest elsewhere in this same program is a resume of the box-office results on the pictures played during the year. This reads, in part:

"During the year just ended more than 1,800,000 people attended the motion picture presentations, concerts and grand opera performances at the Eastman theatre.

"Looking backward over the first year it is interesting to study the popular appeal of the various stars and productions presented. The honor of being the greatest drawing card of the year is about evenly divided between Harold Lloyd in 'Safety Last' and Douglas Fairbanks in 'Robin Hood.' While the Lloyd comedy attracted the greatest number of people it enjoyed a run of seven days while 'Robin Hood,' because of the Chaliapin concert during the same week, only had a presentation of six days.

"The next five most popular pictures were 'Penrod' with Wesley Barry; 'Dr. Jack' with Harold Lloyd; 'The Old Homestead,' 'Three Wise Fools' and last week's offering of 'Hollywood.'

"Jackie Coogan has a strong popular appeal, evidenced by the fact that his three pictures, 'Oliver Twist;' 'Circus Days' and 'Daddy' ranked eighth, ninth and tenth in order of drawing power. Thomas Meighan in 'Homeward Bound;' 'The Prisoner of Zenda' which was the opening attraction and George Arliss in 'The Man Who Played God,' ranked next in order.

"An interesting feature revealed through examination of the popularity of the various offerings is that the male stars seem to draw better than the feminine screen luminaries. Norma Talmadge in 'Within the Law' led her sisters of the screen with the Gish sisters in 'Orphans of the Storm' running second."

LENORE ULRIC has returned to New York. Although the filming of "Tiger Rose" has not been completed, the title role was rushed through so that she might return to New York to resume playing "Kiki" on the speaking stage. Upon her departure from the Coast, a farewell reception, so to speak, was tendered Miss Ulric by H. M. Warner, Jack Warner, Director Sidney Franklin, the entire cast of the production and the technical staff. For the last seven weeks Miss Ulric has worked with the "Tiger Rose" company, and during the last two weeks she is said to have remained at the studio up to a late hour every night in order to complete her role in time.

Lenore Ulric declared at the reception given in her honor that she enjoyed her sojourn at the Warner Studios, the picture people, the beauty of the country and climate, and that she hoped to return to the Coast sometime next year to film some of her other stage successes.

AMONG departures for Europe recorded this week was that of E. W. Hammons, president of Educational, who left on a six weeks' trip.

PROTESTING the practice of producers purchasing a "title" of a well known book and play and then having a scenarist evolve an entirely original story around the title, Sada Cowan and Howard Higgin, scenarists, have declared they will never again accept such an assignment. It seems probable other writers will line up with them in their stand, as feeling has run high among many whose brain creations have been wrapped around a title, with the credit for the work going to the person from whose work the title was lifted.

Miss Cowan and Mr. Higgin collaborate on their originals and scripts. Their original "Fashion Row" has recently been placed in production by Mae Murray, and their latest story "Woman's Intuition" was last week purchased by Metro.

"It is unfair," they declare, "to hand a scenarist a book which is not adaptable for screen purchases, and which has been purchased merely for the advertising value of its name or its author's name. The scenario writer must then write an entirely new and original story, fitted for screen purposes. And when the picture comes out, it is the author of the book or play who gets credit for the story really evolved by the scenarist. In future we will not accept such work."

ATTESTING to the energy and progressiveness of W. C. Quimby, Fort Wayne, Ind., exhibitor, word comes this week that this enterprising showman is negotiating for the Palace theatre in that city. The proposed deal would give him 50 per cent. of the stock and a long term lease on the theatre. The deal involves about half a million dollars. Mr. Quimby, who usually hails into New York about twice a year, is fast gaining a reputation as a live showman and this news of his proposed expansion will be welcomed by his friends.

SOME interesting views are set forth by Chaplin in an article in one of the popular family magazines, which will bear quoting:

"The reason why so many people like the news weeklies and educational films better than the feature plays is because they present people who are doing things. I am not interested in the opening of a park by a mayor in some town where I hope never to be, but the whole circumstance carries with it that conviction of life which so many photoplays lack entirely.

"We of the films have not gone ahead as our public has. The public is not tired of old faces. It is tired of the old face in the old material. It would have an even greater apathy for new faces in the old material.

"Most of the people who make pictures, it seems to me, make the mistake of wanting too much plot. The scenario writer and director build and rebuild, criss-cross and dovetail and lay so many pipes in preparation for the plot or a situation that when the time for it arrives there is an anti-climax.

"In my own work I have found that an elaborate plot is not necessary—just a slim structure or a sequence of scenes that will enable me to create a great deal of action and business that will entertain the audience apart from the story that is to be developed. A plot is of no importance to me unless it does suggest these opportunities.

"Many people think that the film comedies are better than the dramas. If they are right it is unquestionably due to the fact that the comedies have paid less attention to plot and trite moralizing than the dramas. The comedy has had more invention and it has had more theatrical business. It has also known from the beginning that speed and quick movement of objects is essential to the motion picture. The film demands speed, not necessarily in the terms of quick movement but in a combination of circumstances, one happening directly after another."

Chaplin is at the top because he knows the secret of real motion picture technique and dynamics.

IN this so-called business, the merit of a story does not depend entirely upon its veracity—and it would be a dull trade if we all stuck to the truth. Once in a while a story comes along that is so good that it doesn't matter whether it is truthful or not. All of which has nothing to do with what follows:

"A cyclone so real that it caused $5,000 worth of damage within the hundred foot circle in which it was manufactured, was what the F.B.O. art director executed for a recent Powers production, 'Born of the Cyclone.'

"The story called for a destructive cyclone—the kind that carried houses away. In an effort to supply what he was asked for, Art Director Heywood lined up a battery of wind machines, and waited for the word to turn them on.

"When the time came, the switch was turned and a loud whirr of motors arose. Papers, dust, sticks and gravel spurted suddenly out from under the racing propellers. But that was not all.

"A garage across the way where studio cars were kept, and part of the huge canyon set, constructed for the picture, were carried away also. Word was immediately given to shut off the current, but before this could be done, the damage had been accomplished.

"The next time the machines were turned on they were started one at a time, so that no more unnecessary expense would be incurred in an already extravagant production."

As we intimated in the beginning, this is a darned good story, even if nobody will believe it, as proved by the fact that we have awarded it this coveted space, and the Asbestos Typewriter Ribbon for the week is duly awarded to Ed Hurley, Demon Publicity Purveyor in Nat Rothstein's department.

Industry Aids Japanese Relief Drive

Fear For Safety of Film Men

THE industry went into action this week to do its part toward alleviating the suffering of the people of Japan.

While it waited hourly for news of a group of American film representatives who, it was feared, had been lost in the earthquake and fire, the picture world responded to a call issued by Will H. Hays to aid the Red Cross drive for relief funds.

On September 4, three days after the catastrophe, Mr. Hays asked the distributor and producer members of the M. P. P. D. A. to issue trailers, embodying President Coolidge's message to the American people. This was done. At the same time, telegrams went from the Hays office to the heads of exhibitor organizations throughout the country, seeking their co-operation in running the trailers in the picture theatres of the nation.

There was a ready response, and messages coming in from over the country indicate that the Coolidge proclamation will be practically universally shown on the screen. Mr. Hays received a telegram from the Japanese Ambassador at Washington, expressing his cordial appreciation of the plan.

News of Film People Awaited

Meanwhile, American distributors with representatives in Japan waited anxiously for news of their fate. Famous Players, Fox, United Artists, and Fox had headquarters in Tokio from which city their Far Eastern business was, in general, conducted.

Prominent in the zone stricken by 'quake and fire were: Tom D. Cochrane and R. E. McIntyre, of Famous Players; Delbert Goodman, of Fox; H. Wayne Pierson and Charles Dreher, of United Artists, and Frank Lappin and J. D. Miller, of Universal.

The home offices of these distributors used every effort by cable and wireless to get in touch with their representatives. There was a long silence, all attempts at communication proving in vain, until the first ray of hope Delbert Goodman, American representative of Fox Film Corporation in the Orient. He was living at the Imperial Hotel, Tokio, and has not been heard from since the 'quake.

A glimpse of the waterfront at Yokohama, totally destroyed in the catastrophe.

came on September 6, when Mr. Pierson, general manager for United Artists in the Far East, sent through a message saying he was safe.

Mr. Pierson, with his wife, was in Tokio when the disaster occurred. He wired that they had "a miraculous escape," and this gave rise to the hope that the other film folk had also escaped with their lives. The Pierson message brought no news, however, of the fate of his associate, Charles Dreher, who, with his mother, was also in the Japanese capital. Eighteen people were employed in the United Artists office. The building was destroyed, as was the Grand Hotel, in which most of the personnel lived.

The Fox representative, Delbert Goodman, arrived in Japan in July and was living in the Imperial Hotel, one of the structures which collapsed in the quake. He was just starting operations toward establishing permanent headquarters for Fox in the Orient and took a big supply of films with him.

Only a week ago Mr. Goodman reported by letter to Sydney Abel, manager of the Fox Foreign Department, that he was meeting with great success and had signed up a large number of contracts with exhibitors in the Island Empire. Mr. Abel exhausted every possible means of communication, but up to a late hour had not received any word from Mr. Goodman. The latter, who was thirty-two years of age and unmarried, lived in Chicago before going to the Orient.

Mrs. Rupert Hughes Safe

Mrs. Rupert Hughes, wife of the well known author and Goldwyn director, cabled relatives in this country that she had a miraculous escape from the Japanese earthquake. She had left Tokio for Shanghai only a day before the disaster on the President Lincoln, which rode out the tidal wave.

Officials of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation anxiously awaited word as to the fate of the company's branch office in Tokio and its two American managers. The company maintained its distributing offices for Paramount films for Japan and Korea in Shiba ward, one of the Tokio sections reported to have been completely demolished. No word has been heard from Tom D. Cochrane, the branch manager, and R. E. McIntyre, assistant manager, both of whom are well known in New York film circles.

It is presumed that the company's office was destroyed, and efforts are being made to learn the fate of the two Americans and their Japanese staff. Both New York men lived at the Imperial Hotel, but hopes are still entertained that the two managed to escape. Up to a late hour no word has been received from the American embassy staff in Tokio as to the fate of the many American business men stationed in the Japanese capital.

At the Universal home office there was also great concern over the safety of Mr. Cochrane, brother of R. H. Cochrane, vice-president of Universal, and of P. D. Cochrane, secretary of Universal. Tom Cochrane formerly was Universal manager in Tokio and now is manager in that country for Famous Players. No word reached his brothers of his condition and great fear was felt.

Universal faces a probable loss in the Japanese holocaust which may run into the hundreds of thousands of dollars. Its main Japanese office, one of the most active and biggest foreign offices of the big film corporations, was in the center of the earthquake and fire zone, and indications point to a complete loss of office, equipment, prints, and probably personnel.

Universal Loss Heavy

Universal's Tokio office is, or was, at No 34-3 Chone Minamidemma-Cho, Kyobashi-Ku. Kyobashi is in the business section of Tokio, near the water-front, and is reported wiped out by fire and quake demolition. Universal has received no word from Frank L. Lappin, its temporary Tokio manager, or his native aide, Arata Tsakado.

The only word received by Universal came in cable to N. L. Manheim, export manager, several days after the quake, from the native manager of the Osaka branch exchange. Although Osaka was in the earthquake zone, it suffered far less than Tokio and Universal loss in the smaller city probably was held to a minimum.

The brief cable from Osaka bears in it intimation of untold misery and hints at brave deeds on the part of the exchange force in their efforts to save what they could of the exchange records and property. Here is the cable:

"Unprecedented earthquakes, flames in Tokio, Yokohama, still growing worse. All communications incapable. Can't get any information from Tokio branch. Four boys and Yoneda rushed to rescue Osaka branch."

Rushing westward across the Pacific Ocean aboard the steamship President Grant is Edward B. Rowe, Universal's Japan manager, and his wife. Behind them lies three months of pleasant vacation in the United States. Before them is chaos and the biggest job ever tackled by a film man—that of reorganizing a business out of ashes—a business that was prospering and which stood second to none in the Island Empire.

Interior of a Japanese Temple at Kyoto, Japan.

Views of Theatre Street in Yokohama, where were located the principal Picture Houses of the city. The banners leaning out across the street were posters advertising current attractions.

It is likely that Rowe will make his headquarters temporarily in the Osaka branch until such time as normal business is resumed in the devastated regions. That may be months and even years. Universal's other Japanese exchanges—Otaru, Hakata and Seoul, Corea—meanwhile will have to function as best they can.

Japan Prospects Were Bright

Rowe, who recently was in New York, told in glowing terms of the bright film prospects in Japan, and how Universal pictures had increased in popularity during the last year, to the extent of increasing business more than fifty per cent. He told of the popularity of Priscilla Dean, Reginald Denny, Herbert Rawlinson, Hoot Gibson, Baby Peggy and other Universal stars with the Japanese picture public—a public made up largely of students and children. He told of the great plans he had for the Fall product and how his return to Japan would herald a new spurt in Universal presentations of big Jewel pictures in such theatres as the Great Imperial theatre, the finest amusement edifice in Japan. Today the Imperial theatre is a smoking ruin.

One cheerful thought comes to Rowe as the President Grant ploughs westward to the land where the Rising Sun has set for a time. Mrs. Rowe is by his side. She almost decided to remain in Tokio when he came eastward several months ago. Had she remained, her life might have been forfeited in the great disaster.

Louis Auerbach of the Export & Import Film Company, Inc., reported that no word had been received from his company's Japanese agents since the earthquake.

Several large film consignments were awaiting final cable instructions for shipment at the time of the catastrophe. All attempts to get into communication with the agents via radio have been unsuccessful.

Inquiry at the office of the Peacock Motion Picture Corporation in New York, a subsidiary of China Industries, Inc., sponsored by a group of American and Chinese financiers, developed the fact that Frank Chamberlain, representative in the Far East, was probably safe. At the home office it was said that he had left Shanghai for Yokohama on August 11, but expected to return from Japan to his headquarters in China within a week.

Paramount rushed to its exchanges a large number of new prints of Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Pictures dealing with Japanese subjects for the use of exhibitors who wish to supplement their regular programs with this timely feature. These subjects include "Modern Aspects of Japan," which gives views of the modern docks, the Grand Hotel and other buildings in Yokohama, and then transports the sightseer to Tokio. Other subjects suited to the present emergency are: "Tokio, the Metropolis," "Around Fujiyama" and "The Hades of Hokkaido."

THE original photographs of Japanese scenes from which the cuts on these pages were made were loaned to Motion Picture News by Edgar Lewis, well known director.

Mr. Lewis during his world tour in 1919 obtained numerous "stills" and much film of the very places that have been destroyed in the recent catastrophe.

Hayakawa as Commissioner

In some quarters in the industry the suggestion was made that Sessue Hayakawa, now in Europe, be appointed a special commissioner to go to Japan and co-operate with the film men in the work of rehabilitation. It was pointed out that Hayakawa and his wife, Tsuru Aoki, both native Japanese, would make a fine committee to handle this work.

George Mooser, former representative for United Artists in Japan, received word that his wife and daughter, who had planned to go to Yokohama from Shanghai, had changed their plans at the last minute and thus escaped the disaster. Mr. Mooser declared he believed few Americans lost their lives. He pointed out that the catastrophe occurred on Saturday, when most of the foreign population was in the habit of leaving for the hills or seashore.

"During the summer," he said, "many families live in the mountain district of Karuizawa, eighty miles northwest of Tokio, and others make their summer homes in the mountain section of Ka Hakone. Neither of these districts was struck by the earthquake. If these resorts were attacked, the residents could escape over the mountains to the seashore."

Mr. Mooser believes it will take twenty years to rebuild Tokio, Yokohama and the other destroyed towns.

645 Japanese Theatres

There were about 645 motion picture theatres in the whole of Japan. Horace T. Clarke, of David P. Howells, Inc., an expert on film conditions in the Far East, gave it as his opinion that most of the theatres in Tokio and Yokohama must have been destroyed. In Tokio, he said, there were about 175 theatres, fifty of which were fairly good. Some of these were of very flimsy construction, while others were first-class. In Yokohama, apparently completely laid waste, he estimated there were thirty to forty picture houses.

American distributors, other than those mentioned above, had no headquarters in Japan, but distributed through native organizations. One film man, commenting on the probable effect of the disaster on the picture business, pointed out that it might prove a boon. "Western methods will no doubt be introduced in the construction of buildings and in other ways," he remarked. "This may mean the Westernizing of Japan to a greater extent than ever before, and if that comes, of course the American motion picture will gain far greater popularity in the Island Empire."

New Company Joins Houses in Schenectady

With a name formed by taking the first two letters in the surnames of the incorporators, the Farash Theatre Company of Schenectady was incorporated during the past week by William M. Shirley, manager of the Strand theatre in Schenectady; William W. Farley, of Albany, receiver for the $500,000 State theatre in Schenectady, and William F. Rafferty, of Syracuse, principal owner of the Strand, also of Schenectady.

It is understood that Mr. Shirley will act as general manager of the company. The incorporation is said to bring about a combination of the three big motion picture theatres of Schenectady, as it is generally understood that the Albany theatre, owned by Paul Alberts, is to be absorbed. There have been rumors for some little time past that such a combination would be effected in Schenectady. The situation there has been a peculiar one. While the Strand has probably made money, there has been a stiff fight with the State and the Albany. The State theatre went into the hands of a receiver some months ago, when Max Spiegel plunged into financial difficulties. It has since been operated by the receivers, represented by Mr. Farley, and with Captain Broome doing the booking for the house. According to all reports, Mr. Shirley will book for all houses and will make his headquarters at the State, Captain Broome being transferred to the Strand.

Labor Troubles Are Being Adjusted

Agitation Subsiding in Many Districts with Concessions Made by Both Sides

LABOR conditions continue to agitate exhibitors, operators and musicians in all sections of the country, though up to the present, strikes have been averted. In fact in many cities the difficulties are subsiding with concessions being made on one side or the other.

From Washington, D. C. comes word that projectionists at the three white vaudeville theatres are reported to be pleased with the 22½ per cent. raise granted by the Vaudeville Managers Association recently.

All matters have been amicably settled between the Atlanta theatres and the local musicians' union and the new scale will go into effect as of September 1. The theatres pay a slight increase in regular salary, but obtain certain concessions with regard to private screenings, which with some of the larger houses meant a considerable extra wage item each week.

A threatened strike of all motion picture theatre musicians in Seattle, Wash., was averted when officials of the musicians' union in that city decided to withdraw their demands for a raise of $10 a week above the present scale for every man employed in a motion picture house orchestra. Following a general meeting of the Union, after a refusal on the part of the theatre owners to grant the raise, an announcement was made to the effect that the request had been withdrawn.

The threatened strike of motion picture operators in Buffalo has been averted through an agreement between the exhibitors and union men wherein an increase of seven and one-half per cent. in wages is granted.

The fall season of the motion picture industry has officially opened in Cleveland with the musicians' wage scale still unsettled. About the middle of August, the musicians presented a new wage scale, demanding an increase of 20 per cent. over the old scale. The Exhibitors rejected this demand, but entered into peaceful negotiations for a satisfactory compromise. At last reports, the Exhibitors offered the musicians a 7½ per cent. increase, which, it is said, was turned down.

Southern New England motion picture interests are closely watching developments at Danbury, Ct., where a controversy is in progress between the musicians' union and management of the city's two film houses, as to how many men should be "in the pit" to constitute an adequate theatre orchestra. The union says the theatres must have at least four men to furnish satisfactory orchestral accompaniment to the various programs. Managers of the two theatres have, thus far refused to abide by this mandate, contending that, while the union is, doubtless, in a position to specify salaries and working hours, the number of musicians deemed necessary to handle the situation is another matter and not for mere musicians to decide, no matter how artistically inclined they may be.

N. Y. State Printers Pass Resolutions Condemning Admission Tax and Censorship Law

THE New York State Allied Printing Trades Council has again come forcibly to the front in aid of measures for which the motion picture industry is striving. In their twenty-seventh annual convention just held resolutions were adopted and support pledged in opposition to admission taxes and the censorship law.

The resolutions follow:

Whereas, there is continued as a relic of our war-time activities, an admission tax to be paid by those patronizing Motion Picture Shows, which is one of the greatest means of education and amusement to the great mass of the working people; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we go on record to demand that Congress at its next session repeal the admission tax on motion picture theatres, and our officers be instructed to cooperate with the theatre owners and other organizations and individuals to eliminate this unwarranted handicap upon the education and pleasure of the people.

Whereas, this, the New York State Allied Printing Trades Council opposed the enactment of the so-called Motion Picture Censorship Law by our State Legislature in 1921, and has in the 1922 and 1923 sessions of the Legislature advocated and vigorously supported a bill to repeal such censorship; and

Whereas, our consistent and sustained opposition to this vicious statute is based on our belief that such state censorship not only was directed against freedom of expression of opinion through the medium of the motion picture film, but that the language of the statute authorizes a direct attack on a free press, by empowering the commissioners or their deputies created by the Act to censor and prohibit the printing and publication of announcements concerning or connected with motion picture plays, even to the extent of articles or advertisements in newspapers, magazines, or other periodical publications; and

Whereas, recent action by the Censorship Commissioners, whose personal opinion is made the standard to judge fit and unfit publication, in prohibiting publication of such printed announcements, fully confirms the basis of our opposition, and justifies the charge that this tyrannous law in its implied prohibitions and actual operation defies and seeks to nullify the constitutional guarantees of freedom of speech and of publication, thus striking at the foundations of our personal and political liberties; therefore, be it

Resolved, that this Twenty-seventh Annual Convention of the Allied Printing Trades Council of the State of New York does hereby reaffirm our opposition to the so-called Motion Picture Censorship Law of 1921 as an attempt to frustrate the guarantees of popular liberty contained in the Bill of Rights sections of both our National and State Constitutions, and hereby instructs the officers of this Council to continue to cooperate with the New York State Federation of Labor, and all other organized groups of our liberty-loving fellow citizens, in a campaign to remove from the statute books of this state the so-called Motion Picture Censorship Law of 1921.

Michigan Exhibitors Plan Busy Convention

THE eight hour day law will not be observed by the Exhibitors of Michigan wno attend the Fourth Annual Convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan when it convenes September 25th and 26th. In fact, the forty-eight hours of time that will elapse during the beginning and ending of this year's convention promise to be so packed full of business and pleasure that only the old alarm clock will do more duty than the Theatre Owners.

Several new ideas will be tried out for the first time this year. Probably the most important will be the appointment of committees two weeks previous of the state meeting by President McLaren, and the calling of these committees into Detroit on September 5th and 6th to thoroughly discuss the particular problems assigned, and be ready to report in detail their findings at the convention before all exhibitors.

It is also the plan of the Michigan Organization to have present at the Convention the Congressmen from Michigan, that they may discuss with them and the two Senators, the admission tax situation from the Theatre Owners' viewpoint, and that the legislators can in that manner be thoroughly conversant with the situation.

Asheville Planning Better Films Committee

Temporary organization of a Better Films Committee for Asheville, North Carolina, has been accomplished and permanent organization will be effected at an early date. Turner Jones, soon to retire as head of the public relations department of Southern Enterprises, went up to Asheville together with other executives of the southeastern regional committee, and at a luncheon at the Grove Park Inn the first steps were taken to give Asheville a strong committee, the meeting having been attended by about twenty people, including representatives of commercial, civic and religious bodies.

Rev. Willis Clark opened the meeting and introduced Mrs. Eugene Reilly, North Carolina state prsident and vice chairman of the newly organized southeastern regional committee, who presided over the discussion. Mr. Jones went into detail to explain the operation of the committees in other cities. He announced that better films conferences are scheduled to be held this fall in Minneapolis, Chicago and Boston.

K. C. Exhibitors' President Demands Support

A. M. Eisner, president of the Kansas City Division of the M. P. T. O. A., has issued a scathing letter to members of the association urging their support of the organization and warning them of the consequences for failure to give their support.

Among other things he points that only complete co-operation can quash the proposed county theatre tax, increased film rentals, mereases in the operators' scale, the admission tax and other abuses.

In part, President Eisner writes: "Petty jealousy is taking money from your pocket each day of the year. Do you think you are bigger or better than the organization to which you belong? Wake up; come out of your trance and lay aside your petty jealousy."

Crandall's Public Service Work

By L. W. Boynton—Article No. 4

THE most important work thus far undertaken by the Public Servi and Educational Department of the Crandall Theatres in Washington, D. C., is Americanization.

The success of the visual instruction classes in the Crandall Theatres led directly to the adoption of the screen as the method of teaching in the District of Columbia Americanization School, conducted by the Board of Education, under the principalship of Miss Maude E. Aiton.

The Americanization schools in Washington have a large enrollment of foreign-born, who are seeking citizenship papers. The same thing is true of many towns and cities in America.

One of the Saturday matinees held under the auspices of the Crandall Public Service Department.

The first step in the work in Washington was the appointment of a teacher to take charge of the institution on behalf of the school authorities and to work in harmony with Mrs. Locher, of the Crandall Public Service Department. Mrs. Helen C. Kiernan was assigned to the work. She conducts classes in the private projection-room of the Crandall Metropolitan Theatre every Tuesday. On the same day Americanization classes, in charge of Miss Mabel L. Benson, hold their session.

Americanization Classes

The first film used for instruction in American customs and ideals was "The Life of Lincoln," distributed by the Lincoln Memorial University of Harrowgate, Tenn.

Crandall's Metropolitan theatre is next door to the old Ford theatre, in which Lincoln was shot. It is directly across the street from the house in which Lincoln died and which now houses the famous Oldroyd collection of Lincoln relics. Mr. Oldroyd has voluntarily thrown open the collection to the Crandall Americanization classes for study. After the Lincoln film was screened the classes were taken over to the house in which Lincoln died and there viewed the mementoes of his life and work.

Scarcely a town in the country but has its traditions of real Americans and the historical associations that cling about them. Of these, the exhibitor who has the vision to undertake Americanization work can avail himself.

Here's the way Americanization is taught in the Crandall classes: The film to be studied is run at normal speed, and Mrs. Kiernan reads the subtitles for those who cannot decipher them readily. Then the picture is discussed and the students are called upon to conduct a real forum. Many have responded with thoughtful and interesting comments. Then the film is run a second time and the pupils are called upon to read the titles as a form of class recitation. In this way they are taught English. Much more rapid progress has been made than would be possible through the mere reading of books.

Government Films Shown

Following the Lincoln film, there were shown three of the Department of Agriculture pictures, all two-reelers—"Uncle Sam, World's Champion Farmer"; "Sugar Cane and Cane Sugar," and "Keeping Out Bad Foods." Thus were taught three important phases of American life.

When the study session was over the pupils staged a brief program of their own—vocal and instrumental solos, group singing, recitations, and the like, the conclusion always being the singing of American patriotic songs.

The foreigners in the capital are deeply interested in and greatly benefited by these Americanization classes. But there is another far-reaching effect—Govenment officials who are most intimately concerned with combatting Bolshevism welcome the Crandall activity as a powerful instrument for keeping America American.

A recent session of the Crandall Americanization classes was attended by Raymond F. Crist, U. S. Commissioner of Naturalization; Robert S. Coleman, of St. Paul, and Fred J. Schlotfeldt, of Chicago, both associated with the Naturalization Bureau. All three made addresses of encouragement to the large classes present.

Exhibitors at a distance from Washington should not get the idea that Mr. Crandall is the sole beneficiary of the right to enlist governmental agencies in public service work. The same co-operation, the same films, the same material aid are available to him, if he cared enough about rendering a real national service to find out.

The film divisions of the Government departments are not only wiling to supply their films to any exhibitor of good standing, but they have declared their readiness to produce new pictures to serve any valuable need in promoting good citizenship.

The exhibitor cannot ask for aid more powerful than the full co-operation of the United States Government or a more valuable asset than the friendship of these authorities at Washington.

Here is the beginning of a movement whose ultimate possibilities can only be guessed. Surely it is up to the exhibitors of the country to follow in the footsteps of Harry M. Crandall in this great work or muff one of the most valuable opportunities for service and profit that has ever presented itself to the industry of moion pictures.

Tax Admissions Decrease During Year

A DECREASE of $3,236,475 is reported by the Treasury Department in Washington in the amount collected from admission to theatres, concerts, cabarets, etc., during the fiscal year 1923. The total collected from admissions was $70,148,480, as compared to $73,384,955 during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922.

Collections from the seating tax on theatres and other places of amusement during the fiscal year 1923 totaled $1,864,241, as against $1,863,252 in 1922, an increase of $988.

Litigation on "Mother Eternal" Settled

Graphic Film Corp., through Ivan Abramson, its president, announces this week that litigation pending on "Mother Eternal" has been definitely settled between Mr. Spitz and the Graphic Film Corp.

The long standing dispute existing between the two parties is now a thing of the past and will give Mr. Abramson an opportunity to devote his time and efforts exclusively to further production of his 1924 features.

Golf Tourney Entries Are Wanted at Once

IT is urgently requested that all players and others who anticipate attending the forthcoming Film Golf Tournament to be held at The Belleclaire Golf Club, Bayside, L. I., on Tuesday, Sept. 18, immediately forward their entries.

For a Sound State Rights Market

An Analysis By Jesse J. Goldburg

TO PUT the state rights market on a sound basis, I believe the following things are necessary:

I. The elimination of the headlong practice of over-exploitation; that is, advertising that looks big but is wholly unpractical in its results; the establishment of a credit bureau; co-operation among state right distributors so as to eliminate the extension of credit to or even the doing of business with exchanges careless of their obligations; the reduction of salaries from the chief executive to the office boy to the point of national distributing organizations handling any other product.

II. Encouragement to the very last degree of those state rights exchanges who are honest in their dealings, honest in their intentions, and operating, too, upon a strict commercial basis; extending to them every assistance and consideration compatible with good business.

Let me go back to the period when state rights was first inaugurated as a regular method of distribution of independently produced motion pictures. This takes us back to the time before Adolph Zukor started in business and when the Box Office Attractions Company was the only activity of William Fox in addition to that of the few theatres he then owned.

We knew little or nothing of the practice of sending salesmen on the road; buying by state right exchanges was done in New York, where all productions were made.

The delivery of promissory notes or trade acceptances or percentage contracts were not even thought of.

Advertising in other than strictly motion picture trade publications was unknown and undreamed of.

C. O. D. shipments were a rarity because payment was usually made in advance.

False First Runs

Exorbitant salaries to exploitation specialists (?), advertising managers and false first runs—by that I mean a first run which a national distributor pays for—were not resorted to in an attempt to bolster up the sales value of the production. There was more system in advertising and a greater exertion to conserve money than now.

Proceeding from the point of the ready acceptance by theatre owners of product made by independent producers and distributed through the channel commonly designated "state rights," the independent producer and national state right distributors must, of necessity, so regulate the cost of sales and national distribution as to reduce the royalty to be paid by the state right exchange, so that they (exchanges) may in turn be in a position to meet every form of competition in connection with the prices to be paid by the theatres, and to encourage the liberal use by theatre owners of advertising matter so that the greatest amount of publicity and advertising may attach itself to every production played out of a state right exchange.

The sometimes terrific or exorbitant sales value placed upon an independent production is named by no means solely because of the theatrical or true worth of a production itself; but such price is augmented by numerous contingencies and the extravagance, that in some instances connects itself with the national state right distributing organization, plus the losses that such national distributor must face in connection with, first, unsold territory, and, second, the many breaches of contract that

To suggest a method of stabilization of national state right distribution and to point out a few of the many channels through which money is dissipated, necessitating the covering up of such losses by making "the other fellow" pay more than he would be otherwise justified in paying, is the province of this article.

There is no necessity for the expenditure of moneys in sending salesmen to the various exchange centers. This involves a terrific expense, which, of necessity, must be added to the sales price of the picture, and if eliminated would give the exchange the benefit of such saving. There is no reason why a print of the production can not be forwarded to an exchange for screening at their office, where we are reasonably sure that such exchange is a reputable, responsible organization and not likely to take advantage of any such confidences. But the better method ofttimes advocated would be a clearing house or sales center in New York where all independent productions might be cleared or offered for sale to state right buyers. To send salesmen on the road on any particular attraction, making a complete tour of the United states, involves an expense of railroad fare, sustenance and salary of approximately $2,200.

Unbusinesslike Methods

It is true that when one travels to a locality to dispose of a production, not receiving fair treatment from an exchange, a distributor repeats the visit time and again. We recognize, regardless of the merit of our proposition, the fact that we call upon a buyer in his own town places us, incidentally, at a disadvantage—at least a state right exchangeman operates on that theory.

The loss that follows protested notes or acceptances and the time consumed in negotiating payment all adds to the overhead or sales expense and this would be eliminated if there was co-operation among state right producers and distributors to the extent that when an exchange failed to meet its obligation that, much like any other protective organization, the members of such association would refuse to do business with such delinquent exchange. To eliminate this loss would also materially reduce the sales expense.

I am a firm believer in advertising, but I fail to see where the terrific amount of money that is sometimes spent in advertising in national magazines, other than trade publications, serves any purpose that would lead direct to the box office. I am convinced that moving picture patrons are impressed only by billboard advertising and local newspaper publicity and advertising, and possibly by "fan" magazine advertising, but not by advertising in publications whose rate per page runs into the thousands of dollars. The state right distributor who expends money in that direction, to my mind, is adding to the cost of the production that unjustly shifts the burden upon the local distributor. Such advertising reads well and looks well to the eye of the producer and national distributor, but its returns in dollars and cents to me is speculative.

Where a producer incurs the obligation of having prints made and advertising matter manufactured and it is ordered specifically by an exchange, there is no reason why the national distributor should be compelled to meet refusals of exchanges to lift such shipments. The annual return charges and the loss occasioned by such refusals amounts to a substantial sum of money which the state right national distributor must reckon with in regulating the sales value of his production. If payment is made at the time of the placing of the order, the exchange would receive the benefit of a slight reduction in cost, to say nothing of the saving of the charge made for C. O. D. payments.

Office Overhead

But avoiding generalities and getting down to concrete individual instances of the insidious practices that have crept into the present method of state right sales and distribution, from which the state right exchangeman benefits, let me say that the matter of office overhead is of primary concern. We find with several national state right distributors the practice of employing a staff of high-salaried employes as advertising and publicity managers and various other so-called executives, including even the heads of the organizations themselves, who devote about one-fourth of their time toward the business in hand, which increases fourfold the sales expense.

In the getting up of the various forms of advertising matter there is little or no attempt to utilize the things manufactured for any more than one purpose. By this I mean that there are so many individual items that could be utilized in the manufacture of various forms of advertising matter. The inability of state right distributors to finance the manufacture of advertising matter and the securing of tremendous terms of credit, of necessity, compels the manufacture of advertising matter to add to the cost, which, in turn, requires the exchange to pay more for such advertising matter than he would be otherwise required to pay if the national state right distributor was so financed as to be able to pay for what it has made up. If the state right exchange was required to pay cash for lithographs, lobby displays, etc., there is no reason why the national state right distributor should not also pay for such material and secure the reduced price that would in turn permit the state right exchange to pay less for such material.

Reckoning the terrific overhead of state right distributing organization plus the actual sales expense which involves trade paper advertising, traveling, projection, etc., etc., and adding to that the loss entailed through unsold territories, breaches of contract, returned C. O. D.'s and unpaid notes, when notes are accepted, I vouchsafe the opinion that the cost of state righting a production will approximate in a good many instances thirty per cent of the actual receipts. This is a terrific and scandalous charge. If operations were reduced to a systematic and businesslike basis, the entire sales expense should not with every item charged against it, including overhead, advertising and traveling, and a percentage of loss, equal fifteen per cent of the sales value of the production.

The lack of cohesion between state right exchanges and distributors, unsuccessful business organizations, or aggressive or properly financed state right exchanges in a territory, leaves such territory open on a good many worthwhile productions, even though there are theatres sufficient to profitably support state right exchanges in that territory and the percentage that this open sections bears to the entire country, must be borne by those other exchanges with whom we do business. In other words, reckoning the entire United States as a 100 per cent unit, if we are in a position to dispose of only eighty per cent, the remaining twenty per cent must again be apportioned among that eighty per cent by taking on the deficit to their purchase price.

Breaches of contract on the part of some exchanges is a habit. We have not as yet reached that stage where there is a cohesion among state right distributors so as to prevent the unconscionable exchangeman from doing business with independent distributors. By that I mean if an exchange for a reason of its own fails to meet its obligations with a distributor, he knows, nevertheless, that he can still acquire productions and enter into contracts assuming obligations with another exchange, and it is this loss that adds to the sales expense.

I have heard it said by one of the most prosperous state right buyers in the country operating more than one branch office that he buys on promissory notes and if he has the money convenient to meet his obligations when due, he pays them, if not, "why, I let the distributor sweat."

Washington Exhibitors Are Warned on Tax

Motion picture theatre owners and proprietors of the State of Washington and surrounding territory were warned recently by Clay L. Huey, chief deputy collector of internal revenue in Seattle, that the United States Treasury Department has ordered a rounding up of those who have failed to pay federal taxes on tickets of admission to places of public entertainment.

Agents from the Treasury Department in Washington, D. C., are working at the present time in the Washington territory, and are making a careful check of returns from all houses in Seattle and in other cities and towns of the state. Comparatively few delinquencies in returns have been reported in the northwest district, according to Mr. Huey.

Providence Musicians Are Granted Increase

An agreement has been reached with the musicians in the theatres in Providence, R. I., whereby they are granted an increase in pay amounting to $6 a week starting Labor Day. The increase represents a compromisory settlement of the demands, the musicians having asked for a $9 increase.

The theatre men have also received demands for an increase from the motion picture operators, who seek $10 more a week. As a result of increases already made and those now in negotiations there is much talk here that admissions will be advanced, although no definite announcement has as yet been made to this effect.

Relief Likely in Music Tax Problem

Conference of Society and M.P.T.O.A. Expected to Bring Desired Results

AT a recent conference held between the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, represented by E. C. Mills, chairman of its Advisory Committee, and the officers and members of the Board of Directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, during its sessions at Atlantic City, the first negotiations were undertaken in steps that hold promise of relieving this situation of much of the misunderstanding that has heretofore characterized it.

In behalf of the Society, Mr. Mills stated the desire for a mutually agreeable understanding between it and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, it being perfectly apparent to all concerned that in the present situation involving continued litigation there was an entirely useless and wasteful expenditure of time and money by both sides. He made it clear that he did not favor present processes if some more agreeable and better way of handling the matter could be devised.

He insisted, however, that the theatre owners should pay license fees to the Society, if they used the copyrighted music of its members in their theatres, holding that such use of the music was a public performance for profit within the meaning of the Copyright Act, and that it was but just and fair that the theatres should compensate the copyright proprietors for such use of their material.

Mr. Mills stated that he had prepared a schedule to govern the collection of music license fees in which he took into consideration various matters appertaining to Motion Picture Theatres. This, he said, would be submitted to the officers and directors of the National Organization for their consideration before being adopted and promulgated by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

The officers and directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America took issue with him on the point of the justice and equity of license fees being charged for the public performances of music in the motion picture theatres, claiming that the direct benefit to the members of the Society through the playing of their compositions was such as to more than compensate them for the grant of the right to publicly perform the same. In detail this argument covered the points that such playing constituted advertising for the composition of the most valuable sort; that its direct result was to increase the popularity of the music, create a demand for the sheet copies, records and rolls; and it was suggested that instead of the theatres paying the copyright proprietors, the latter should actually pay the former, in consideration of the very valuable service thus rendered.

The suggestion was then made and developed, that possibly a mutually agreeable arrangement might be made whereby the copyright proprietors might be given cooperation by the theatre owners in a systematic, thorough and inclusive "plug" for their compositions, of such tangible value from the exploitation standpoint that they might well afford to relinquish so-called "performing rights," in consideration of the service thus to be rendered.

Finally, an arrangement was made and mutually agreed to, that a committee would be appointed by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, to confer with the Advisory Committee of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, on ways and means of resolving the entire situation in mutual accord and harmony.

It was also agreed by Mr. Mills, in behalf of the Society, that pending the negotiations of the Committees, no suits would actually be filed as against any member-theatre of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America who is not now paying a license fee to the Society, the entire situation remaining in abeyance pending conclusion of the Committees' conferences.

Theatre owners now paying the license fee to the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers will continue under the contract they now have with that organization until such time as other arrangements will be made following the conclusion of the conferences here mentioned.

Contracts now in force and expiring in the meantime are to be renewed in the same manner as would be the case if no negotiations were pending.

In behalf of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, President Sydney S. Cohen appointed Messrs. M. E. Comerford, of Scranton, Pa.; Harry Davis, of Pittsburgh, Pa.; R. F. Woodhull, of Dover, N. J.; Joseph W. Walsh, of Hartford, Conn., and the Advisory Committee of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers consists of Messrs. E. C. Mills, J. C. Rosenthal and Silvio Hein.

Conferences of the Committees are to be shortly undertaken.

Success Marks Launching of "Greater Movies Season" by Minneapolis Houses

THE first week of "Greater Movies Season" ended September 1 in Minneapolis with the idea crowned with success from the standpoints of both the public and the theatres, according to report.

Film enthusiasts saw a series of pictures believed to excel any group of releases presented in the Twin Cities at the same time. Exhibitors saw packed houses and increased popularity for their playhouses.

The "Greater Movies Season" was launched by Finkelstein & Ruben, August 25, with the presentation of such pictures as "Three Wise Fools," "Hollywood" and other big films. Their string of motion picture houses opened the special season with gala programs of music and other attractions.

The event opened with a parade a mile long Saturday noon in which more than 250 decorated automobiles and 1,500 persons in costumes participated. Five bands provided music. Large crowds lined the streets to view the spectacle and to get souvenirs.

Preceding the opening of the season Governor J. A. O. Preus, of Minnesota, issued an official statement in which he expressed strong approval of the "Greater Movies Season" and called upon the people of Minnesota to cooperate with its sponsors in elevating the standard of photoplays.

The Governor's statement was as follows:

"The motion picture is one of the most potent influences on American life. Yet, great as is its power, we have reason to believe that it has still greater possibilities for entertaining and educating the masses, and so riveting the girders of society.

"Realizing the powerful control for good that they have at their command, the producers and exhibitors of motion pictures have used every effort to make the coming season's product stand out above all previous efforts.

"In the endeavor to bring more forcibly to the public mind the progress that they have made, they are launching a campaign to be known as 'Greater Movie Season.' This season starts August 25 and continues until September, 1924.

"Believing that continued healthful development of the motion picture is of vital importance to our community, I hereby respectively invite the attention of the people of Minnesota to the 'Greater Movie Season' and bespeak the cooperation of the public in aiding the exhibitors and producers to fulfill their ideals.

"Signed,

"Governor J. A. O. Preus,

"Statehouse, August 23, 1924."

The State, premier picture house of the city, presented "Three Wise Fools" as its contribution to the special season.

Simultaneously, as eminently fitting for the week, the Garrick presented "Hollywood," affording theatregoers an intimate view of the studio stars.

The Lyric offered "Children of Jazz," and the Strand gave "Salomy Jane" and "Leather Pushers." The smaller theatres also won high praise for their meritorious exhibitions.

Loew-Metro Ball Set for November 1st

Thursday evening, November 1st, has been designated as the date for the Loew-Metro Movie Ball, to be held at the Astor Hotel. Two Paul Whiteman orchestras have been engaged to provide continuous dance music. Present indications point to a gathering of several hundred screen and stage leaders.

The proceeds of the venture, the first attempted by the newly organized club, will be placed in welfare channels for the membership, which includes the staffs of Loew's, Inc., and Metro Pictures Corporation. With the entire membership divided into committees to promote various phases of entertainment, the ball should result in a great success.

ated an undying epic. He must have been inspired, and his inspiration was caught by Miss Gish and her splendid company, many of the players being associated with Italian stage and screen organizations.

So we mark up "The White Sister" as a beautifully tragic love story, conceived and executed in utter simplicity—and charged with poignant charm, exquisite tone and quality. How Lillian Gish must have been transported to enact such a personality as Donna Angela. It is surely her triumph.

Felicitations for Fox

THE enormously popular novel, "If Winter Comes," by A. S. M. Hutchinson, has inspired the Fox forces to abide faithfully by the original. So much were they intent upon being accurate that the company was dispatched to the author's countryside, there to live over the salient chapters of the novel and to humanize the vivid figures. Mark Sabre, the soulful, misunderstood idealist, his unappreciative wife, the humorous servants, High Jinks and Low Jinks, the pompous partner, Fortune, the frail victim of a cruel fate, Effie, whose suicide plunged Sabre into the depths of despair and brought him in sharp contact with the inexorable demands of the law the appreciative Lady Tybar and her phlegmatic husband, the quaint and wistful Young Perch, who was devoted to his mother—and a host of others.

The story interest depends entirely upon these characters and their development. And Hutchinson is not an author who can be easily translated. Be it said for the sponsors, however, that they have caught its sharpest incident without losing contact with the thread of the narrative and the building up of the important characters. Chapters devoted to the servants are glossed over, but incorporating them in their entirety would not have advanced the story interest.

What we all are interested in is the treatment of Mark Sabre, who was followed by complicated twists of fate. And every important incident pertaining to his home life, his office life, his attempts to enlist in the service, his return from the war, his solicitude for little Effie, whom he takes into his home, thus innocently establishing the net of intrigue which eventually brought him up sharp with the long arm of the law, and the moving climax, when Sabre, unable to understand the trend of events, is only able to cry out "Look Here!"—is there. He stands disgraced, but his respect for the memory of the dead Effie inspires him to accept any disaster. All of these vital touches are intact. Even several phrases of the author are embodied in the subtitles, speaking a language which is quaint and charming.

"If Winter Comes" is faithful to the book. Its interiors and exteriors are authentic and rich in detail and color. Such a stamp of sincerity has earned the picture respect from the public. The cast is evenly balanced with Percy Marmont enacting Sabre with a depth of understanding for the psychology of the role. A difficult assignment, but he acquitted himself in a highly creditable manner, humanizing the idealist much as Hutchinson had written him.

Hurrah for Old Glory

A PATRIOTIC fervor sweeps through another Fox contribution, "The Silent Command," which may be called a glorification of the American Navy. Some may call it propaganda, but to us it represents an earnest effort to give this branch of the service its place in the sun. We discover it to be a melodramatic account of what might befall the Navy if a treacherous power saw fit to embarrass the Atlantic fleet while passing through the Panama Canal. This Canal marks the danger zone to American waters, and it serves as a most appropriate background for the telling of an exciting yarn of foreign agents and their dastardly attempt to wreck the fleet and the Canal.

For the purposes of this story, a young naval commander is assigned to the role of the "silent command," through orders from the U. S. Secret Service. He permits himself to be intrigued by a scheming adventuress, a hireling of the spies who anticipate easy work ahead if he is properly victimized. He willingly enters into their project and throws the spectator off the track, eliminating obviousness by doing so, through appearing intoxicated. His "drumming out of the service" for his disgrace, the breaking of his sword and the ripping off of his epaulets (an effective touch) estranges him from his wife and brings dishonor upon him. The spies readily imagine their conquest is made easy. But the young officer saves the day and the fleet and restores his wife's love by indulging in a hand-to-hand conflict with the arch-conspirator aboard a ship.

The storm effects, the plunging of the boat, the shots of the fleet and Canal, the views of Annapolis during graduation festivities—these episodes gives spark and color to the melodrama—a melodrama calculated to bring instant applause for the flag. It is competently staged and acted and is certain to stimulate the pulse and stir the emotions with its red-hot action and patriotic appeal.

Lloyd Score Again

HAROLD LLOYD'S latest comedy, "Why Worry," may not be playing at a legitimate theatre, but, judging from the line of standees in the lobby, foyer and along the street, it carries every right to be housed in one. This comedian, always searching for new ideas, has caught up with his former mirthful efforts which were temporarily relegated to the background while he found expression in the semi-humorous pieces, "Grandma's Boy" and "Dr. Jack."

The new piece is hilariously funny, carrying on at a rapid pace, generating much excitement, color, pep and ginger and original incident which gives the familiar pattern novelty and freshness of treatment.

Playing a hypochondriac, Lloyd journeys down to some South American retreat and gets caught in a red-hot revolution. Thinking that this snappy war is being staged for his benefit, he is not slow in showing his manners. Thus, when a native shot in the stomach doubles over in jack-knife fashion, Harold makes a bow with great ceremony. Such ingenious touches add zest to the comedy and give it an enduring sparkle. The piece is saturated with them. The novelty also enters when a huge giant is employed as the "army." Having worked his way into the Gulliver's confidence through trying to pull his tooth—a comic scene in itself—the giant knocks the enemy "cold" time and again.

But the climax is the high spot and it is uproariously funny. The young patient, his nurse and the giant are out of ammunition, but Lloyd engages the attention of the enemy with a stage property representing the tops of dozens of bayonets. Carrying these around to appear visible to the forces below makes them pause in their assault of the fort. Then the giant blows cigarette smoke through the cannon while Lloyd hurls cocoanuts with deadly accuracy. And the girl? She is pounding a bass drum to give the effect of heavy cannonading. And the enemy beats a hasty retreat.

A comedy with a purpose—to provide hearty laughter. It has admirably succeeded. It may not be a "Grandma's Boy" in story interest, but it furnishes a generous amount of fun. Call it a burlesque upon the equatorial revolution, rich in novelties, incident and high jinks and calculated to lift anyone out of the doldrums.

Three Other Successes

THE three concluding pictures which have come knocking at the Broadway gate and which have conquered us with their artistic backgrounds, their story interest, their skillful interpretations, the color and movement of their episodes have all been eulogized in these pages before. We all know that "The Covered Wagon" is one of the greatest pictures of all time—one standing as a monument to the art of the silent drama, and which is destined to stay at the Criterion by virtue of its gripping qualities. Encomiums have been paid it from every quarter. It has run continuously since a late evening in March and draws its patrons because it features history being re-enacted on the screen. The pulse quickens when we watch the arduous journey of the hardy pioneers to found an empire in the West. We view their progress with admiration for their determined pluck and courage.

It is doubtful if the screen ever furnished a finer individual scene than the fording of the Platte River by the Liberty boys—and the Indian circle of death brings a tense moment of suspense. This picture also carries two of the richest character sketches which ever graced the silver sheet. Watch Ernest Torrence and Tully Marshall as the two scouts and be royally entertained.

The Criterion is adorned by a highly picturesque sign showing a huge covered wagon fording a stream. When lighted it attracts instant attention—a sign arousing curiosity to see the picture aside from the eulogies paid it—and which must have been read by every reader seeking entertainment.

Study in Pantomime

GEORGE ARLISS has demonstrated before that he is in a class by himself in the expression of pantomime—a form of expression which is rapidly becoming a lost art. Follow him in "The Green Goddess" and be engrossed in a peculiarly fascinating study of diabolical cunning. He has lighted the torch which is taking the screen patron to undiscovered lands. No other player is capable of doing this. His perfect shading—his twitch of an eyebrow—these touches are co-gestures, the lifting of a finger or the mere ordinated into an effort to symbolize correct acting. He speaks an eloquent language and though his voice is silenced it is as if we understood his actions by the always effective pantomime which marks his portrayals.

The picture is one of the most artistic achievements now occupying the attention of screen-lovers on the street of colossal candle-power. The polished interpretation of Arliss, whose every expression is a delightful study, coupled with a fascinating story of intrigue, spells success.

Cosmopolitan's Supreme Effort

THE quaintest picture of the nine is "Little Old New York," which transferred to the screen takes on new-found color and appeal. Adapted from the stage success so that all its characters are brought out vividly—with its situations developed to offer the utmost in sentiment and romance—the picture is like a rare tapestry which might be looked over real often to discover its charming design. Stalking across the canvas are historical figures of early Gotham—Astor, Vanderbilt, Brevoort, Delmonico and Fulton and others. We follow their whims and caprices; we sail in Fulton's Clermont—and we pause to peer upon as delightful a romance as ever found its way into celluloid.

The capricious little deceiver—call her a gay masquerader who disguised herself as a boy to win an inheritance—is deftly played by Marion Davies, who gives the personal young figure an ineffable charm. She is Irish to her shoetops here—quick to defend her rights and equally quick to seek forgiveness—a study marked by a true understanding of its demands.

"Little Old New York" is gorgeously mounted—releasing an atmosphere which brings instant response. It sings a romantic song of yesterday when lovers walked in floods of moonlight.

So we pay our eulogies to nine pictures which are attracting attention on Broadway. Records are broken, precedents are established and indications point to a glorious year for the silver sheet. For the present we must take our good fortunes with becoming modesty. We hear ourselves muttering: "Nine big pictures on Broadway!" Six of these are housed in legitimate theatres. The world doesn't stand still. Progress. Progress. Progress.

WE KNOW that these pictures filling the legitimate houses had asupicious openings. The presentation of "Little Old New York" brought forth the social elite and the cosmopolite of Broadway. They came to the theatre and remained to see a most charming picture which was embellished by Victor Herbert and his orchestra. And they showed their appreciation by an emphatic outburst of applause.

It is the same story everywhere. "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" opening at the Astor drew literary personages, artists, society, stage and screen folk—an audience which vented its enthusiasm with deafening applause—an applause that continued until Lon Chaney voiced his thanks. The theatre was appropriately decorated and the picture was given a thematic musical setting. The theatres housing the super-features are placing the patrons in perfect harmony for the showing. They are escorted to their seats by usherettes properly costumed in the period in which the story is laid. And all have excellent musical settings.

"The Hunchback of Notre Dame" opened at the Astor Sunday night. Another precedent is established when two features can open the same night. Which introduces "The Silent Command." At the Central theatre the picture was attended by a large delegation of naval officials, many from Washington. This was the result of the public commendation given the film by Theodore Roosevelt and General Pershing. Among the naval dignitaries were Admiral Plunkett and his staff.

Monday night found Mary Pickford opening the Lyric with "Rosita," while a door or two away on Forty-second street, Fox ushered in another opening with "If Winter Comes.", both pictures playing to capacity and both arousing unstinted applause for their players and highlights.

Wednesday evening marked the opening of "The White Sister," starring Lillian Gish. All the elite of the film world, in addition to members of the social, literary and artistic spheres, attended. And all voiced approval of the picture and the star, who responded by thanking the audience for its appreciation.

It is a red letter day in a banner season to discover such an array of pictures on Broadway. The conquering power of the celluloid drama is slowly but surely manifesting itself. We are now scaling the heights. When we reach them, let us remain there and not climb down. Don't let us become Humpty-Dumpties.

Exchanges of Canada in Amalgamation

Definite details regarding the actual developments with a number of important moving picture exchanges in Canada, about which there have been many rumors during recent weeks, have been divulged. The information released shows that Canadian Educational Films, Canadian Exhibitors Exchange, Limited, Canadian Releasing Corporation, the F. B. O. and the Equity Pictures Corporation are all identified with the movement for the concentration of activities.

Moreover, the statement has been made by Tom Scott of Toronto, who has been actively associated with the Canadian Exhibitors Exchange for years, that the recent developments in Canadian exchange circles have not been inspired or directed in any way by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, rumors to the contrary notwithstanding. Mr. Scott, in an interview, declared that brief negotiations had been carried out by representatives of the M. P. T. O. and the amalgamated exchanges, but no definite understanding or arrangement had been secured. Apart from the slight negotiations, it had been difficult, he said, "to know what the talk was all about."

Announcement has been made that the arrangement between the Canadian Exhibitors Exchange, Limited, and the Canadian Educational Films is a working agreement whereby the two forces will operate from the same offices at Toronto and other cities. The various other exchanges, F. B. O., Canadian Releasing Corporation and Equity, have been amalgamated with Canadian Exhibitors Exchange, it is stated.

Anderson to Distribute for T.O.D.C.

Exhibitors Complete Arrangement for Active Operation of Their Organization

FOLLOWING a statement of last week that the Theatre Owners Distributing Corporation will begin active operation in October, W. A. True, president of the exhibitors' organization, announces the completion of arrangements whereby the Anderson Pictures Corporation will handle the distribution of his company's product.

He said:

"In looking over the field, we were particularly impressed with the policies and expressed principles of the Anderson Pictures Corporation, Carl Anderson, president.

"Mr. Anderson's integrity and record, coupled with his many years' experience in organization and distribution work, together with his announced plan of centralized distribution and his working arrangement with the Film Booking Offices of America, has inspired our fullest confidence in his organization and reflects to the letter the ideals of our own movement. The exhibitor is the key to the distribution problem. Give the exhibitor what his public wants at an equitable price, commensurate with the picture's actual worth, and the distribution problem is reduced to a healthy economic arrangement which allows a fair profit to the producer and exhibitor alike.

"The Anderson Pictures Corporation will handle our product on that basis. Our rental valuations will be based on actual values to the exhibitors and not by fictitious figures arbitrarily arrived at by theories or wild expectations. Behind each picture will be a campaign of exploitation and consumer advertising created and carried out by experienced men on behalf of the exhibitor. This is another feature of the Anderson idea of which we heartily approve. Without boosting prices, the Anderson Pictures Corporation is prepared to sell intensively and rapidly. The exhibitor will cash in on picture advertising while it is hot.

"We have the backing of leading exhibitors, north and south, from coast to coast. Since our announcement last week, we have received letters and telegrams from hundreds of theatre owners, pledging us their support and urging us to let them have further details quickly. An amazing number of them, whose business judgment does not reconcile prosperity with the sky rocket rentals demanded by many distributors for Fall pictures, are already looking to us for good product at reasonable prices. This we will supply, beginning in October. Producers now assured of a clear channel to volume distribution and quick returns, are an integral part of our plan. Our pictures will have real merit and widespread public appeal.

"If ever the time was ripe for a co-operative distributing organization, it is now. The Theatre Owners Distributing Corporation, exhibitor-owned and exhibitor-controlled, presents a line-up of pictures, made by producers to meet the exhibitors' own requirements. This is a most important development in the economic history of the industry.

"To link up this movement with an organization which has the ideals and principles of exhibitor service, such as Anderson Pictures Corporarion, is doubly fortunate for the exhibitors, the independent producers and the general public. We are going ahead fast, but at no stage of our progress will we sacrifice our ideals of 'the exhibitor, first, last and all the time'."

Ernest C. Warde, former director of Frank Keenan, Dustin Farnum, Warren Kerrigan and other stars, has organized his own producing company in Los Angeles. Pathe Strengthens News Source

Extensive Arrangements Made by Editor Emanuel Cohen on Trip Abroad

EXTENSIVE new arrangements for gathering news in Europe were announced this week by Emanuel Cohen, editor of the Pathe News and Pathe Review, upon his return from a three weeks' trip abroad.

Mr. Cohen visited London, Paris, and Berlin and made side-trips to the battle fields, to the Ruhr, Switzerland and Ireland. In conference with French and German officials, Mr. Cohen succeeded in obtaining assurances of greater cooperation in the taking of news pictures.

In London the cameraman must get a permit to take a picture in the streets. Taking pictures of the steeplechase races is farmed out at so many pounds to independent organizations. The movement instituted by Pathe News will ultimately correct this situation so that cameramen will have as free access to events of news as reporters, and not pay for the privilege.

In France, the foreign office has absolute control of all official pictures, relegating this authority to the Department of Propaganda. Through the intervention of Secretary of State Hughes, Mr. Cohen succeeded in laying the case of Pathe News before the Foreign Department, and believes now that much of the official red tape will be cut and access to French news events will be easier and shipment will be made simpler.

Mr. Cohen brought the English, French, German, Italian and Irish Pathe News correspondents together under one roof and effected an amicable cooperation so that now continental events taken by the Pathe News will receive more personal attention from the minute they are "shot" until they are sealed, shipped and delivered to the first outgoing vessel, bound for America.

The Ruhr section is a great problem inasmuch as the military authorities are in control and the procuring of news pictures is surmounted with difficulties, but with the new arrangements effected, Pathe News believes a new epoch in international amity will be inaugurated as far as news pictures are concerned.

On his various trips, Mr. Cohen personally "shot" many scenes for forthcoming issues of Pathe Review.

The meeting was held during the week in which First National captured the screens of seven Chicago first-run houses. In addition to "Ashes of Vengeance" at the Roosevelt, "Her Reputation" was at the Chicago, "Penrod and Sam" at the Central Park, "The Scarlet Lily" at the State Lake, and "Circus Days" at the Tivoli, Riviera and Rialto theatres.

FIVE HUNDRED PRINTS

On Each Ritz Picture

Los Angeles, September 4.

IMPORTANT details of the Ritz-Carlton plan were made public today by George Kleine, Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Ritz concern, who is here conferring with J. D. Williams, President of the company and Harry Scott, Distribution Manager.

Only eight to ten features yearly will be released, Mr. Kleine said, and for each picture there will be a national advertising appropriation of $200,000. Instead of premieres confined to one or two cities, five to six hundred prints will be released simultaneously on the premiere date, Mr. Kleine continued. Probably the number of prints will then be increased to a thousand.

Commenting on this revolutionary change in distribution methods, Mr. Kleine pointed out that the purpose was to clean up all territories and bookings within two to three months on each production.

The average number of prints released by the big companies on each picture is in the neighborhood of seventy-five, though the total on some pictures has occasionally reached a hundred. The life of a picture is generally figured at about two years, considering all the stages of runs. The Ritz policy would overturn this practice completely, by greatly increasing the number of prints, as indicated, thus shortening the picture's life and giving it virtually simultaneous distribution throughout the country.

It was also said that negotiations for the first story which Rodolph Valentino will make for Ritz have been closed, and that, because of the nature of the story, the picture will almost certainly be made in Italy. Other prominent stars will also be announced shortly, it was stated.

William Desmond in "Shadows of the North," is among the latest Universal offerings.

Bert Adler Will Exploit "Barefoot Boy"

Proof of his confidence in the feature, "The Barefoot Boy," which C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation is distributing on the State right market for the Mission Film Corporation, is given by the announcement that Bert Adler has so arranged his activities as to permit him to affiliate himself with the picture to handle the special exploitation on it.

After viewing "The Barefoot Boy," which features a cast including John Bowers, Frankie Lee, Marjorie Daw, Sylvia Breamer, Tully Marshall, Brinsley Shaw, Otis Harlan, Raymond Hatton, Virginia True Boardman, Gertie Messinger and Lottie Williams, Mr. Adler was most enthusiastic.

Mr. Adler is directing the campaign which is accompanying this feature to franchise holders, and is laying out the campaign book.

WHAT SHOWMEN THINK OF CURRENT RELEASES

Exhibitors' Box-Office Reports

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATRES

FAMOUS PLAYERS

Lawful Larceny—

A very good picture, popular appeal. Did excellent business. (East.)

Went well at advanced prices. (East.)

Better than a program picture, but not as big as it promised to be. Average business for the week. (Middle West.)

Bluebeard's Eighth Wife—

A picture of doubtful value. People do not seem to know whether they like it or not. (East.)

Very interesting throughout. Many thought it was the best thing Swanson has ever done. Business was good, but not as big as we expected. (Middle West.)

Hollywood—

Everybody interested in the screen stars, and a good story in the bargain. Did top-notch business all week. In for a run. (East.)

Went across in fine shape. Good receipts. (Middle West.)

The best business that has been done this summer. Some unusual stunts pulled with this feature undoubtedly helped to put it across. But it also seemed to draw big on its own account. Held it over. (Middle West.)

A good drawing card. Played to good crowds. (Middle West.)

The Cheat—

A good drama, well acted and evenly balanced. Our patrons liked it. We had crowds at each performance. (Middle West.)

Better than "Bella Donna." Played to fair business. (Middle West.)

Salomy Jane—

Put on the bill when another picture flopped, this picture ran at a disadvantage but business averaged fair. (Middle West.)

A mediocre picture. Business fair. (East.)

Homeward Bound—

The Silent Partner—

Played to good crowds for the week. (Middle West.)

The Covered Wagon—

Attracted good attendance at advanced prices. (Middle West.)

The Purple Highway—

Used for the opening number for new theatre, a series of lockouts. Turned them away every day, could have used a thousand more seats. (Middle West.)

The Law of the Lawless—

Average business for a week's run. (Middle West.)

FIRST NATIONAL

Circus Days—

A success with both old and young. (East.)

Jackie scores again in this one. Entertaining feature which pleased our audiences. Business excellent. (Middle West.)

Dulcy—

A very fine picture. Business good. (Middle West.)

A very fine piece of film entertainment. Fine business for a week. (East.)

This picture is all right. Some of the men who came in to view it were all ready to commit murder on Dulcy—but that's all right. The comment was favorable. Nice business. (Middle West.)

Ashes of Vengeance—

Great picture, lavishly produced. Played to big business. (Middle West.)

Her Reputation—

Good, but not extraordinary feature. Well acted and fairly entertaining. Played to average business. (Middle West.)

Children of Dust—

An average picture that did a very nice business here. (West.)

Trilby—

A good production, but it failed to register here. People were not attracted by it, and patrons were disappointed after they sat through it. Business only fair. (West.)

The Scarlet Lily—

This picture was only fairly good. Our patrons were rather disappointed in it, and business was correspondingly average. (Middle West.)

Penrod and Sam—

A great attraction for kids. The rest of the family came too. Business good. (East.)

The Woman Conquers—

Only a mediocre picture. Business also mediocre. (East.)

Art ad for "Homeward Bound" (Paramount) at the Walnut theatre, Cincinnati

A Man of Action—

Not much of a picture. Didn't do very well. (East.)

UNIVERSAL

Merry-Go-Round—

An excellent picture—one of the finest ever made by this company. Has every element in it to please everybody. Did a big business here the first week and was held over for a second week. (West.)

Good business all week. (Middle West.)

A tremendous and instantaneous hit. (East.)

Sawdust—

This picture put on the last half of the week after a picture that was pulled, did satisfactory business. Fair and better. (Middle West.)

Railroaded—

All right for regular program run. Nice business. (Middle West.)

The Mysterious Rider—

A virile western story well produced and acted. Box office receipts fair. (East.)

FOX

Soft Boiled—

Presents Mix in a new light that was refreshing. (East.)

A whale of a picture. Theatre management think Mix a real comer. Tremendous business all week, growing steadily until closing day. (Middle West.)

UNITED ARTISTS

The White Rose—

Criticism very good. Drew excellently. A Griffith masterpiece. (Middle West.)

SELZNICK

Rupert of Hentzau—

Played to capacity throughout week. Patrons like it very much. (Middle West.)

A big production that did a good business. Played up as the sequel to the "Prisoner of Zenda," and was slightly disappointing to people who had hoped to see the same cast. (West.)

WARNER BROS.

The Little Church Around the Corner—

A fair picture. Business just fair. (East.)

F. B. O.

Human Wreckage—

Broke all records of the house for a week's run of lockouts afternoon and evening. There is no hokum about it that the folks demand that it be kept over next week. Some business!

Wonderful picture. Business good during second week of run. (Middle West.)

HODKINSON

Just Like a Woman—

Just a fair program picture. Business fair. Star helped draw them in. (East.)

PLAYGOERS

Tipped Off—

Average program picture. It drew in a few stragglers, and that's about all. (Middle West.)

ASSOCIATED EXHIBITORS

Alice Adams—

An excellent little presentation of Booth Tarkington's story, with the cast doing fine work and the whole production being very well done. Business pretty good. (West.)

A Bill of Divorcement—

Should fit into any program. Good patronage. (Middle West.)

STATE RIGHTS

Broadway Gold—

Entertaining feature which pleased our audiences. Business good. (Middle West.)

East Side, West Side—

A good business on this picture. Nothing has done so well for some months past at this house. (Middle West.)

Bright Lights of Broadway—

This picture did pretty well considering that it had the stiffest of competition, opening of a new theatre next door. (Middle West.)

Effective Tie-ups Made on "Three Ages" Showing

In addition to his regular advertising, Manager George A. McDermit of the Rialto theatre, Macon, Ga., put over a number of effective tie-ups in connection with "Three Ages."

Every soda fountain in town co-operated with the suggestion to "Try a Buster Keaton Frozen Faced Frappe and see Buster Keaton in Three Ages at the Rialto." Each of the soda fountains was given the recipe for this new drink, as follows: "Frappe an orangeade with mint and place a sprig of mint and a cherry on the top when you serve." Three days prior to the opening slides were run, as follows: "Have you tried a Buster Keaton Frozen Faced Frappe? They are as good as Three Ages."

Another tie-up was with a clothing store, where an oil painting representing Keaton in costume of a Roman gladiator was displayed in the window along with card to the effect: "Our clothes have stood the test of Three Ages. Buster Keaton's picture at the Rialto has enough laughs in it for Three Ages."

A sporting goods store was glad to cooperate and they displayed one of the oil paintings, that of Keaton playing the first game of golf. They gave a window display of golf goods, using the painting as a center piece.

"Bishop of the Ozarks" Is Aided by Local Angle

When Manager W. A. Doster of the Strand theatre, Montgomery, Ala., was to play "The Bishop of the Ozarks," he learned that the author of the story was a native Alabamian and that the role of the bishop was enacted by the author himself. This fact was stressed in all advertising, and on the basis that the story was from the pen of ex-Congressman Wilford W. Howard, stirred up unusual local interest.

This was the keynote of the campaign, which included the display of special cards, with stills inserted, in various downtown windows, a large banner in front of the theatre and the title in cutout letters, placed on a 24-sheet size metal frame on marquee.

Theatre Solves Problem of Talking With Overture

Loud talking by members of the audience during orchestral numbers in large theatres where the orchestra is an important item in the presentation has been dealt with by different theatres in a number of ways with arying results.

The Eastman theatre, Rochester, has just evolved a way of handling the situation which is proving very effective and yet at the same time is done subtly and without offense. Just previous to the beginning of the overture the curtains are drawn and the following verse from Alexander Pope's "Ode on St. Cecilia" is flashed on the screen, line by line:

Music the fiercest grief can charm,
And fate's severest rage disarm.
Music can soften pain to ease
And make despair and madness please.

Following this, a two-line couplet is thrown on the screen reading:

But how can music exalt the spirit
If we talk so loud no one can hear it?

First it brings a laugh from the audience, then applause and a solemn hush which maintains throughout the playing of the overture.

"Souls for Sale" Ballyhoo Slipped Into Parade

Homer Gill, Goldwyn Cosmopolitan exploitation man, and E. E. Frazier, manager and owner of the New Grand theatre in Pittsburg, Kan., exploited the showing of "Souls for Sale" at a gathering of 20,000 persons, coming from many parts of Kansas and Missouri to witness a Ku Klux Klan parade.

On being assured upon his arrival that the parade was to take place, he and Manager Frazier hastily arranged a float which resembled a casting director's office. Instead of the director's desk there was a man dressed to represent the devil standing at the front of the float. Facing the devil, seated on a carpet-covered incline, were eight Pittsburg girls. The float was hidden in a vacant lot until the parade was well under way, then at an opportune time it was slipped into the procession. Attention was attracted to it by red flares at each corner of the float. These lights burned continuously during the parade through the main streets and attracted great interest among the crowds which thought it a part of the Klan demonstration. Their surprise at reading on the banners on the float that it was an advertisement for the showing of "Souls for Sale" was so great that it made the title of that picture and the theatre where it was to be screened, stick in their memories. A large arched banner extended the full length of the float over the heads of the girls and the devil.

Cut-up Puzzle Stunt Used on "Penrod and Sam"

Manager A. P. Desormeaux, of the Strand theatre, Madison, Wis., made a hook-up with the Wisconsin State Journal on "Penrod and Sam" whereby the newspaper carried the puzzle cut of the two youngsters, in 21 pieces. Those who successfully assembled the pieces received passes to the theatre.

In addition, Manager Desormeaux had a regular program for juvenile matinees during his run of "Penrod and Sam." One day he entertained the inmates of an orphan asylum, the following day the newsboys of the State Journal. Hospital inmates were invited for another showing.

It filled empty seats and got abundant publicity for the picture.

Stunts Featured on "Circus Days"

Numerous Displays and Ballyhoos

CIRCUS stunts, of one sort or another, have been the outstanding feature of campaigns about the country on "Circus Days," and showmen have availed themselves to the full of the opportunity afforded for elaborate exploitation.

The first campaign to be staged was that accompanying the world premiere at the California theatre, Anaheim, Calif. Harry Wilson, Sol Lesser's press representative, was on hand to assist the management.

A big banner over the front of the theatre emphasized upon citizens of Anaheim the fact that they were accorded the distinction of getting the first public showing of Jackie's latest picture.

The accessories lived up to this bit of exploitation. The organ man and his monkey were in front of the theatre while the usherettes and attendants were dressed up in circus clothes. With such environments, the usual boys' parade wasn't necessary. The kids flocked to see the clowns and funny men and "Circus Days" became a fact as well as a name outside the theatre as well as inside.

35 Windows in Chicago

What is said to be a record for the Windy City is found in the thirty-five window tie-ups reported by Al Sobler, First National's exploitation representative at Chicago in conjunction with W. K. Hollander, advertising manager for Balaban and Katz during the showing of "Circus Days" in the Chicago theatres.

The front of the Tom Brown Music Shop was turned into a huge railroad depot with the circus trains arriving on the siding.

Jackie Coogan as the bare-back rider, and a background of painted tent tops, furnished the idea for the window display in the Home Drug Store.

The prize window of the 35, however, appeared in the store of the Boston Department Store, where a mechanical, moving elephant contributed to the entertainment of crowds of youngsters and adults who thronged the sidewalk.

ARTHUR SWANKE'S LATEST ART FRONT

Joe Plunkett's Presentation

A colorful and vivacious presentation marked Joseph Plunkett's introduction of "Circus Days" at his New York Strand theatre.

The front of a circus tent with the clowns, equestriennes and other members of the calliope company on the stage, marked the opening of the prologue. The first half of the act was called a "Morning Rehearsal," as the members of the company went through their parts. The rehearsal came to an abrupt end as the orchestra struck up the music for "Circus Days," a number that was introduced to New York years ago as part of a musical comedy show. The male quartet rendered this and it was followed by the Galop and Finale, in which Mlle. Daganove and ensemble and Anatole Bourmann, ballet master, carried the burden of work.

The picture was exploited just as its title indicated it should be. Jim Loughborough, handling the exploitation end of the run for the Lesser offices, got every conceivable kind of circus entertainment into a street ballyhoo and covered the city.

There was a Ford tractor. This carried some of the clowns and was loaned free of charge for a name-line advertising the Hellman motor on one of the cards. There was the calliope, manned with real tent artists, that paraded up and down Broadway. There were the camels, unearthed from some mysterious source. There was a pair of bucking hobby horses.

The entire line-up made a parade more than a block long and it kept all the children interested. When the different units separated, each one created a side show that drew its circle of admirers.

This simply marked the beginning of the extensive campaign. The United Cigar Stores tied up on the strength of the scene in which Jackie Coogan lights the pipe of his miserly uncle. This was tied up with Buckingham tobacco and the still scene of the incident featured the window display.

McCreery's came in with a window on boys' toys and clothes.

Car and Go-Cart Ballyhoo "Poor Men's Wives" Run

When "Poor Men's Wives" was shown at the Modjeska theatre, Augusta, Ga., F. J. Miller, manager of theatres, employed an effective ballyhoo.

A Chevrolet coupe was borrowed from a local dealer. A baby carriage, also borrowed, tied to the back of this was driven through the streets as a ballyhoo. Banners attached red: "Which Car Do You Own?" When not on the streets the car with baby carriage was parked in the lobby of the theatre.

The Chevrolet dealer was glad to lend the car, for he benefited by a card announcing that it was proffered through his courtesy.

Attractive and high class window display of "Toby Tyler" in a New York City book store, arranged as a hook-up on "Circus Days" (First National) at the New York Mark Strand theatre, of which Joe Plunkett is managing director

Stunts Used to Boost "Hollywood"

Exhibitors Employ Tie-ups and Other Special Features to Exploit Picture

LENDING itself particularly to stunt exploitation, "Hollywood" is being given particularly vigorous advertising support by exhibitors, advance reports indicate. Two of the first campaigns received are described below for the benefit of other exhibitors.

Manager George A. McDermit of the Rialto theatre, Macon, Ga., began his advertising campaign three weeks in advance, using teaser copy, trailers and newspaper ads. The title was announced on hotel menus, cards in the lobbies of hotels and signs on soda fountain mirrors.

The railroads were tied up with, both the Central of Georgia and the Southern Railway, who allowed Mr. McDermit to place cards in the terminal railroad station reading "See 'Hollywood' at the Rialto, then plan your trip to Los Angeles over the Southern Railroad (or Central of Georgia) and see studioland."

Six thousand rotogravure sheets were used, through the co-operation of the principal Sunday paper, being distributed in their regular white section. This paper further co-operated by publishing an editorial embodying the requirements necessary to entering the movies.

Attractive Lobby Featured

Manager McDermit tied up with one of the largest department stores on the basis of the "Can You Wear Clothes?" phase of entering the movies.

The lobby was most attractive and suggestive of the title, "Hollywood." Large quantities of holly were secured from the rural districts, small holly trees being banked against the box office and at each side of the lobby entrance. The "star" idea was carried out by a number of stars, which had formerly been used as Christmas decorations. The largest of these was used as a centerpiece just over the box office, and was studded with varicolored lights. The smaller ones were arranged on each side, clear across the lobby. The two end stars carried a single bulb, the remainder being filled in the center with transparent holly paper.

On each side of the box office the title was spelled out in cutout letters, which stretched clear across the lobby, just underneath the stars. A number of small stars were strung on invisible wire and covered with ground glass, streamers of tinsel suspended from them. These made quite a flash when the lights were turned on. Around the semi-circular border of the lobby stars made of holly alternated with oval cutouts of the better known stars appearing in "Hollywood."

Stickers pasted on all copies of the Saturday Evening Post called attention to the double-page ad in that particular issue.

Pictures Filmed Locally

Ed Helmts, manager of the Strand theatre, Des Moines, tried a stunt in connection with "Hollywood" that was a winner. A local company filmed scenes for a comedy, "Between Trains," on the streets of Des Moines and this was tied up with the Hollywood showing in that the scenes filmed each day were shown the next day on the Strand theatre screen. The completed comedy was shown at the Strand the week following.

The ballyhoo attracted a big crowd wherever it went and "Hollywood" did big business.

Miniature Used in Foyer to Aid "Merry-Go-Round"

For a week prior to the showing of "Merry-Go-Round" at the Howard theatre, Atlanta, Manager Howard Price Kingsmore had a miniature merry-go-round placed in the foyer. It was true to type and whirled around in regular merry-go-round fashion, attracting considerable attention.

During the run of the picture the merry-go-round was removed to the top of the marquee, where it caused equally as much attention.

REAL STILL AS "DRIVEN" DISPLAY

A still found by the sheriff in the Tennessee mountains was used by Manager E. A. Booth of the Palace theatre, Maryville, Tenn., as a display on "Driven" (Universal)

Silk Tie-up Helps to Put "Vanity Fair" Across

One of the most complete campaigns based on the national tie-up arranged by Eddie Bonns, manager of exploitation for Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan, with the Vanity Fair Silk Mills on "Vanity Fair," was put over by Goldwynner William Robson for the showing of this picture at Tom Moore's Rialto theatre, Washington, D. C.

There was a three-way tie-up among the Washington Herald, the merchants who sell Vanity Fair silks and the theatre.

The Herald ran a page of tie-up advertising of these stores which included Jelleff's, Palais Royale, The Hecht Co., Kann Bros. and Co., Lansburgh Bros. and Co., Suzuki Importers and others. It centered about a special theatre advertisement in which E. G. Evans, who directs publicity for Tom Moore, cleverly tied up the idea of "Vanity Fair" between the stores and the theatre.

Each of these stores as well as several other exclusive stores in the heart of the fashionable shopping center, such as Louis Gold and Co. who featured Vanity Fair with their exclusive showing of Paris hats, vied with each other in the novelty and artistic merit of their window displays, which ran the gamut from six-sheet cut-outs to dainty hand-painted cords.

State Fair Airplane Helps "Spoilers" Showing

A heavy exploitation campaign was put over on "The Spoilers" by Manager Roy McMullen, of the Merrill theatre, Milwaukee, and Goldwynner Walter D. Nealand.

The Wisconsin State Fair opened August 27 and continued for nine days. It is the event of the year in Wisconsin and is usually attended by more than 100,000 people. Arrangements were made with the fair management to have the lower wings of the two aeroplanes used by Louis Voyer ,who changes planes in mid-air, painted to use the words "'The Spoilers,' Merrill theatre, September 1-15."

As these planes are less than 500 feet in the air over the grandstand the sign can be easily read by everyone on the ground.

Heavy "If Winter Comes" Campaign Advertised Intensively in Ottawa

THE people of Ottawa, Ont., were kept busy during a recent week keeping track of the numerous and varied stunts put over to exploit the Canadian premiere of "If Winter Comes" at the Regent theatre, of which Oral Cloakey is manager. G. de Grandcourt, director of publicity for Fox in Canada, also had a hand in the extensive campaign.

One of the most unique features was the "Talking 24-Sheet," the paper for which was posted upside down to attract special attention. Wires were run from the radio store of Whitcher & Company, across from the stand, which were attached to an amplifier behind a screen on the billboards, by means of which announcements regarding the picture were broadcasted to the throngs. The record of the song was used and broadcasted in the same way. This stunt had to be stopped several times because of the congestion.

Manager Cloakey also made a tie-up with the police and fire departments. On the first night, a fire truck was used in front of the Regent for the taking of moving pictures of people going into the entrance of the house, three searchlights on the truck being played on the front of the theatre. Flares were also used in the middle of the street to add to the brilliancy.

Scene Is Reproduced

The title of the picture in large frosted letters was placed in many store windows, including furriers, drug stores, sporting goods stores, music houses, jewelers and others, appropriate displays of merchandise being made along with the title flare and still photographs. The reproduction of an actual scene in the picture was made in the window of a leading department store while music stores featured the record and song sheet of "If Winter Comes."

No less than 400 special invitations were sent out to prominent citizens to attend the private screening of the picture and the house was crowded on this occasion. Half column reviews of the feature were published in both daily newspapers the same day. Two hundred local clergymen were invited to see the picture and Rev. E. B. Wyllie of Erskine Presbyterian Church preached a sermon on the feature on upSunday, August 26.

The mail campaign, apart from the invitations for the private screening and the letters to the ministers, also included the sending of 5,000 blotters to employes of Federal government departments. Five thousand heralds were distributed in a house to house canvass. The paper used included 10 twenty-four sheets and 50 one sheets in vacant stores, 5,000 throwaways, reproducing Hutchinson's cable to the Fox Film Corporation congratulating the latter on the excellence of the picture, and 200 special cards tagged on all stores closing Saturday afternoon, which read "Closed for the Day. Gone to see 'If Winter Comes' at the Regent."

OIL PAINTING IN DRUG STORE WINDOW

A New York City drug store displayed this oil painting on "The Spoilers" (Goldwyn) during the run of the picture at the Capitol theatre

Two-Page Newspaper Tie-Up

One of the local newspapers conducted a two-page tie-up with merchants, while the other conducted an essay contest on the picture and published a one-page spread, which included appropriate advertising by various merchants. There was a week's advertising in the two local newspapers by the theatre before the opening day.

The many special window cards were appropriate to the store in which they were displayed. A card, such as "If Winter Comes, buy skis, toboggans and skates" appeared in the window of a sporting goods store. "If Winter Comes, preserve that schoolgirl complexion" was shown in a druggist's window. "If Winter Comes—means Jaeger underwear" was the card in a clothes store. Thirty-five of these cards were prepared for this purpose.

Two trade floats, one advertising Shirreff's Marmalade and the other boosting Life Savers, were tied with the engagement by the use of large streamers bearing the name.

Boys in Tights Ballyhoo Run of "April Showers"

"April Showers," when playing at the Broadway Strand theatre, Detroit, was exploited around the downtown section by a youth dressed in pink fleshings and a bright green bathing suit and carrying a huge umbrella on which was painted in bright yellow "April Showers at the Broadway-Strand."

ARTISTIC AND ORIGINAL LOBBY DISPLAY MATERIAL PREPARED ON "THE GLIMPSES OF THE MOON"

Manager W. E. Paschall of the Palace theatre, El Paso, prepared this lobby material on "The Glimpses of the Moon" (Paramount). The cloth backgrounds provide attractive display frames

Heavy Campaign for Run of "Where North Begins"

The world premiere of "Where the North Begins" at Loew's State theatre, Los Angeles, was given the support of an unusually active exploitation campaign.

Window tie-ups with appropriate displays were arranged for with the Owl Drug Company, calling for three large downtown windows and ten in neighborhood stores. In addition, the Owl Drug Co. distributed 65,000 posters for their day at the Motion Picture Exposition, in which Rin-tin-tin and "Where the North Begins" were credited.

Other window tie-ups were arranged with Colburn's, furriers, and Klein's, furriers. An electric fan tie-up with window display and newspaper ads was arranged for with the A. M. Smith Electrical Co. Silverwood's, a men's store, collaborated with a window showing Palm Beach suits, and Politz & McDowells, another men's store, contributed with a window tie-up on fall suits. The Family Brick Ice Cream Company aided with a tie-up in their newspaper advertisements.

One of the outstanding features was Rin-tin-tin Night on the Cinderella Roof Dance Hall, and a "Where the North Begins" Night which followed. Advertisements carried the slogan, "Come and Dance in the Snow" and the public's attention was directed to the fact that the entire cast of the production would be present on the occasion.

Stores Display One-Sheets on "Souls for Sale"

For the showing of "Souls for Sale" at the neighborhood Kitchener theatre in Toronto, the manager of that house, assisted by Will J. Stewart, Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan exploiteer in Toronto, put a special one-sheet poster in the window of every store in the district, emphasizing the Hollywood angle of the production.

The paper soles prepared for the exploitation of this production were used in every shoe store and shoe repair shop in the district. The only other exploitation feature, aside from posters and frames of stills in the lobby, was a house-to-house distribution of the "Souls for Sale" heralds.

USING WATER-WAGON AS BALLYHOO
Manager C. M. Waterbury of the Sherman theatre, St. Cloud, Minn., rigged up this appropriate ballyhoo on "You Can't Fool Your Wife" (Paramount)

Strong Attention Value in "Main Street" Campaign

An usually heavy advertising and exploitation campaign was put over in Seattle by Assistant Manager Floyd Wesp, when "Main Street" played a two weeks' engagement at John Hamrick's Blue Mouse theatre. The first "attraction-grabber" used at the theatre was a huge cloth sign hung diagonally across the street from the Blue Mouse roof to the roof of a building across the way. On each side of the sign was painted in large block letters, "Main Street," and a red arrow at the end of the sign pointed down to the theatre lobby.

An unusual use of the stock 24-sheets issued on "Main Street" gave a highly successful lobby display. The buildings and street on the 24-sheet were cut out and pasted on a large cardboard backing, which was painted at the top to blend in with the rest of the surrounding buildings. For a large space at each side of the lobby this covering was erected, leaving only the doors and box office of the theatre visible. The effect was that of a real "Main Street," with the theatre an integral part of the thoroughfare, situated between the "Main Street" drug store, bank and other buildings in the 24-sheet.

The genuine atmosphere of the lobby display was heightened by the use of the regular "Main Street" lamp-posts.

One of the largest book stores in the city devoted three of its windows to "Main Street," using a 24-sheet to imitate a small town, and filling the window with copies of the Sinclair Lewis novel. The picture was advertised by the book store in its newspaper copy and by handbills given out to customers in their packages.

Cinderella Stunt Used on "Where Pavement Ends"

When "Where the Pavement Ends" played at the Parkview theatre, Johnstown, Pa., the management tied up with Nathan's store on a special exploitation measure.

The store carried advertisements in the dailies announcing they would present a pair of Alice Terry slippers to the first four girls who were able to wear the star's size and who appeared for a fitting between certain hours. Other prizes were also offered.

The Johnstown Tribune described it as follows:

"How many ladies in Johnstown have feet that would rival Cinderella's? How many, for example, are as small as those pictured here? Experts say that the average size for women's feet in Johnstown is 5 or more, while in some other cities it is only 4½. But are the experts right? Johnstown has always been noted for its unusually pretty women, but how does the size of their feet compare with other cities?

"Here is an opportunity to find out.

"Alice Terry, who stars in the photoplay, 'Where the Pavement Ends,' has feet like Cinderella.

"So a pair of her slippers have been brought to Johnstown. They're now on exhibition in the window of the Nathan store, on Main street. Johnstown women are invited to try them on between 10:30 and 11:30 a. m. next Wednesday in the ladies' shoe department."

C. C. Deerdorf, Metro exploiteer, conceived the idea and assisted Mr. L. M. Conrad, managing director of the Parkview theatre, in putting it into effect.

HOW A REALISTIC SCHOOLROOM SCENE WAS STAGED IN A WINDOW TYING UP WITH "PENROD AND SAM"
Manager Will Kellner of the T. and D. theatre, Berkeley, Calif., arranged with a local clothing store for this unusually complete and realistic window display on "Penrod and Sam" (First National)

Window Displays Feature "Christian" Campaign

When "The Christian" was shown at the Luna theatre in La Fayette, Ind., Manager C. L. Hunter and Goldwynner H. T. Snowden arranged a number of important tie-ups with the city's most prominent merchants.

The W. H. Zinn department store gave over one of its windows to the silk tie-up. Three models draped in canary yellow silk were posed in the window against a background of yellow flowers. A special card reading: "Canary yellow favorite color of the elaborate gowns worn by Mae Busch in 'The Christian' at the Luna, four days, beginning Sunday," proved to be a magnet for women shoppers and passers-by.

The Lange Baking Company also tied up with the showing, using 6,000 slips in as many loaves of bread. The slip read: "Bread is your best friend. 'The Christian,' Hall Caine's masterpiece, is the best entertainment in La-Fayette this week. See it at the Luna, four days, beginning Sunday."

The J. W. Murphy Co. had a book window display consisting of one large oil painting, fifty hangers, five window cards, and an 18-inch strip around the entire window reading: "Free! A ticket to the showing of 'The Christian' at the Luna, with the purchase of a book." These tickets were good to the matinee showing only.

STRIKING FLASH IN "ENEMIES OF WOMEN" FRONT AND LOBBY DISPLAY
Manager H. B. Clarke, of the Garing theatre, Greenville, S. C., was responsible for this art lobby display on "Enemies of Women" (Cosmopolitan)

Recruiting Tie-up Boosts "The Silent Command"

An advance stunt used for the opening of "The Silent Command" at the Fox Monroe theatre in Chicago was a tie-up with the navy recruiting station. The principal feature of this was the printing of a special one-sheet poster which was posted by the navy recruiting men on prominent street corners.

The copy on this poster read: "Join the U. S. Navy and see the World. Before You Start Your Trip See 'The Silent Command' a Story of the American Navy that Every American Should See. Monroe Theatre."

Striking Setting Used for "White Rose" Prologue

As a prologue to "The White Rose," Manager Howard Price Kingsmore of the Howard theatre, Atlanta, had a striking act.

The scene was a garden, the major portion of which was hidden by shrubbery, painted on compo board. On the side was a hothouse, filled with flowers.

Drawn into the high shrubbery were five huge white roses and from the center of each smiled a pretty girl. The central rose was much larger than the rest and from this one Miss Mae Whitten sang "The Rose of Picardy," then suddenly the rose opened and Miss Whitten stepped out and the rose closed behind her.

Novel Prologue Inserted in "Slander the Woman"

Reproducing the climax of a picture on the stage without losing any of its dramatic value was the feat accomplished by Manager E. J. Weisfeldt of Saxe's Strand theatre, Milwaukee, on "Slander the Woman."

The Milwaukee stock company having closed for the rest of the summer, it was not difficult to engage such members of the company as were necessary. After the necessary negotiations, Manager Weisfeldt succeeded in engaging Miss Frances McHenry for the week to take the role Miss Phillips portrays in the film. James Billings, a member of a former Milwaukee stock company, was secured to play the role of the judge. Bert Brown, character man, was engaged to help put the presentation on and to take part in it. Other members of former or present Milwaukee stock companies who took part were Blosser Jennings, Bertie Conway and Jule Shaw.

The setting—the inside of the lodge in the Hudson Bay district, was put on with very little expense, the furniture and other accessories needed in the setting being easily and inexpensively secured.

An interesting feature of the presentation was that the dialogue for the enactment of the scene was prepared by B. K. Burns, a Milwaukeean, who recently sold A. H. Woods the rights to his play, "The Jurywoman."

At the end of the scene the curtain dropped and the screening of the picture went on as though it had never been interrupted.

HOW A CANINE STAR WAS TIED UP WITH A DISPLAY OF PHOTOGRAPHIC GOODS
When "Where the North Begins" (Warner Brothers) was given its showing at Loew's State theatre, Los Angeles, a drug store co-operated by giving this window display

Russian Roubles Used with "Don't Marry for Money"

When the Central theatre, New York City, played "Don't Marry For Money," the management played up the "Money" angle in their lobby and on the street.

The front had stretchers decorated with German, Austrian and Russian money—guaranteed genuine. Girls who passed out heralds on the production had their clothing and bonnets trimmed with the self-same genuine money. It was an attention arrester.

Manager Makes Tie-up with National Beauty Contest

A clever exploitation scheme that could be worked to advantage in any city in which a girl was selected to represent the city at the Atlantic City pageant of bathing beauties has been worked out by C. Floyd Hopkins, manager in Harrisburg, Pa., for the Wilmer & Vincent theatrical interests. The success of the plan, of course, depends upon its being put into operation while the interest in the Atlantic City beauty show is still fresh in the public mind, so as to take advantage locally of the nationwide publicity that the affair has gained.

Promptly upon the announcement of the selection of Miss Helen M. Knisely as "Miss Harrisburg," Mr. Hopkins announced that he had signed her for an appearance in person in the Colonial motion picture theatre in a performance in which "Miss Reading," "Miss Lancaster," "Miss Lebanon" and a number of the other bathing beauties chosen as the representatives of other cities were to take part.

It has been pointed out that this plan can be adopted in any other cities in which a beauty contest was held, increasing the interest by engaging the beauties selected by other nearby cities to appear.

"Souls for Sale" Exploited by Tie-up with Contest

When "Souls for Sale" was shown at the Paramount theatre, Logansport, Ind., that theatre was starting a campaign to determine the most popular girl in Logansport. The winner of the contest was to be given a free trip to Hollywood and the motion picture studios there.

With such a campaign on it was an easy matter for Goldwynner H. T. Snowden to tie-up with the theatre on its own campaign. Press stories and special cards called the public's attention to the fact that the girl who won the contest would go through such experiences as those of the spectators who watch the screening of "Souls for Sale." The newspapers ran several studio stills from the picture.

"VANITY FAIR" LINGERIE WINDOW

Sandwich Man Ballyhoo Is "Christian" Stunt

Manager H. Hornbeck of the Colonial theatre, Logansport, Ind., and Goldwynner H. T. Snowden used a widely diversified campaign on "The Christian."

They arranged for a street ballyhoo which consisted of a sandwich man carrying cards reading: "John Storm denies that he prophesied the end of the world at midnight, Sunday." He carried this teaser message for three days and then two days before the opening, the following phrase was added to the sign: "In 'The Christian' at the Colonial."

A silk tie-up was obtained with Gube's Department Store. Four models wearing cherry red gowns were placed in the most prominent window. A special card tying the display up to "The Christian" read: "Cherry red is the favorite color of Mae Busch, star of Hall Caine's 'The Christian,'" etc.

The daily Phaross-Tribune and the Press agreed to having their Saturday and Sunday editions stuffed with heralds for "The Christian." Fifteen hundred postal cards were mailed to persons whose addresses were taken from the telephone directory.

Widespread Exploitation on "A Temporary Marriage"

A campaign including newspaper contests, tie-ups with merchants and marriages on the stage was successfully engineered recently by Manager H. B. Wright of the Strand theatre, Seattle, when he ran "A Temporary Marriage."

Mr. Wright's weddings on the stage, which attracted the most attention of any stunt staged here in several months, were put over with the help of the newspapers and the Strand screen. A "Strand Matrimonial Bureau" was organized, and Mr. Wright promised a free wedding ring, license, minister, flowers, music and attendants, taxi and other accoutrements of a church wedding to any and all young couples that wished to begin their wedded life on the theatre stage. The idea brought forth a number of couples who were willing to be married under those conditions, so that every day of the week run there was at least one wedding previous to the screening of the picture at one of the evening shows. Sunday evening two couples were married.

Stores of the city entered into the plan. One couple was given a Ford coupe by the W. F. Hughson-Ford Motor Company of the city. The car was driven around the streets for a week before, appropriately decorated and placarded, and was finally placed on the marquee of the theatre the week of the run. Kitchen cabinets, phonographs, shoes, hats, dresses and jewelry were given free to the brides and grooms by other stores who tied up with Mr. Wright and received free advertising and publicity as a result.

Postcards Sent from Coast for "Souls for Sale"

Goldwynner Homer Gill, of Kansas City, had mailed out 150 postcards, each containing a message regarding "Souls for Sale" and each signed by a star appearing in the picture, to the local fans of Florence, Kan., for the showing of the picture in that city.

These cards were sent from Los Angeles and each of them showed a local view of interest and comment.

USING A 24-SHEET CUT-OUT TO GOOD ADVANTAGE ON THE MARQUEE ON "PENROD AND SAM"
Eddie Richardson, working under the supervision of Manager Morrison of the Imperial theatre, Jacksonville, Fla., made use of the 24-sheet on "Penrod and Sam" (First National) to get an effective cut-out which he placed on the marquee, as shown here

Jockey Dance Created for "Little Johnny Jones"

The Danse de Gallop, an original dance creation, was used by Managing Director Edward L. Hyman of the Brooklyn Mark Straud theatre as an atmospheric prologue to "Little Johnny Jones." Six girls were attired as jockeys, in regulation silks and with riding whips. The back drop was a landscape representing a race track, with a set rail fence in the foreground.

The jockeys did a gallop while from the booth the projector was run without film, giving a white flicker light upon the scene. A scrim was in front of the specialty, and as the girls all faced forward together and came toward the audience the picture was flashed on the scrim, showing the finish of a horse race. Then the screen was lowered into the picture.

To tie-up the dancers more closely with the picture after the flicker light had ceased and the picture started, orange and amber spots off-stage picked out the girls and made them visible through the scrim.

Cast Exploited in Stunt on "If Winter Comes" Run

The management of the Columbia theatre, San Francisco, used the postal card stunt to exploit "If Winter Comes," stressing the members of the cast.

Postal cards the message space of which bore "I Have Just Witnessed the World Premiere Showing of 'If Winter Comes' at the Columbia Theatre. Be Sure You See It!" were distributed among the audience, who were asked to address them to their friends. Then with the addresses written by members of the first-night group the postal cards were mailed by the theatre.

On the reverse side of the card was printed merely the cast and the name of the director.

Another feature of the advertising campaign was the pasting of large blue stickers on automobile windshields announcing the picture and the theatre at which it was being presented. The stickers exhorted the drivers to "come over to the Columbia."

Advertise "The White Rose" Well

Newspaper, Billboard and Lobby Ads Used by Managers to Exploit Picture

ONE of the most thorough campaigns on "The White Rose" which has been received is that staged in Tampa, Fla., by Manager J. B. Carroll of the Victory theatre. Manager Carroll began his campaign ten days in advance, covering the entire town with paper and billing.

A series of teaser ads was run in the morning paper several days prior to opening. The picture was given the manager's personal endorsement, which was incorporated into both slide and newspaper advertising.

Newspaper advertising played up the idea that Griffith was the producer, the man who made "Birth of a Nation."

White rose decorations were prominent in the lobby, where arches were constructed over the doorways, which carried an artistic white rose design, together with the title.

An advance stunt of unusual merit was the use of the large mirror in the entrance to the Citizens Bank Building. This mirror, which is 10 by 12, was painted with a display the background of which was a large white rose. This announced the title, name of theatre and play dates.

Prominent Displays Obtained

When "The White Rose" was booked for showing at the Strand theatre, San Francisco, steps were made for a somewhat unusual advertising and exploitation campaign.

In addition to a billboard display that covered the city with all sizes of paper, there was a big newspaper advertising campaign that carried with it big publicity space. The type ads shown in United Artists press book were used and plenty of white space allowed. The opening announcement was made six days ahead of the play date and was followed with different ad copy each day, the space becoming larger and larger, with the big smash on the opening day.

The whole length of the Strand building top floor, two stories up, was covered with a sign 120 feet long and 15 feet high. This proved the biggest sign in San Francisco, and that was the first time the space ever had been so used. The sign created a lot of talk and brought some news publicity.

Edward B. Barron, manager of the San Francisco United Artists exchange, made a tie-up with Arthur J. Hill, California manager for the State Life Insurance Company, and induced the insurance company to put up a huge sign on its building, free of cost, which read: "E. B. Barron (State Life Patron) says See It! 'The White Rose!' Strand Theatre Now!"

This sign attracted much attention and started everybody talking. The building on which it was placed is at the junction of Market, Taylor and Sixth streets and Golden Gate avenue, one block from the Strand, in the very center of everything in the city, and every person going up Market street just couldn't help seeing it.

CUT-OUT WHALE IN "DOWN TO THE SEA IN SHIPS" FRONT
Manager H. B. Clarke of the Casino theatre, Greenville, S. C., prepared this lobby for "Down to the Sea in Ships" (Hodkinson), with a large cut-out whale suspended in the center and a 24-sheet poster cut-out below it

NEWS AND VIEWS OF THE SHORT-LENGTH PRODUCTION

Short Subjects and Serials

COMING ATTRACTIONS FOR THE DIVERSIFIED PROGRAM

Pathe Names September 16 Releases

Harold Lloyd's Feature Comedy and Expose of Fake Mediums Head Program

PATHE'S schedule of releases arranged for September 16 is headed by the new Harold Lloyd feature in six reels, titled "Why Worry?" The release of this production will have been preceded by pre-release engagements at the New York Strand, at Shea's Hippodrome in Buffalo, and at the Eastman theatre, Rochester. First-run bookings on the picture for every key-city of the country are reported by the Pathe home-office.

The September 16th release schedule also contains a timely novelty in two reels fascinatingly exposing the "fake" methods of spiritualistic mediums who prey upon the credulous through interchange of their "sucker lists." The picture—which illustrated the whole dishonest process is titled: "Is Conan Doyle Right?"

Hal Roach's new 2-reel comedy series, "The Spat Family" gets its first release in "Let's Build." "The Spat Family" crystalizes upon the screen just what that general title stands for. In this first release a self-sufficient brother, his determined sister, and the latter's aristocratic English husband from the family group that "spats" its way through all the comic casualties that may be expected to happen when inefficient hands attempt to make a happy home by setting up a "portable house" on a mountainside.

"Snub Pollard" is seen in the two-reel comedy, "The Walk-Out." The featured comedian gets tangled up in factory troubles in which he never seems to be quite certain whether he stands for labor or capital. In the single-reel comedy, "A Man About Town," Stan Laurel is featured.

Edna Murphy in the sixth episode of "Her Dangerous Path" journeys alone far out into the West to marry a ranching suitor who is so busy getting even with his "rustler" enemies that she might as well not be married at all. There are big thrills, however, when she rebels and gets mixed up in the fracas.

The Aesop's Film Fable, "The Cat's Revenge," illustrates the moral: "Disappointment follows undue confidence." Pathe Review No. 37 presents a diversity of subjects, those of widest interest and charm being: The Marshlands, in the Photographic Gems Series; Malay Rubber Men, dealing with forest source of the world's rubber supply in the Malay archipelago.

Ad in Sport Club's Organ Used on "The Busher"

A very effective medium for advertising was employed by the Coliseum theatre, Portland, in exploiting the Educational-Mermaid comedy, "The Busher." On account of the nature of the picture, a baseball comedy, an adaptation of Ring W. Lardner's "You Know Me Al" stories, and its wide appeal to men, advertisements were inserted in "The Referee," the official prize fight program of the National Athletic Club, Portland. By making the appeal directly to sporting men, great interest was aroused in the picture.

A rather meek husband of the dignified English type, a quick-tempered wife, and a "know-it-all" brother make up the comedy trio seen in "Let's Build," the first of the "Spat Family" series to be distributed by Pathe.

Ned Sparks and Doris Deane in "Easter Bonnets," a Tuxedo comedy to be released by Educational.

Robt. Bruce Shooting New Scenic in Vancouver

Robert C. Bruce, creator of "Wilderness Tales" for release through Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., is working in the wilderness of Vancouver Island, B. C.

With Bruce is Selmar Jackson, who will play the leading male role in the Vancouver pictures; Guernsey Hayes, who has just returned from Alaska where he was working in "The Cheechakos," a Northern drama, David W. Gobbert, cameraman and John Christoferson, cook.

Most of the work on the island proper will be of a scenic nature, but the scenario for the new picture calls for plenty of exciting action aboard sail and motor boats among the San Juan Islands.

After completion of this picture, Bruce will return to Portland and will complete his series of pictures in Oregon.

"The Wages of Cinema" Is New "Fighting Blood"

"The Wages of Cinema," the sixth story in the new series of H. C. Witwer's "Fighting Blood" pictures, now in course of production at the Powers studios in Hollywood, has just been started, after a lapse of only one day following the completion of "The Taming of the Shrew," the last picture made. Louise Lorraine has a leading role.

Selznick Inaugurates Short Subject Department

MYRON SELZNICK, Vice President of the Selznick Distributing Corporation, announces the inauguration of a short subject department which is to function independently of the regular sales department. It will have its own corps of salesmen and home office contract department.

L. J. Darmour, formerly in charge of the Selznick News and editor of the Gaumont News, has been appointed by Mr. Selznick to manage this new department.

Contracts, according to Mr. Selznick, have already been signed for twenty-six two-reel comedies and negotiations are now under way for some short length material.

Change of Comedy Units to Fine Arts Plant Complete

The assembling of Educational's comedy-producing companies in the Fine Arts studio, formerly the D. W. Griffith producing headquarters, is now practically completed. The studios were recently taken over by E. H. Allen, manager of production for Educational, and over ninety thousand dollars has been expended in improvements. The companies now producing at Fine Arts studios include the Mermaid Comedies (Jack White Productions), Hamilton Comedies, Jack White Specials, Cameo Comedies, and the new Juvenile Comedies.

Lloyd Hamilton and his company will start work again in this studio as soon as the big comedian finishes his work for Griffith in his forthcoming blackface production, "Mammy's Boy."

Christie Out for Novelty Settings

Will Continue Policy of Providing Unusual Backgrounds for 2-Reelers

THE future product of the Christie Comedies organization will continue to sustain the reputation for feature settings that has been won by comedies of this company during the past season. A statement from the home office of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., which distributes the Christie product, announces the continuation of the plan to provide proper and out-of-the-ordinary backgrounds for these comedies and calls attention to some of the achievements along this line already accomplished by Christie. The pictorial layout on this page presents some of the more notable backgrounds that have been a feature of the Educational-Christie Comedies in the 1922-1923 series.

The first picture of the year, "That Son of a Sheik," Christie's satire on the overworked desert drama, took the Christie Comedy company into the desert where Neal Burns and his fellow-comedians romped about with several big feature companies as their neighbors. "Let 'Er Run," the Dorothy Devore comedy which has proved one of the most popular Christie subjects ever made, called for certain racetrack "atmosphere," for which the Christie company went to Tia Juana and other racetracks far from the Christie studio.

Later in the year Christie produced "A Hula Honeymoon," which required a trip to Honolulu, with the company of comedians headed by Henry Murdock. The second trip to the snow country at Truckee in a little over a year was made when "Winter Has Came" was produced. "Roll Along," the first comedy in blackface, called for a river setting resembling the levee districts on the Arkansas and lower Mississippi Rivers, and Jimmie Adams and a large company of Christie players camped out along the Sacramento River for weeks making this novel comedy. The last release of the series was "Back to the Woods," which was "shot" in the great redwood forests about Westwood, California.

The first picture of the new series of comedies which Christie is producing for Educational indicates that the Christies are out to surpass, if possible, their own fine record for novelty settings for two-reel comedies. This picture, "Navy Blues," was made almost entirely on board the U.S.S. California, flagship of the Pacific Fleet, where Dorothy Devore and a big company of players spent three weeks working on this sea-going comedy with the consent and co-operation of the Navy Dept.

"Is Conan Doyle Right?" Deals with Timely Topic

Pathe officials see in the new two-reel offering of that company, "Is Conan Doyle Right?" a subject that possesses unusual opportunities for effective exploitation. They call attention to the widespread interest manifested in books, lectures and newspaper articles on the subject of spiritualism and further point out that the present picture, while depicting the fraudulent practices of the great army of fake mediums, is in no way a condemnation of the spiritualism movement and does not indict all spiritualistic practitioners as cheats. The serious and sincere phase of the movement is presented as well as the deceptive elements which have been prospering at the expense of too credulous patrons.

As an instance of the prevalent interest in the subject of spiritualism it is pointed out that on the date of release set for this subject, September 16, the New York Sunday World Magazine will have printed more than twelve installments of its series called "Do the Dead Still Live?"

Abe Stern Returning from Abroad at End of Month

A cable from Abe Stern, vice president of Century Comedies, announces that he is making final preparations to leave Cherbourg for New York on or about September 28. It is expected Mr. Stern, after arriving in America, will make his headquarters in the East.

"Back Stage" Wins Note of Approval from Mae Tinee

The "Our Gang" number titled "Back Stage" won a special note of approval from the well-known screen critic of the Chicago Tribune, Mae Tinee. Among other opinions, Miss Tinee wrote the following:

"'Back Stage' is just as funny as can be with Hal Roach's youngest at their best. . . . The 'act' by the actor and the gang is something fearful and wonderful—and entirely satisfactory to the Chaplinesque audience, if not to the unhappy advertised worker of miracles. See 'Back Stage.' It's almost, if not quite as good, as 'A Pleasant Journey.'

Lige Conley in the new Mermaid comedy, "High Life," produced by Jack White for release on Educational Film Exchanges schedule.

Pre-release Reviews of Features

Why Worry

(Pathe—Six Reels)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

WE'VE mentioned before that Harold Lloyd is one star who is not content to rest upon his past laurels. Here he is again adding to the gayety of nations with as bright and merry a picture as has ever come from the Hal Roach factory or anywhere else. It may not carry the story interest of "Grandma's Boy," but what it loses from that angle is more than compensated for in the original and extremely hilarious array of new "business" or gags. One will go a long while before a picture is encountered which contains the mirth provoking possibilities of "Why Worry." Lloyd's following is secure because he is ever searching for new ideas. He has found a plentiful supply of them here.

The idea is not so new, but the treatment is novel. We find the comedian playing an idle and wealthy hypochondriac who journeys to Paradiso—one of the South American mythical spots where revolutions breed. You anticipate old stuff? But wait, there are enough new gags to supply a wealth of comedies. The tempo of this piece is along rapid farcical lines. Once Harold steps into Paradiso there is unfolded a rich and varied assortment of enormously laughable incidents. One of the bright spots is when Harold, not knowing what all the shootin's for, interprets each street fight as staged for his benefit. Consequently, when a native is shot in the stomach and doubles over in jack-knife fashion, Harold bows with great ceremony.

Thus is established the ingenious comedy touches of this hilarious piece. And so it goes building fun and excitement which terminates in an uproarious climax when Lloyd and his brigade of two—a nurse and a huge giant—defend themselves on a wall. Prior to this scene the gargantuan bodyguard has carried a big cannon about on his back and wrecked havoc on the enemy. He has enlisted on Harold's side because the latter attempted to pull his aching tooth—a comic scene in itself—and when they get out of ammunition the giant elevates the cannon and blows cigarette smoke through it while Harold throws cocoanuts with deadly aim. The girl keeps up a bombardment by pounding a bass drum. And the enemy is thwarted. It's an extraordinary comedy, filled with uproariously funny "business" and calculated to increase the star's immense following.

THEME. Farce-comedy dealing with young hypochondriac who goes to South American retreat for his health. Encounters revolution and gets into the midst of it. Beats the enemy with the aid of giant bodyguard.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The pep and original gags. The foil—a huge giant. The comedy antics when Lloyd thinks events are staged for his benefit. The funny climax when enemy is beaten. The ever-continuous comedy.

DIRECTION. Keeps it zippy with new gags and "business." Builds up plenty of highly amusing climaxes. Has not introduced a single dull moment.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. You know how to exploit Lloyd. Play him up big and feature the comedy as one of the funniest ever made. Exploit title.

DRAWING POWER. A sure sell-out everywhere.

SUMMARY. An exceptionally funny comedy, filled with novel gags and never losing its momentum. Rich incident, fine titles and continuous mirth.

SYNOPSIS. Wealthy hypochondriac journeys to Paradiso, a South American retreat, for his health. Enlists service of huge giant, and together they beat the enemy by a co-operation of brains and brawn.

The Gunfighter

(Fox—Five Reels)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

HAVING to do with two families of mountaineers engaged in a feud; with gunplay being expressed by means of quick trigger fingers through most of the action; with some characteristic backgrounds for atmosphere; with the fires of hatred being lighted until extinguished by the flood of romance when a "furriner" takes away the girl as his bride—the innocent cause of the feud, "The Gunfighter," ranges through the customary conventionalities of this type of screen drama.

There is no element of suspense entering into the story interest aside from wondering who will be "knocked off" by the flashing guns. The two families established their feud when the leader of one clan made a dying confession that he exchanged his dead baby for a live one—the latter being the offspring of the rival clan leader.

So the song of hate is sung for seventeen years, at which point an itinerant rancher—a two-gun man visits the locality and is hired by one faction as its generalissimo. This is the family to which the baby rightfully belonged—a baby now grown into young girlhood. Naturally the gunfighter and the girl meet—and romance is born. And then the subsequent reels are given up to hectic gunplay, which culminates in a fight with knives in the dark between the swaggering hero and a treacherous clansman who had shot him from ambush when it looked as if a peace treaty might be signed between the opposing forces.

The title writer has wisely refrained from having the characters talk a "white trash" vernacular. Indeed they appear educated. The picture is ideal for William Farnum, who resorts to having himself caught in huge close-ups and gives himself up to many melodramatic postures—such as dashing madly on horseback and discharging his fowling piece like Annie Oakley. Truce is declared when he faces the enemy and asks them "what's all the shootin' for?" Having the acceptance of the girl as his future bride the feud is ended and so is the picture. A fair melodrama of its kind—old-fashioned, but fairly active.

THEME. Features a long-established feud which generated when a child of one faction was kidnaped by the opposing faction. Is settled when itinerant two-gun man takes the girl away.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The appropriate backgrounds. The creditable atmosphere. The duel in the dark. The good incident.

DIRECTION. Does as well as possible with limitations of plot. Builds up an effective climax. Allows star to swagger after manner of chivalrous knight. Keeps it fairly active and creates good interest though suspense is often lacking.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Play up star and title and mention that story concerns a fascinating feud. Ballyhoo the picture with a man on horseback toting a shotgun, etc.

DRAWING POWER. Should draw in second and third class downtown houses.

SUMMARY. Old-fashioned plot eliminates suspense, but story is active enough. Good handling of detail and incident make it fairly entertaining. Always conventional and misses in character drawing.

SYNOPSIS. Long-established feud has resulted in much bloodshed between opposing clans of Southern mountain community. The feud had started when dead baby belonging to one family was replaced by a live baby belonging to the opposing family. Rosita

(Pickford-United Artists—8800 Feet)

(Reviewed by Oscar Cooper)

A GREAT picture. Probably the finest acting Mary Pickford has ever done. A characterization by Holbrook Blinn that will live as long as the screen lasts. Superb direction by Ernst Lubitsch. Continuity and editing that are practically faultless. Technical perfection. And—a story. Such is "Rosita."

The star turns away from her accustomed roles. She portrays a woman grown, but no less charming than her portrayals of childhood. As the girl with the guitar, swaying the crowds in the streets of Seville, and then half mad when she thinks her lover has been executed, Miss Pickford ranges through the emotions with ease and conviction. Nor are the touches of wistful humor for which she is famous absent. It is a splendid performance.

As for pantomine, the screen has shown nothing finer than Mr. Blinn's work as the amorous King, who takes his defeats in love gracefully and with a stern sense of humor. The King is as near a villain as anybody in the picture. But what a villain! Instead of being the conventional type, he is utterly different. Not a character from a book, but a character from life. It is to Mr. Blinn's everlasting credit that not once did he give offense, nor at any single moment lose the sympathy of the spectator.

On the same high level is the work of the other players, notably George Walsh and Irene Rich. The other members of the cast contribute effectively to the total effect.

The other things that make this picture great are found in Lubitsch's direction: his handling of mob scenes; the human touches that he introduces; the lighting; the effective use of big sets and stately scenes that fairly hit the spectator between the eyes; and, above all, the management of the story.

THEME. A Spanish romance, in which a girl of the lower classes, the idol of the Seville mob, is sought by the King, and how she repulses him, and remains steadfast to her sweetheart, who is finally saved from execution.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The remarkably smooth-running story. The excellence of the cast. The massive interiors. The mob scenes. The love story, in which is brought out true dramatic conflict, full of suspense and compelling sympathy. The comic relief when Rosita installs her family in one of the King's villas.

DIRECTION. Lubitsch has never done anything better. It is his first picture with an American cast and the result proves that he stands in the forefront of directors. So intelligently has he done his work, that not one adverse criticism, worthy the name, occurs to the reviewer.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Play up the fact that Miss Pickford is seen in a virtually new role for her, something different. The admirable work of the cast, and the richness and bigness of the production, are talking points.

DRAWING POWER. Although "Rosita" is away from Miss Pickford's usual roles, it will appeal to all types of audiences.

SUMMARY. A work of art. Not only a great picture, but one of the great pictures of screen history.

THE CAST

Rosita	Mary Pickford
The King	Holbrook Blinn
The Queen	Irene Rich
Don Diego	George Walsh
Prime Minister	Charles Belcher
Commandant	Frank Leigh
The Mother	Mme. Mathilde Comont
The Father	George Periolat
The Jailer	Snitz Edwards

Adapted by Edward Knoblock. Directed by Ernst Lubitsch. Photographed by Charles Rosher.

SYNOPSIS. The King goes to Seville, which is in the throes of the carnival, mixes with the mob in the streets, and hears Rosita sing her songs ridiculing him. Imprisoned, she is released by his orders, but her sweetheart, Don Diego, remains in prison. The King attempts to win Rosita, but fails, and orders Don Diego executed to get him out of the way. Rosita pleads for his life, and the King orders a mock execution, privately sending word to the jailer to proceed with the original order. The Queen intervenes, and Don Diego is saved, but Rosita, thinking him dead, brings his body to the palace. The King, believing him out of the way, renews his love-making to Rosita, intent on revenge. Don Diego rises from his supposed funeral couch, the King gracefully admits he is beaten, and the lovers are united.

The Hunchback of Notre Dame

(Universal—Twelve Reels)

(Reviewed by L. C. Moen)

WHEN Victor Hugo wrote "Notre Dame de Paris," known here as "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," he created a romance that was to live long after his achievements as a politician had been forgotten. And when Carl Laemmle commissioned Wallace Worsley to prepare a cinema version of that same deathless novel, he created for himself a place in film history that is likely to endure after present institutions and organizations have disappeared.

In a season marked by an avalanche of truly greater pictures, Universal has proved its right to stand in the very front rank as a courageous maker of great productions. A few years ago, such a production would have been considered out of the question. To reproduce acres of buildings and streets of a bygone age, complete and authentic to the last cornice and cobblestone—to costume thousands of extras in lavish and elaborate costumes—to reproduce a cathedral which required an entire community two centuries to build—and all of this for what was once disparagingly referred to as "costume stuff"—would have once been considered the extreme of folly.

No such comments are being heard today, however, since "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" has been placed on view. Without doubt, it is the most overwhelming in its magnitude, the most realistic in its reproduction of the manners of another day, the most faithful to its source, of any picture of the sort that has been made.

There is, to be sure, no great strength of continuity to it, save that it centers about the Cathedral of Our Lady. Hugo's novel was an intricate maze of plots, interwoven and entangled so inextricably that perhaps a hundred reels would scarcely have sufficed to tell all of it, and athough Universal has, as a program note states, "retained as much of the actual plot as could possibly be squeezed through the lens of a camera," it has been possible to relate only a fraction of the original tale, with the result that it is rather sketchy in spots.

So, rather than a picture which sweeps along on one theme, it is a series of highlights and punches, with the artistry of Lon Chaney lifting it to great heights. Chaney's work is a masterpiece of make-up—Ernest Torrence is a superb Clopin—Patsy Ruth Miller is a lovely and dignified La Esmeralda—Norma Kerry a likeable Phoebus—Raymond Hatton and Tully Marshall admirable as Gringoire and Louis XI, respectively, and the remainder of the cast deserves praise which space will not permit. Architecturally, the picture is a triumph, and dramatically, it is big enough for any audience, anywhere.

THEME. Historical romance of Paris in 1482, centering about Notre Dame.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. Too many to enumerate. The massive sets. The well directed mob scenes. The attack on the Cathedral. The whipping scene. The rescue of La Esmeralda. The Court of Fools. The excellent detail and general historical accuracy. The superb cast.

DIRECTION. Ranks high, as a whole, and considering the difficulties faced in translating so complex a story to the screen. Handling of mobs is admirable.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. The story and the author. The names in the cast. The stupendous size of the production. Should be handled in a dignified and clean cut manner.

DRAWING POWER. Big enough for any theatre, anywhere.

SUMMARY. A colossal production, bringing to the screen one of the world's masterpieces of literature. Should appeal to the widest variety of audiences.

THE CAST

Quasimodo	Lon Chaney
Clopin	Ernest Torrence
Esmeralda	Patsy Ruth Miller
Phœbus	Norman Kerry
Mme. de Gondelaurier	Kate Lester
Jehan	Brandon Hurst
Gringoire	Raymond Hatton
Louis XI	Tully Marshall
Dom Claude	Nigel de Brulier
Monsieur Neufchatel	Harry L. van Meter
Godule	Gladys Brockwell
Marie	Eulalie Jensen
Fleur de Lys	Winifred Bryson

Adapted by Perley Poore Sheehan from the novel by Victor Hugo. Scenario by Edward L. Lowe, Jr. Directed by Wallace Worsley. Photographed by Robert Newhard and Tony Koruman.

SYNOPSIS. Follows, in the main, Victor Hugo's well known romance. Main threads of the story are the life of the Hunchback on the roof of Notre Dame, the love of Phœbus and Esmeralda, the revolt of the beggars against clergy and aristocrats, the tyranny and injustice of the king, and many others.

The White Sister

(Inspiration—About Fourteen Reels)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

WE approach this picture with great reverence for its beautifully sad love story and the wonderfully effective spiritual quality which gives it its distinction as a work of art—a picture destined to live in the memory because of its clash of emotions, its revelation of two souls in conflict, its most impressive chapters of Donna Angele's marriage to the Church—and its tragic note of her renunciation and the anguish it brought her and the lover whom she promised before he embarked on his ill-fated expedition that she would love forever after.

The screen has never revealed any document more fraught with genuine heart-throbs than this tender tragedy. One becomes transported in viewing the lovers torn asunder. It strikes deep like the strains of the Pathetique Symphony which accompanies its tragic motif. Here we feel is a picture with a soul—one which grips the emotions—one which leaves the spectator overawed with its impressive ceremony of the bride's marriage to the Church—the anguish which the lovers feel in their reunion as they realize their earthly separation—the exquisitely beautiful backgrounds which were caught in the exact locations of the story.

Again Henry King, whose direction is an inspiration once he brushes aside the inconsequential details, holds you in a vise-like grip with his overwhelming sweep in the scenes building to the climax. His Vesuvius shots—the volcano pouring forth its lava which leaves death and destruction in its path are finely executed.

It's a picture unrelieved by any "sweetness and light." It tells its sad story of love broken off at the crest of its fulfillment in a manner which leaves one overcome with its surge of emotions. And through it all Lillian Gish plays like one inspired. Her tender, fragile appeal—her eloquent hands and eyes—her angelic expressions—these are finely adaptable to the demands of the role. She arouses the deepest pity and sympathy for the constant anguish of soul she suffers—buffeted as she is by a cruel and relentless fate. Her scenes of renunciation and accepting the veil—her moments when her pent-up anguish of soul finds expression in kissing her lover's picture—her tranquillity and poise—these are unforgettable. The climax is breath-taking, showing Vesuvius in eruption and the mad ride of the soldier lover to warn the countryside. He accepts death, knowing that a merciful Providence will unite him to his sweetheart.

THEME. Tragic story of broken love which causes the girl to become married to the Church and her anguish of soul in discovering her lover alive.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. Lillian Gish's inspired acting. The good acting by Gail Kane and Ronald Colman. The beautiful backgrounds. The climax when Vesuvius spreads death and destruction. The marriage to the Church. The religious scenes. The reunion of the lovers and the subsequent torment of soul.

DIRECTION. Has effected a most impressive picture—one of dignity, tone and quality. Plays on the heart-strings like a Heifitz. Builds up renunciation scenes in a soul-stirring manner. Keeps faith throughout.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Call for dignified presentation. Play up locations, author, star and director.

DRAWING POWER. Will be appreciated by intelligent audiences everywhere.

SUMMARY. A most impressive and artistic picture of souls in torment—wonderfully acted and directed. Tragic theme beautifully expressed.

Puritan Passions

(Film Guild-Hodkinson—6600 Feet)

(Reviewed by Oscar Cooper)

THIS picture is decidedly out of the beaten path. A story of witchcraft in Salem, with a strong element of the supernatural, hinged on the devil-motive, and the bringing to life of The Scarecrow, "Puritan Passions" is an unusual film.

As a whole, it is artistic in a high degree, produced in a very intelligent and effective manner, and acted by an excellent cast. Glenn Hunter, in the role of The Scarecrow, handles a difficult role well. But the real acting honors must go to Osgood Perkins, whose deliniation of a very human devil is a vivid and compelling characterization. This player, it appears, has been seen in but one picture previously. But his work in "Puritan Passions" shows that he is headed for a very definite place up front with the character actors of the screen.

Mary Astor, in the role of the Puritan maid who is the central figure in a strange mystery-love story, appears to splendid advantage. And the other players, all excellent as to type, give good performances.

Against the background of superstition, intolerance and the hanging of witches, the story is told. If one enters into its spirit and does not try to justify it as something that might happen, it convinces and holds the interest throughout. And there is considerable "kick" at the finish, where the Devil loses his power over The Scarecrow because the latter proves himself a man, even though he is a thing of straw, created at Old Nick's whim.

Technically, the picture is very fine. The weird atmosphere is maintained in admirable fashion, the lighting is first class, and all the production details have been carefully attended to.

THEME. The Scarecrow, brought to life by the Devil for his evil purposes, wins the love of the Puritan girl and then sacrifices himself in order that she may wed his rival, thus proving that only the power of love could break the Devil's spell.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The excellent work of the cast. The interiors, particularly the scene in the blacksmith shop. The bringing to life of The Scarecrow, and his duel with his rival in love. The Magic Mirror sequence, especially the scene at the wedding where The Scarecrow is shown to be a man of straw. The twist at the end, resulting in The Scarecrow's death.

DIRECTION. Brings out effectively both atmosphere and story. A very creditable piece of work, in view of the unreality of the theme. The continuity is smooth and even, and the total effect excellent.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. There is an abundance of these. The witchcraft angle; the Scarecrow and his creator, the Devil; and the other points already suggested above lend themselves easily to exploitation.

DRAWING POWER. Especially suitable for high-class houses and elaborate presentation.

SUMMARY. An unusual picture, with a ready appeal, provided audiences enter into the spirit of the story and take it seriously. The one possible drawback to its boxoffice strength, as this reviewer sees it, is that some of the supernatural stuff may appear comic to audiences, and provoke laughs in the wrong place.

THE CAST

Lord Ravensbane / The Scarecrow ..... Glenn Hunter
Rachel ..... Mary Astor
Dr. Nicholas ..... Osgood Perkins
Goody Rickby ..... Maude Hill
Gillead Wingate ..... Frank Tweed
Bugby ..... Dwight Wiman
The Minister ..... Thomas Chalmers

The Devil breathes life into The Scarecrow and they plan to marry him to Rachel, Gillead's ward, after which the identity of The Scarecrow will be revealed and Gillead and Rachel made to pay the death penalty. Their plan is foiled when The Scarecrow, even though a creation of the Devil, finds his soul through love for Rachel and refuses to go on. He dies and Rachel realizes her real love was for Richard Talbot.

The Silent Command

(Fox—Nine Reels)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

A GLORIFICATION of the American Navy is on view in "The Silent Command," which is recommended to anyone suffering from an indifferent patriotism. Told in a melodramatic manner it commands attention by virtue of its crescendo of events once the slow introductory scenes have passed. Why not? Can you imagine the American Navy acting in a sluggish manner when the honor of the service and the defense of the country are at stake? So we see a tale featuring foreign intrigue as established in high diplomatic circles —with the American flag waving on high once the dastardly attempts of the spies to wreck the fleet and blow up the Panama Canal are frustrated.

The ingredients in themselves are quite familiar. There are the villainous foreign agents, the naval hero who is painted as a weakling to throw the spectator off the track, the spirit of patriotic self-sacrifice —the crashing climaxes when the officer outwits the enemy—all of which are thrown against some exceptional backgrounds, visualizing marine photography at its best.

The picture, as mentioned above, is rather tardy in developing its action, but once it arrives it carries on and finishes with a grand melodramatic flourish. To start off there are revealed several close-ups of maps of the canal and the position of the locks and fleet. Then it switches into its story proper, which for the purpose of adding suspense, introduces the naval officer as a weakling in the clutches of an adventuress, a decoy of the enemy. The young "four striper" will astonish you in the quickness of his intoxication—which violates the gentlemanly conduct of officers, until it is pointed out that his inebriated conditions is all assumed to outwit the enemy spies. He had been given orders to do this by the Secret Service, his assignment being the "silent command." It brought him estrangement from his wife and loss of his stripes, though at the end his wife and honor are restored to him.

The director has achieved an impressive touch with his dramatic "drumming out of service" of the hero and the climax is fraught with real action and suspense, showing, as it does, a he-man fight in the radio room of the ship during the progress of a heavy storm. Here are revealed the wonderfully effective marine shots. The insertion of graduation exercises at Annapolis is also highly effective. The panoramic shots, the ship disaster, the storm scenes, and the competent acting make the picture rich in optical and dramatic appeal.

THEME. Deals with diplomatic intrigue and the efforts of foreign agents to wreck the Panama Canal and the Atlantic Fleet. Worked out melodramatically.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The exceptional marine shots. The storm at sea. The crashing climax when hero frustrates the enemy. The sinking of the ship. The atmosphere. The shots at Annapolis. The capable acting. The discharge of the officer from the service.

DIRECTION. Has brought out a fine patriotic flavor. Creates a good climax. Builds up his important scenes so that suspense is dominant. Starts it off too slowly, however. Has not departed from conventional, but keeps it interesting.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES.. Play up the naval branch of service. Co-operate with enlistment bureaus. Feature it as highly interesting picture, calculated to inspire patriotism. Play up radio, etc.

DRAWING POWER. Should go well everywhere.

SUMMARY. Highly interesting melodrama, conventional in theme, but exciting once it swings into its story. Climaxes filled with action and suspense. Inspires patriotism.

THE CAST

Captain Richard Decatur.....Edmund Lowe
Hisston .....Bela Lugosi
Menchen .....Carl Harbaugh
Cordoba .....Martin Faust
Gridley .....Gordon McEdward
Admiral Nevins .....Byron Douglas
Admiral Meade .....Theodore Babcock
Ambassador Mendizabal .....Warren Cook
Jack Decatur .....Rogers Keene
Mrs. Richard Decatur.....Alma Tell
Peg Williams .....Martha Mansfield

By Rufus King. Directed by J. Gordon Edwards.

SYNOPSIS. Foreign agents are determined to wreck Atlantic Fleet and the Panama Canal. Employ woman as adventuress who is to decoy young naval officer. He allows himself to be duped by them, even so far as to suffer disgrace and be discharged from service. It brings an estrangement from his wife and dishonor. But he saves the Fleet and Canal and outwits the enemy.

Strangers of the Night

(Metro—Seven Reels)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THERE is an engaging frankness in "Strangers of the Night," the Fred Niblo picture adapted from the stage success, "Captain Applejack," which will carry it to the height of popular appeal. It is a first class adventure story which is excellently treated to bring out its subtle humor, whimsy, mystery and romance. The introductory scenes are a trifle slow in getting started—so much so that the farcical flavor of the play is not caught up with until the concluding reels. But once they arrive it carries through with splendid spirit and the result is a meritorious picture—one destined for the screen because of its swashbuckling flavor, its skilfully drawn characterization, and its rapidity of action.

If you saw the play you will remember that the extremely proper young Englishman who did everything on the hour went asleep early and dreamed of his pirate ancestor, placing himself in the old fellow's shoes and awakening with more than an ounce of courage to continue his authoritative manner. Here there are several episodes given up to building the characterization, thus creating a reason for the rushing climaxes.

It may be a trifle tedious up to the third reel—then things begin to hum. He stays up to dwell upon his long suppressed desires. And into the house stalk adventure and romance. He has audience with several mysterious strangers, all of whom are bent upon finding the hidden map to the booty collected by the ancestral pirate. He goes to sleep for a brief time and the scene flashes back to the days of the Spanish Main—a scene rich in background, incident and atmosphere. But the flashback is not so important on the screen as it was upon the stage. More footage is devoted to what actually takes place in the ancestral manor.

Niblo has executed the concluding scenes with a fine farcical flourish. There are many hasty exits and entrances—much dashing around, though not a single incident is badly sketched. There is rhyme and reason to everything which transpires. The ending finds the timid Englishman in possession of his booty and very much in love with his father's ward. The picture is capitally staged and acted by Matt Moore and a fine supporting cast. There is tone and quality written all over it. Metro has a money-maker here.

THEME. Comedy adventure-romance of a timid Englishman whose life is unbroken by adventure and romance until he is faced by a group of determined thieves. He sleeps and dreams of his pirate ancestor and awakens to frustrate his enemies with his courage.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The fine staging. The mystery. The fine building up of the story. The deft characterization. The fast concluding reels ushering in a zippy climax. The suspense. The good acting.

DIRECTION. Starts it off slowly, but works it up to zippy finish, establishing a reason for everything. Adds plenty of peppy adventure and keeps his climaxes lively. Provides fine atmosphere.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Play it up as one of the best mystery adventure stories. Feature fact that it is adapted from well known stage success. Put on a colorful prologue featuring pirate life, using songs, etc. Play up cast, director, and title.

DRAWING POWER. Should draw well in any house. Good for first run.

SUMMARY. A highly interesting comedy adventure, slow in getting started, but builds up to lively incident and action, showing a deal of humor, romance, mystery and suspense. Fine atmosphere throughout.

THE CAST

Ambrose Applejohn .....Matt Moore
Poppy Faire .....Enid Bennett
Anna Valeska .....Barbara La Marr
Borolsky .....Robert McKim
Mrs. Agatha Whatacombe.....Mathilde Brundage
Mrs. Horace Pengard.....Emily Fitzroy
Mr. Horace Pengard.....Otto Hoffman
Lush ..... Thomas Ricketts

By Walter Hackett. Scenario by Bess Meredyth. Directed by Fred Niblo. Photographer by Alvin Wyckoff.

SYNOPSIS. Timid English country gentleman tires of monotony in his life and craves adventure. It comes to him in the form of several thieves who would gain rich booty secreted away by the hero's pirate ancestor. He frustrates them temporarily and goes to sleep dreaming of his pirate ancestor and the latter's conquests. Awakes to encourage the adventure and romance.

And says the colonel, Buffalo is going to grab the first prize. It's 1,000 iron men and if the Colonel wins, well, we at least expect a cigar. John Lyons, live wire salesman, is using his auto to bring in Educational contracts these days.

The motion picture organist, to fill his position properly, must have among his qualifications memory, a sense of humor, and a proper respect for the dignity of his instrument, said Dr. Alexander Russell, director of music at Princeton University, before the convention of the National Association of Organists in the Eastman theatre, Rochester, last week. "There are from 10,000,000 to 15,000,000 people who visit the motion picture houses daily," said Dr. Russell, "and whether we like it or not, the coming generation is largly having its dramatic, literary and musical tastes formed by what it sees and hears in the motion picture theatre." Dr. Russell praised George Eastman and said the Eastman theatre was undoubtedly the finest of its kind in the world. William Fait, Jr., manager of the Eastman, welcomed the delegates.

Charlie Hayman, owner of the Strand, Niagara Falls, put over a good one last week when he arranged for the personal appearance at his house of Miss Nelda Tell, selected to be "Miss Niagara Falls," at the Atlantic City Beauty Tournament. Albany

ROCHESTER, New York, has honored a member of the theatrical profession in naming William A. Calihan, manager of the Regent and Piccadilly theatres, as General Chairman of the Rochester Carnival of Flowers Committee. The appointment of Mr. Calihan was made by William W. Hibbard, president of the Rochester Exposition Association, which organization sponsored the event.

The Carnival of Flowers was a demonstration by Rochester citizens that their city has a right to be called the "Flower City," which title Rochester long has been known by. It consisted of a parade of decorated floats and motor vehicles, which traversed the downtown sections and terminated at the Exposition grounds, where it was reviewed by the mayor and other prominent officials. The Carnival of Flowers committee was made up of leading civic workers, business and professional people of the city. The carnival was staged Sept. 5th at the time of the exposition.

"Bill," as Mr. Calihan is familiarly known in the profession, has been a resident of the "Flower City" all his life and has been engaged in the motion picture businesss for twenty years. He first was connected with the old Hippodrome but when the owners built the Regent he was made manager of the new house. Later when the Piccadilly was purchased, "Bill" became manager of both houses.

Being somewhat out of practice, Mr. Halligan hired no less than nine men to assist him, but even at that he was nearly dead from the extra work which was piled on his shoulders in connection with his duties at the Universal exchange.

Practically all theatres in Troy, other than the first-run houses, are now down to a ten-cent admission, all starting from one owner dropping to this price, and another, fearful of losing business, following suit. The Astor, Rose, Colonial, King, Palace and Alpine are are all charging ten cents, while the Bijou and the Lansing, residential houses, are getting fifteen cents. The drop appears to be working out well, as the crowds at all houses appear to have picked up in remarkable shape.

It takes Marvin Kempner, manager of the Paramount exchange, in Albany, to put the pep into his salesmen. Mr. Kempner is out to go over the top in the sales contest ending September 29, and the talk he gave his men the other day was certainly a hummer.

It's rather nice to get news of Oscar Perrin, who is making a remarkable success these days in handling the Leland and the Clinton Square theatres in Albany. Mr. Perrin always thanks the newspaper men for dropping in, and the reporters reciprocate by giving Mr. Perrin plenty of space.

The opening of Fox's Monroe theatre on Friday night with "The Silent Command" as the feature picture and of "If Winter Comes," at the Harris Theatre on Saturday night, were important events of last week. The Monroe theatre, formerly Barbee's Loop theatre, had been entirely redecorated and refurnished during the summer months, and the large audience present at its opening was much pleased with the house, which has been greatly improved. The regular season of the Monroe opened on Saturday and got away to a good start and large audiences were flocking to see "The Silent Command" up to the present writing. The many theatre men in the invitation audience of Friday night predicted "The Silent Command" would be a big box office success. Under the plans perfected by Schiller, the 3-story office and store building on the Washington avenue frontage will be rushed to completion first. "Why Worry" Makes Critics Laugh

Lloyd's Latest Is Unanimously Approved By N. Y. Newspaper Reviewers

SO far as New York audiences are concerned, Harold Lloyd's mind may be at ease about "Why Worry." The Strand theatre's prerelease engagement, beginning on Sunday, Sept. 2, won this summing up statement in an extended review printed in the New York World:

"'Why Worry' is easily the funniest thing to be seen on a screen in town. It stood them up at the Strand yesterday, and yesterday was very much a day to be spent lying down at the seashore."

"The picture is filled with new and ludicrous stuff," says the Tribune. "When Harold sees a native come reeling toward him propelled by the fist of a rival, he thinks it is a new tango. . . . Another brand new situation occurs when Harold and his nurse and Colosso are being attacked in a fort and they have no firearms. Colosso lifts a huge pipe onto the top of the wall, nurse bangs many a mighty bang on a drum, Harold throws cocoanuts into Paradiso's army, and Colosso blows smoke from his cigar into the pipe for effect. There are plenty of cocoanuts, so the army thinks it is being fired on by cannon and flees."

"As an antidote for the blues, and a campaign aginst the 'Always Ailing League'," writes Helen Pollock in the Morning Telegraph, "the picture's service is great enough to warrant the erection of a statue to Mr. Lloyd by an appreciative public."

Evening World: "Harold Lloyd, always a prime favorite with us, is back again, this time at the Strand for a fortnight's stay in his latest farcofilm, 'Why Worry.' And take it from us, if you see Harold in this, his most uproarious farce for months, you won't have a cause in the world to worry."

"For the first anniversary of his debut in the field of feature length or six reel comedies," says the Evening Telegram. "Harold Lloyd has produced a new brand of comedy film, 'Why Worry?' at the Mark Strand theatre this week. Within the period of a year he has given such admirably fine works of laughter as 'Grandma's Boy,' 'Dr. Jack,' 'Safety Last' and 'Why Worry?' which is without question his greatest achievement to date."

"Oh, What a Sock Gloom Gets from Mr. Lloyd," is the two-column head for Irene's review in the New York Daily News, in which she uses these expressions: "We made note of exactly twenty-one shrieks, eighteen loud laughs, four screams, and an uncountable number of seemingly senseless giggles and gurgles."

It is a Carlos production for Truart.

Billboard Campaign For Preferred Fifteen

The Preferred Fifteen will be extensively advertised to the public through a billboard campaign as well as through national advertising, Al Lichtman, President of Preferred Pictures Corporation, announces.

The company has already taken over 250 special locations in New York and Brooklyn, and 150 in Chicago. These will be posted immediately with 24-sheets on "The Broken Wing," the first of the Preferred Fifteen, an adaptation of the stage play by Paul Dickey and Charles W. Goddard.

With all this in addition to the national advertising campaign, which reaches 15,000,000 readers a month, Preferred product will be as widely advertised.

Mammoth Sales Force to Get Under Way

Victor B. Fisher, general manager of the Mammoth Pictures Corporation, has announced that the next week will see the departure from New York of the members of his sales force Mr. Fisher may be among the number himself. A. Canter, assistant to Mr. Fisher, will carry the Mammoth proposition to some of the more important exchange centres.

Gene Marcus of the Twentieth Century exchange in Philadelphia is the first to sign up with the Mammoth organization.

Negotiations looking toward the closing of several more big territories are now under way.

Bryant Washburn Coming East For Conference

Adam Hull Shirk, scenario editor for Grand-Asher, will leave shortly for New York City. With him will come Bryant Washburn and Mabel Forrest. The purpose of the trip is a conference with F. Heath Cobb and Mindret Loeb of the New York Office, to determine what books shall be used in Bryant Washburn's 1924 program for Grand-Asher.

"Hunchback" Wins Highest Praise

N. Y. Reviewers Place it on Plane With Greatest Pictures Ever Produced

"THE HUNCHBACK OF NOTRE DAME" takes rank with the most highly praised pictures shown in New York City. Following its premiere at the Astor theatre the work of the entire cast and particularly that of Lon Chaney, together with the lavishness of the sets, the splendor of the production and the direction of the picture met with almost unanimous commendation.

Alan Dale, critic of the New York American, said:

"This much I'll say, and you can flaunt it before my eyes evermore: a more remarkable, epochal, unforgettable, haunting and obsessionable piece of eccentric, bizarre, cynical character acting than that contributed to 'The Hunchback of Notre Dame' at the Astor theatre by Lon Chaney, I have never seen on stage or screen."

Louella O. Parsons, motion picture editor of the Morning Telegraph, said:

"Carl Laemmle and R. H. Cochrane have made a production that both from an entertaining and an educational viewpoint, is all that one can ask—and that is big praise when so often attempts are made to do big things, and fail." She adds that she "is willing to wager that 'The Hunchback of Notre Dame' will help the exhibitor to pay his rent."

Robert E. Sherwood, N. Y. Herald, said:

"'The Hunchback of Notre Dame' has been produced on a spectacular scale. The settings are magnificent beyond words and stamped with an authenticity, a fidelity to detail, that sets them above anything that has been erected in Hollywood before."

The New York Mail: "From the point of spectacle the picture is as great a picture as has been produced in America. Indeed, it will stand as a monument to the ability of American directors to handle vast crowds of players realistically and artistically."

New York Sun and Globe:

"The scenes in which Lon Chaney figures alone are enough to make the picture a thing of beauty. Yet the producers have gone the whole hog in other directions. In pure physical beauty we think the picture ranks highest to date."

Don Allen, of the Evening World:

"The picture is worth the journey to the Astor theatre even if you have to commute from Australia. Carl Laemmle and his Universal outfit have kept every promise made for 'The Hunchback.'"

Robert Welsh in the New York Evening Telegram:

"Chaney's acting is a thing to be seen with breathless attention. His daring poses on the projecting gargoyles of the cathedral, his bold descent, stone by stone, of the front facade of the great church, his hazardous swinging on the great bells at the risk of his life, the gruesome scene of his castigation in the market place and the pathos of his final act as, dying, he rings his own death knell on his beloved bells, are features that will make 'The Hunchback of Notre Dame' a picture famous throughout the world."

"The White Rose" Pleases S. F. Critics

Griffith Production Is Warmly Commended Following Opening at Strand

'ONCE more David Wark Griffith has proved himself a miracle worker in the medium of the cinema in 'The White Rose,' which is filled with infinite beauty and poetry," said the critic for the San Francisco Chronicle when this United Artists release was shown at the Strand theatre, San Francisco. "He went to one of the most beautiful spots in America for his setting, the dreamy old bayous of Louisiana. Mae Marsh has made a complete 'come-back' in this picture and does supremely fine work."

"D. W. Griffith's 'The White Rose' is excellent screen material," said the reviewer for the San Francisco Call. "The work of Mae Marsh alone stamps it as a picture far above the average of the usual run of film plays. Don't make any mistake, 'The White Rose' is a film play entirely worth while in every particular."

"It is Mae Marsh who makes the picture 'The White Rose'," wrote the reviewer for the Journal. "She has lost none of her old art, her gift of looking as though the sorrows of the world were submerged in her eyes."

"For me the unlooked for joy in Mr. Griffith's 'The White Rose' was the acting of Mae Marsh as the flapper," said the criticism in the Examiner. "From an orphan girl just out of an orphanage Bessie Williams (Mae Marsh), in a year, proves a first class flapper, one from whom almost any girl outside the movies might obtain points on flapperism."

"'The White Rose' is a picture that will get you, and anyone who can sit through the picture without emotion would indeed be hard to impress," said the critic for the Bulletin.

Mrs. Reid to Tour on "Human Wreckage"

MRS. WALLACE REID announces in Los Angeles that she will tour three or four more cities in the interest of her war on narcotics before making her next screen vehicle. She has returned to her home for a month's rest and will return to the road in October. She will appear in Omaha, Minneapolis and Milwaukee.

Twentieth Century Paris on Metro Lot

A portion of twentieth century Paris has come to the Metro studio. It has been constructed on Lot 3, the same spot where only a few weeks ago stood the eighteenth century Paris of Rex Ingram's new monster production, "Scaramouche."

The new and elaborate settings are for "In Search of a Thrill," Viola Dana's newest Metro vehicle which Oscar Apfel is directing. Excellent reproductions have been made of two streets of the Montrouge district, unofficial headquarters of Apaches, and other questionable characters.

Miss Dana, who appears as an Apache in "In Search of a Thrill," heads a cast including Warner Baxter, Rosemary Theby, Walter Wills, Mabel Van Buren, Robert Schable, Billy Elmer and Templar Saxe. "In Search of a Thrill" is based upon Kate Jordan's "The Spirit of the Road."

Mabel Forrest Starred In New Production

Mabel Forrest, who was co-star with Bryant Washburn in two feature pictures for Grand-Asher, one of which has just been released and the other recently completed, will star in her own picture "The Satin Girl," a Ben Wilson production for Grand-Asher. The two she has just finished are "Mine to Keep" and "The Love Trap" and she is now working on "Other Men's Daughters," the third of the Ben Wilson productions.

Johnson Finishes Work on "Mail Man"

Having finished shooting "The Mail Man," at the Pat Powers studio, Emory Johnson has begun to personally supervise the cutting of the picture which is slated for late autumn release by Film Booking Offices. Johnson is also planing a trip to New York at the end of September to begin shooting his next F. B. O. production, many of the scenes of which will be taken in the East.

Montana Features Tie with Etiquette Book

THE Film Booking Offices this week announce that an advertising tie-up has been effected with the Funk Wagnalls Company on their book of etiquette and Bull Montana's latest feature release, "Breaking Into Society." The tie-up is of a national advertising nature and is intended as a contract. The campaign starts next month.

Work of Cutting "Long Live King" Rushed

The task of cutting and editing Jackie Coogan's initial Metro production, "Long Live the King," is keeping the Coogan forces on the job almost twenty-four hours a day. Irene Morra, head of the Coogan editorial department, and her assistants, are driving ahead with all possible speed to comply with urgent requests from Metro officials at the home office. Jack Coogan, senior, is also very much in evidence supervising the entire editing of the picture.

Plans are now being perfected for Jackie's second picture on the Metro contract, the prelude to which was the payment of the famous half-million dollar bonus. Three stories are under consideration. While it has virtually been decided to do Ouida's famous childhood classic, "A Dog of Flanders," it will possibly be filmed at a later date because it will be necessary to take Jackie to Holland for the entire production.

The Coogan agents in New York are reported to be negotiating with Mary Roberts Rinehart for an original screen story for Jackie.

"Jealous Fools" Release Due Next Month

Maurice Tourneur's newest production, "Jealous Fools," is now half finished and will be ready for First National release in another month. The production marks Mr. Tourneur's first original script for the screen in years.

Arrangements are now being completed for the staging of a series of important scenes along the waterfront of San Francisco, and the entire company will leave for the North shortly. Every effort will be made by the producer to keep this picturization down to the popular footage of six reels, in accordance with the policy of M. C. Levee, producer of Tourneur pictures.

In the cast are Jane Novak, Earle Williams, Bull Montana, Ben Alexander, Marion Feducha and George Siegman.

Production Under Way on "Three Weeks"

All advance preparations have been completed by Goldwyn and actual production of Elinor Glyn's "Three Weeks" is expected to start this week. Conrad Nagel and Aileen Pringle play the leading roles. Alan Crosland is directing.

"Scaramouche" Title Highly Valued

Book Has Had Extremely Wide Circulation Through Europe and America

WHAT is considered one of the greatest titles ever selected for a moving picture is that of "Scaramouche," which already has gone the length and breadth of this country as the name of Rex Ingram's latest and most ambitious production for Metro.

Its greatest value lies in the fact that the book from which the picture is taken has, under the same name, circulated through Europe and this country for the past two years, since its publication in millions of copies, it is claimed. It is now in its fifteenth printing and reports from libraries and booksellers all over the world rate it as among the biggest sellers that has caught the fancy of the reading world in the past several decades. "Scaramouche," from the moment it left its publisher, became a veritable rage and has made its author, Rafael Sabatini, both famous and rich and has earned for him the title of "the modern Dumas."

When the production of the picture was first under consideration by Metro, it is said that a change of name was contemplated. But immediately, protests from all over the country and even from abroad began to pour into the Metro offices with the result that the several hundred titles under consideration were entirely discarded and the book title definitely set as the title of the picture.

"Scaramouche" is a Rex Ingram production for Metro, by arrangement with Charles L. Wagner. It was adapted to the screen by Willis Goldbeck and photographed by John F. Seitz.

Letter Carriers Aid "Loyal Lives"

Exceptional Exploitation Co-operation Is Extended on Vitagraph Special

"LOYAL LIVES," Whitman Bennett's super feature, written around the life of post office employees, is receiving exceptional exploitation co-operation from the postmasters and letter carriers in various cities. The first run in Detroit was most successful, and credit for this is in no small way due to the postal employees.

Through the Vitagraph exchanges Mr. Bennett is supplying exhibitors in cities of more than 20,000 with exceptional film with which to open the picture. This opening is a dedication of "Loyal Lives" through the postmaster and post office employees of each city, and shows a picture of the postmaster. Stock Favorite in Heavy Role with Sale

ROBERT BENTLEY, popular stock leading man, who just closed a season at the Alhambra Theatre, New York City, plays the heavy role in C. C. Burr's initial Charles "Chic" Sale feature, which Associated Exhibitors will distribute.

C. B. C. Exploitation Is Near Completion

Exploitation accessories, press books, novelties and all other details of the campaign which will accompany the new C. B. C. lecture, "Forgive and Forget," are almost completed and will be ready by the time the feature is released, it is announced.

C. B. C. has established a system of co-operation with the Coast production center, whereby all details that can be of any possible help in expediting the planning of the campaign in the East, are relayed to the New York offices immediately. There a special corps of artists and a new press book department has been installed, which so plans the work of laying out campaigns that everything will be in complete readiness for every one of the features on the C. B. C. schedule about a week before the pictures go to the franchise holders for release.

"Silent Command" Wins N. Y. Approval

"The Silent Command," the Fox special, which has been commended by Government officials, had its premiere at the Central theatre, New York, September 3, and the endorsement of newspaper reviewers was added to the many previous flattering criticisms.

Following are some of the criticisms of the reviewers:

The Evening Mail—"The glory of this picture is the glory of the Navy—a fine patriotism mixed with stirring adventure. Its views on shipboard, at Annapolis at graduation time and of the fleet in the Panama Canal are beautiful, and at the same time authentic."

The Telegram—"The theme is a simple one, but there are many thrilling moments in which Edmund Lowe not only excels as a two-fisted fighter but as swimmer in mountainous seas."

The Commercial Bulletin—"Glorifying the traditions and esprit de corps of the United States Navy is 'The Silent Command' which may be classed as the 'noisiest' silent drama that has ever reached Broadway."

Preferred Photographer Is Prize Winner

Karl Struss, photographer of the Gasnier productions, which are released as Preferred Pictures, has just won several notable prizes for his portrait photography. At the American Photographers' Annual Competition in Boston, he was a prize winner, and he took second prize at the exhibition held recently in Seattle by the Frederick and Nelson Company.

Mr. Struss spent three years with Cecil B. DeMille before going over to Preferred. He has photographed all of Gasnier's Preferred Pictures, including "Rich Men's Wives," "Thorns and Orange Blossoms," "The Hero," "Poor Men's Wives," "Daughters of the Rich," and "Mothers-in-Law." He is now engaged on "Maytime," on which work was started last week at the B. P. Schulberg studios.

Dillon Shooting "Drums of Jeopardy" Scenes

Edward Dillon, directing Harold MacGrath's story, "The Drums of Jeopardy" for Truart release, is engaged in shooting the first sequence of the play, which takes place in a palace in Russia. The action in this part of the story centers about the character, which is being portrayed by Wallace Beery.

The story jumps from Russia to New York, and Elaine Hammerstein, about whom the story revolves in New York, is now on her way to the Coast, her presence not being required in the first sequence of the story.

The three other principal members of the cast will be selected from those under consideration immediately upon Miss Hammerstein's arrival.

New Talent in Preferred Feature

Schulberg Will Introduce New Faces in Coming Production of "Maytime"

"THE public wants new faces. The producer who wants to keep his pictures up to standard must be continually on the lookout for new talent, and encourage it when he finds it. The extra girls of today may be the stars of tomorrow. The man who can pick those stars, today, before they get established, and develop them, is just that far ahead of the game, and need have no fear of his public."

So says B. P. Schulberg, producer of Preferred pictures. That he believes what he preaches is evidenced by the cast of "Maytime," which is now being made at the Schulberg studios under the direction of Gasnier. Fifteen actresses, practically unknown to the public a year ago, will have important roles in this picturization of Rida Johnson Young's stage play.

The principal role, originally enacted by Peggy Wood on the New York stage, will be carried to the screen by Ethel Shannon, whom Mr. Schulberg claimed as his own discovery when he picked her from a bevy of extras to do a minor bit in "The Hero" last winter. Another important part has been given Clara Bow, the eighteen year old actress who, though a recent entry into film work, made something like a sensation as the stowaway in Elmer Clifton's whaling picture, "Down to the Sea in Ships."

The feminine charcterization third in importance in Rida Johnson Young's play has been entrusted to Netta Westcott. Miss Westcott, who is well known on the English stage, is another distinctly new face, as this is her first film appearance, resulting from a picture offer made by Al Lichtman, president of Preferred, during a recent business trip in London.

Twelve other girls unfamiliar to even the most seasoned fan, will be given a chance in "Maytime" to prove their abilities. These comprise the beauty dozen recently picked as "Hollywood's fairest," by a group of representative picture men interested in the search for new screen personalities.

"If Winter Comes" Wins Approval

New York Reviewers Lavish With Praise For Fox Adaptation of Story

THE long-heralded Fox screen version of the all-popular A. S. M. Hutchinson story, "If Winter Comes," directed by Harry Millarde, had its premiere at the Times Square theatre, New York, in September, and the criticisms of the newspaper reviewers would warrant the belief that the picture will be even more popular than the book. The reviews were most flattering in each instance.

Excerpts from them follow:

Harriette Underhill, in the Tribune—"One such perfect picture is all the public can expect one man to give to the world. . . . It is without exception the most engrossing screen drama we have seen in at least a year. . . . 'If Winter Comes' is one of the most touchingly beautiful things that has ever delighted our soul via the screen."

The Sun and Globe—"'If Winter Comes,' in cinema shape, seems to have come to town for the autumn, winter, spring and probably a few more seasons, to judge by its reverent reception at the opening last night. . . . There is a spiritual quality about Percy Marmont's work."

The Mail—"It is as good as the book, and in all probability, will prove better."

The Morning World—"The production is leagues ahead of the nine hundred and ninety films that unreel their varying fictions for the public. . . . The cast is the most capable that has presented a picture on Broadway in a long time."

The Times—"It is a faithfully-produced drama. . . . Percy Marmont has shown wonderful patience, a love of acting and a resolution to make his Sabre as true as any man could. His is really a remarkable performance."

The Herald—"The story is extremely powerful and it is eloquently expressed by Percy Marmont."

The Morning Telegraph—"The characters are all drawn with the finesse of an etching. . . Percy Marmont lifts 'If Winter Comes' far above the scale. It is a beautiful thing."

"Wild Oranges" Will Be Made in Georgia

After searching the southern part of California by motor boat, motor car and by airplane, Director King Vidor could find no swampy land of the kind demanded by the Joseph Hergesheimer novel, "Wild Oranges," which will be his next Goldwyn picture. So he will go to the swamp lands of Georgia on "location."

The youthful director plans to penetrate the wildest section of this desolate swampland in order to get the weird and eerie settings demanded by the Hergesheimer story. All of the action takes place in this swampland or on board a ship just off the coast.

The director has completed the script of "Wild Oranges" and the cast is now being selected.

Russell Griffin Praised In Burr Picture

C. C. Burr's screen "find," Little Russell Griffin, has been accorded high acting honors for his work in the Edgar Lewis production, "You Are Guilty."

"The honors of the picture are in a large measure stolen by little Russell Griffin, who reveals here a winning personality and a great histrionic consciousness. He enters thoroughly into the spirit of the piece and enlivens it materially."

"In spite of the fame of the other members of the cast, Director Lewis would have made no mistake had he elevated this wonderful Griffin youngster to stardom," says John Spargo, in the Exhibitor's Herald.

Doris Kenyon, James Kirkwood, Mary Carr, Robert Edeson and Edmund Breese are other leading members of the cast of C. C. Burr's presentation, "You Are Guilty."

"Where North Begins" Scores on Coast

Beginning the third successful week of its engagement at the Alhambra theatre, Los Angeles, "Where the North Begins," the Warner Brothers picture featuring Rin-Tin-Tin, the famous German police dog and world war hero, is breaking all box-office records for attendance; according to Harry M. Warner, who is at present at the organization's west coast studios.

The original engagement was merely for a week's run, but its success was so overwhelming that the management decided to hold it over for a second week. The second week was even bigger than the first, it is said, and as a result it is now in its third week at the Alhambra.

Weber, North Accessories Meet Approval

That exhibitors are taking full advantage of the accessories on "Marriage Morals" and "Don't Marry for Money," the new L. Lawrence Weber and Bobby North productions, is evidenced by the repeat orders for advertising sales materials being received from the exchanges.

Masterpiece Film Attractions of Philadelphia, and Bond Photoplays of Buffalo and Albany, have already placed their third orders each on both productions it is said. In addition, Masterpiece has ordered two extra prints of both "Marriage Morals" and "Don't Marry for Money."

Seastrom Finishes First For Goldwyn

Victor Seastrom has completed his first Goldwyn picture, "The Judge and the Woman" from Sir Hall Caine's latest novel, "The Master of Man." The picture is now being edited. In the cast are Mae Busch, Conrad Nagel, Patsy Ruth Miller, Hobart Bosworth, Aileen Pringle, DeWitt Jennings and Evelyn Selbe.

Mr. Seastrom is now enjoying a short rest following the strenuous work of production.

Metro Tieup With Arms Company Effective

One of the most effective National tieups inaugurated between a motion picture producing organization and a world known mercantile house was successfully brought about through the efforts of Bert B. Perkins, manager of exploitation for Metro and Peter P. Carney, chief of the publicity division of Winchester Repeating Arms Co.

This co-operative deal was consummated simultaneously with the releasing by Metro of Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson's picture, "Trailing African Wild Animals." A series of special exploitation features tieing up the nationally known Winchester big game guns and ammunition with the motion picture were devised and a special lineup of advertising accessories and window trim were made up to put this stunt across.

Jazz A-plenty in "Three O'Clock in Morning"

Color and jazz are said to abound in "Three O'Clock in the Morning," the attraction starring Constance Binney, which has just been completed for Associated Exhibitors. Combined with these is a wealth of picturesque exteriors and alluring sets.

Adapted from the Mann Page-Gerald Duffy big seller, "Clipped Wings," and following closely the lines of the novel, "Three O'Clock in the Morning" tells an appealing human story, and presents, according to a statement by Associated, an admixture of romance and comedy that seems to assure its popular reception by exhibitors and audiences.

"Day of Faith" Reaches Cutting Room

"The Day of Faith," from Arthur Somers Roche's novel, has been completed by Director Tod Browning and is now in the Goldwyn cutting room.

Paramount Builds Mid-West Street

Bring West to Long Island for Glenn-Hunter in "West of the Water Tower"

OUT at the Paramount Long Island studio fifty carpenters are at work in the lot building the main street of Junction City, the mythical mid-western town which is the locale for "West of the Water Tower," the anonymous novel of small-town life which is being produced as a picture, with Glenn Hunter starring.

Hunter could not go on location to a small town because he is playing every night at the Cort theatre in "Merton of the Movies," so it was necessary for the producers to bring the town to him.

The street, which is more than 200 yards long, will show the Pastime Pool Hall, the Poland China Hog Association headquarters, the Commercial House, the drug store, and other familiar stores and shops that make up the main street of a small middle western town. A concrete sidewalk is being laid and water plugs and white-way electric light poles are being set by electricians.

When the set is completed it will function just as every well regulated main street functions, and the water tower will loom in the distance. The tower, too, will have to be built by the studio carpenters because there isn't a small-town water tower of that character in the environs of New York City.

Telegrams Laud "Spanish Dancer"

Screen Notables of Selected Audience Enthuse Following Initial Showing

ENTHUSIASTIC praise for Herbert Brenon's Parmount picture, "The Spanish Dancer," starring Pola Negri was the keynote of twenty-three telegrams received this week by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, following a special showing of the picture Saturday night to a selected audience in Hollywood.

That "The Spanish Dancer" was one of the most lavish, thrilling and picturesque productions ever made by Paramount was the gist of telegrams from Pola Negri, Hector Turnbull, Sid Grauman, Charles Eyton, William de Mille and others.

Pola Negri telegraphed as follows:

"Just saw 'The Spanish Dancer' and cannot thank you and Mr. Brenon enough for wonderful production. Mr. Brenon has made one of most beautiful and dramatic pictures I have ever seen and I am sincerely grateful."

Sid Grauman wired:

"When can I get 'The Spanish Dancer?' Just saw it at studio and think it is biggest artistic and box offices success. Reminds me of 'Three Musketeers' in picturesquesness of settings, warmth of color and drama of action. Congratulations to you and Herbert Brenon. It is a fine job well done."

Hector Turnbull telegraphed:

"Cannot tell you how thrilled I was at 'The Spanish Dancer.' Congratulations to you and Herbert Brenon. This picture, with its magnificent settings, its color, its splendid acting, and its dramatic action, will prove one of the sensations of the year. Miss Negri wonderful. Brenon has caught the Negri of 'Passion' and 'Gypsy Blood.' Moreno will be a revelation and the rest of the cast is great. Brenon's directing is finest I have seen in long time and stamps him as one of foremost directors in profession. 'The Spanish Dancer' is knockout if there ever was one."

Warner Product Sold for New England States

William D. Shapiro, of the Franklin Film Company, Boston, the Warner Brothers' franchise holder in New England, and first franchise holder to sign up for the new Warner product, visited the New York office of the Warner Brothers last week bringing important contracts for the new season. The contracts called for the playing of the entire forthcoming output of the Warner Studio for 1923-24 throughout the New England States.

New Warner Clip Sheet Offers Service

A new clip-sheet makes its appearance in the motion picture industry this week entitled "Studio Starlights." This was created by the Publicity Department of the Warner Brothers to supply the newspapers of the country with syndicate stories and special articles that will interest motion picture editors on all publications.

Studio Starlights will contain authentic interviews and articles written by the Warner stars, producers, directors and people connected with the different phases of the organization. Special stories that appeal to Sunday editors will run from time to time with mats from one column up to five columns, supplied free to the publications desiring this service. Herbert Crooker is the editor of this sheet.

Paramount Company Off For Arizona

A company of forty-one people left Los Angeles this week for Arizona, where scenes for "The Call of the Canyon," a Zane Grey production, will be filmed at locations in the vicinity of Flagstaff described in Mr. Grey's novel.

During the present journey, a small prospector's cabin thirty miles from Flagstaff will be used as headquarters in filming some of the scenes.

The featured players in the production are Richard Dix, Lois Wilson and Estelle Taylor. Heading the supporting cast are Noah Beery, Ricardo Cortez and Charles Ogle. The picture is being directed by Victor Fleming.

Richard Talmadge's First For Truart Completed

The first Richard Talmadge production to be offered under Truart release, which was produced by Carlos Productions from the novel "Fast Freight," has been completed and is on its way East to the home office of Truart.

Talmadge will make four productions for Truart during the 1923-24 season to be franchised on the independent market and three additional stories by nationally-known authors are under consideration, which will be announced shortly as the basis of next productions of this series.

Hughes Shooting "Law Against Law"

Rupert Hughes has finished location scenes of his new picture, tentatively titled "Law Against Law" and is now shooting at the Goldwyn studio. He will finish the production within two weeks.

"White Rose" Held Over In N. Y. and S. F.

Proving so popular that ticket selling had to be stopped on more than one occasion, D. W. Griffith's "The White Rose," was held over for a second week at the Strand theatre, New York, and played to capacity audiences nearly every day of the two weeks' run, according to United Artists.

Opening to the biggest business in more than a year, breaking all attendance and receipts records, and going into a third week of an engagement at the Strand theatre, San Francisco—this is the report that comes to Hiram Abrahams of United Artists Corporation on D. W. Griffith's "The White Rose," now showing at the San Francisco Strand.

Jack Pickford Will Keep Busy Producing

On completion of his picture "Valley of the Wolf," which he plans to finish for fall release through Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation, Jack Pickford expects to start production immediately on another new feature. No title has yet been decided on.

Marion Jackson, who wrote the continuity for "Valley of the Wolf," probably will prepare the script for the next new Jack Pickford production.

Rowland Enthuses Over Features

First National Chief Commends Production Efficiency of Coast Forces

WORK was completed this week on four First National productions at the United studios, the final editing and titling being rushed in order to screen them for R. A. Rowland, First National's general manager, who arrived recently from New York. They are Edwin Carewe's "The Bad Man," "Flaming Youth," with Colleen Moore; "Ponjola," Cynthia Stockley's novel, and "Thundergate," a Chinese-American drama with a featured cast.

According to Mr. Rowland no four successive pictures of any one company have maintained the standard of excellence which is found in this quartet of First National pictures. "The organization of the production forces of First National, developed by Production Manager Earl J. Hudson, now rivals any in the West Coast," wired Mr. Rowland, "and it is the systematized attention to detail that, in my opinion, is partly responsible for the high standard which is being maintained, not for one or two pictures, but indefinitely.

"To produce one box office knockout a season is not unusual. It may be due entirely to the genius of one individual director or star. But the aim of every producer is not an occasional 'big time' picture, but a consistent run of them and no matter how masterful the director, or how excellent the cast or the story, unless the production organization, working in the background, is running smoothly, there is danger of a slip-up.

"I do not, of course, mean to infer that mediocre talent can ever produce big pictures, even with every production facility. The picture can be no bigger than its cast, director and story. Provide these three elements and then add an efficient, far-sighted production policy and the result is dramatic perfection and decided commercial success.

"In 'The Bad Man,' Edwin Carewe has produced the best picture of his career and one of the finest comedy dramas ever made. It proves once more that the successful stage play will become a successful picture if placed in the hands of a director thoroughly conversant with his art. Without a doubt Carewe has exceeded his past two successes, 'Mighty Lak' a Rose', and 'The Girl of the Golden West.'

"'Flaming Youth,' despite my great expectations proved a revelation. This startling novel of excitement-living youth, written by Warner Fabian and one of the best sellers of fiction, has been transferred to the screen by John Francis Dillon in such a way that it is absolute box office insurance to the exhibitor. By every known standard 'Flaming Youth' is an audience picture. Colleen Moore's performance, different from all her previous roles, is among the most delightful things I have ever seen on the screen.

"Miss Breamer's performance and that of Owen Moore in 'Thundergate' will prove to be two of the finest screen characterizations of the season. 'Thundergate' is a corking melodrama adapted from Sidney Herschal Small's novel, 'The Lord of Thundergate,' and directed by Joseph DeGrasse.

"Of 'Ponjola' I can only say that it is as good as the book, which is now regarded as Cynthia Stockley's greatest novel. Its cast, consisting of Anna Q. Nilsson, James Kirkwood, Tully Marshall, Joseph Kilgour and Ruth Clifford, gives a splendid performance and Donald Crisp's direction is splendid."

"Pioneer Trails" Prints Being Shipped

"Pioneer Trails," the Vitagraph special, has been finally titled and edited by C. Graham Baker and Don Bartlett, and prints are being shipped to Vitagraph branches.

This super feature, which was directed by David Smith, and which has an all-star cast headed by Cullen Landis and Alice Calhoun, will be seen at a leading Broadway theatre soon. Those who have seen the picture in its final form, say that it is the greatest production ever made by David Smith, who has to his credit such successes as "Masters of Men," "The Ninety and Nine," "Black Beauty" and "The Courage of Marge O'Doone."

Vignola Spends Week In Taking Night Scenes

Night was turned into day all of last week at the Cosmopolitan studio in New York, when Director Robert G. Vignola and his entire company, including several hundred extras, engaged in taking night scenes for his forthcoming production, "Yolanda."

This sequence, one of the most important in the whole picture, was taken in a set that is said to be the largest ever built in the East, a huge castle of mediaeval France. The work required an entire week of night "shooting," which sets a record for Mr. Vignola for continuous night work. Owing to the magnitude of the scenes and the large number of players used, Mr. Vignola utilized the services of several extra cameramen and assistants in addition to his regular assistant, Phil Carle.

Extensive Campaign For "Drivin' Fool"

Preparations for an extensive advertising and exploitation campaign are now well under way on the Hodkinson feature, "The Drivin' Fool," starring Wally Van.

A strong tie-up with the Police Departments, Public Safety Commissions and Civic heads, encouraging careful driving among motorists, is the principal feature of the campaign from which many minor ideas will derive.

The propoganda campaign is nation-wide in scope and so planned that exhibitors will be able to localize it when they play the picture.

Mirror Mosaic Setting In Burr Feature

C. C. Burr's first Constance Binney starring vehicle has a "Mirror Mosaic" setting brilliantly studded with bits of mirror glass. To be assured of having a novel and elaborate setting in his first Associated Exhibitors release, Mr. Burr engaged Alex Hall, a feature effect man from Los Angeles, to design and execute the effects. This spectacular setting represents a Cafe Grotesque, wherein gay revels take place and the star does a solo dance.

Jackie Coogan Popular in Far East

Several facts of interest have been brought to light by a check of box office receipts and fan mail at the Jackie Coogan offices. It shows for instance, that Jackie is a tremendous drawing card in the Far East and that the famous starlet has a wide following there.

In Japan, during the Doya or extreme hot weather season, one of Jackie's pictures played to capacity business at Nippon's newest movie emporium, a feat unprecedented in the annals of the motion picture since its introduction in that land, it is claimed.

From Bombay, India, comes word of Jackie's triumph. The manager of the Royal Empire theatre of Bombay cabled Jack Coogan, senior, asking for an opportunity of being the first in his province to view "Long Live the King," Jackie's initial production for Metro.

N. Y. Likes Mary Pickford Grown Up

Unanimous Approval of Critics and Public Is Bestowed Upon "Rosita"

That Mary Pickford grown up portraying a highly emotional role is going to be even more popular with the motion picture public as a whole than in her little girl and golden curl characterizations is indicated by the reception given her new cinema offering, "Rosita," which had its premiere showing at the Lyric theatre, New York, on Labor Day evening.

"Rosita" was unfolded before a typical first-night audience at the Lyric, where society, stage and screen were presented and from each of these three groups there was unstinted appreciation, praise and admiration. Newspaper critics had been given an opportunity to view Miss Pickford's latest and most ambitious screen offering at a private pre-view at the Ritz hotel, and were unanimous in their emphatic commendation of Miss Pickford's extreme artistry, Ernest Lubitsch's direction and the exceptionally beautiful photography.

"Nothing more delightfully charming than Mary Pickford's new picture, 'Rosita,' has been seen on the screen for some time," said the critic for the New York Times. "The combination of Edward Knoblock, Ernest Lubitsch and Mary Pickford is a difficult one to equal. 'Exquisite' is an adjective that fits this film as well as any."

"Mary Pickford in her new photoplay, 'Rosita,' has a vehicle worthy of her talents," said the New York American critic. "Few, if any, of her admirers will regret that she has graduated from the Pollyanna class and stepped into the long skirts of Rosita. In her beautifully mounted picture play of that name Miss Pickford makes it seem that she has been hiding a mature dramatic talent within her childish golden curls. 'Rosita' is magnificently mounted and admirably cast."

"After seeing 'Rosita' we've decided that Mary Pickford is quite capable of growing up," said the reviewer for the New York Daily News. "We enjoyed her characterization because the dainty blonde star, even as a grown-up Spanish street singer, is enabled to show her pretty ways and her faculty for doing what is to be done in the proper time and place."

"After seeing 'Rosita,' in which Mary Pickford plays for the first time a grown-up woman, there was a feeling that she had been defrauding the public of its rights by confining her efforts to child roles," said Louella Parsons in the Morning Telegraph. "We were unprepared to find in 'Rosita' one of this year's greatest productions and the finest thing Mary Pickford has ever done."

"The performance of Mary Pickford in 'Rosita' is, we think, an exceptionally brilliant one," said Harriette Underhill in the New York Tribune. "Perfection is attained in many directions. Ernest Lubitsch directed and he has put into the picture all of the charm, the spirit, and 'community acting' which has made him world-famed."

"Mary Pickford has given a right sweet and artistic performance in 'Rosita,' a picture which is good entertainment," said Quinn Martin, in the New York World.

"'Rosita' is thoroughly enjoyable and we wouldn't have missed it for worlds," said Don Allen in the Evening World. "The story is gripping and splendidly cast, directed and photographed."

"You'll wait a long, long time before you see a better picture than 'Rosita,'" said the critic for the Evening Telegram. "Here is a charming story full of romance and humor, which is told with unfaltering movement."

"Every foot of 'Rosita,' Mary Pickford's new production, is a delight to the eye," wrote the reviewer for the Evening Journal. "Acting, costumes, settings and photography combine to present a glowing stream of radiant beauty."

Lillian Gale Scores Big Hit in Serial

Brilliant Future in Character Work Predicted for Her by Director

LILLIAN GALE, formerly a member of the Motion Picture News staff, has played her first big character role in the George B. Seitz ten episode Pathe serial, "The Way of a Man," directed and adapted by Mr. Seitz from the novel written by Emerson Hough. C. W. Patton produced the serial, which is expected to be released early this fall.

Despite the fact that Miss Gale is a decidedly young lady, Mr. Seitz cast her in the role of Mandy McGovern, a hardened plainswoman of about seventy years. What convinced Seitz that Miss Gale could capably handle the role were a number of photographs revealing the young lady in a number of underworld character poses. In commenting on the first camera work of Miss Gale, Seitz said:

"She has succeeded admirably, and took direction like a duck takes to water. Considering that the part is the first in her picture career, she has done remarkable work. And I am of the firm conviction that with a little more training she will be one of the best character women in the business."

The first scenes in which Miss Gale portrayed her role were taken in the Arizona desert. As a plainswoman she drives a covered wagon, handles a shotgun and revolver with ease and finesse. All of which is a far cry from a typewriter in the News office to the grease paint of a motion picture actress.

On the strength of her remarkable characterization, Miss Gale has been offered a prominent part in a picture to be made by a well known director.

Metro Starts Plans for "Living Past"

ARRANGEMENTS are now under headway in the Metro organization for the beginning of production on "The Living Past," a screen transcription of William J. Locke's novel, "The Tale of Triona."

Metro Issues Press Sheet For "Three Ages"

Metro has issued an exceedingly helpful press sheet for Buster Keaton's initial feature length comedy, "Three Ages." An unusually comprehensive line of exploitation, publicity and advertising has been prepared for this six-reel feature of Buster's, material that should be of decided value to all exhibitors.

A novelty that should do much to acquaint the public with "Three Ages" is a Keaton hat, designed after the famous pancake headgear of the Metro comedian. Keaton's name, the title of the picture and a space for theatre imprint appear on the top and band.

Other exploitation suggestions for "Three Ages" include merchant tie-ups, lobby ballyhoo, window displays, unique prologue, cartoon, poster cut-outs and the description of a complete campaign already carried out by the Warfield theatre of San Francisco.

Campaign Book Ready For "Destroying Angel"

A new style campaign book, carrying everything, seemingly, an exhibitor could require, from puzzle cards and lobby hangers to unique advertising stunts, has been issued by Associated Exhibitors for its recent release, Leah Baird in "The Destroying Angel," and is now being distributed by the sales representatives of that organization. The book is the work of Frank C. Payne, veteran theatrical and newspaper man, now Miss Baird's special publicity director in New York.

Discussion on Lighting Methods for Studios

Various Limitations of Present System Brought Forth With Suggestions for Changes.

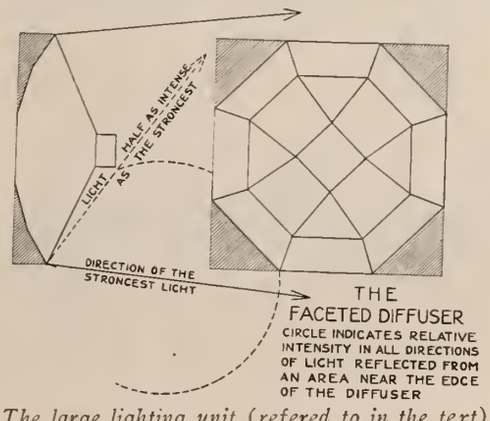
By Douglas E. Brown

Paper Before a Sectional Joint Meeting of the S. M. P. E. and Motion Picture Directors' Association

IT is reasonable to believe that advancements will be made over present day methods and equipment used for lighting in studios. Changes do not necessarily need be on radically different lines than those of the present. However, it is always of interest to learn of the various devices and lines of endeavor followed by those who are working for the advancement of studio lighting, both in regards to methods and equipment.

On this page is presented an article by Douglas Brown who has spent considerable time studying the problems of studio lighting. Mr. Brown advances ideas that undoubtedly will be found of interest to many of our readers.

THE director works in a medium called light. In the studio he may appear to be an architect, or a stage manager, but he is neither of these. What seem to be the great structures of an architect are screens, designed to reflect interesting light patterns into the eyes of an audience. These costumed, painted actors move about at his bidding, so that shifting fingers of light may work above the heads of people in darkened theatres and tell an acceptable story.



What is the least control of this medium that the director may reasonably ask the studio to place at his disposal? That when he stands near the camera he shall be able to paint the set with light until it looks right and that when it looks right he shall know exactly, to the least brush stroke of light, how it would look on the screen at the theatre.

There are in nature four sorts of light—the hard light of the sun, and the soft light of the sky, and the light reflected from objects, and the light of fires. These sorts of light have this in common—direction. They produce shadows and high lights. Light comes from somewhere; it moves in a straight line until it hits something. So in the studio it will be generally desirable to have most of the harder light come from one direction, and to have the softer light appear to be reflected from walls or other objects which one would naturally suppose illuminated by the hard primary light. The masses of heavier shadow may then be modified at will by throwing diffused light into them. However, any artist will develop his own special technique in the use of the lighting instrument, once it is made convenient to handle.

Evidently the studio requires very powerful lights, for the director ought to be able to light an entire set from one source, so extreme a limitation of the lighting is, in rare instances, extremely effective. There was, for example, the "Dance Macabre," a short subject shown at the Rialto last August, of which in criticism was said "the photography is exquisite." Francis Brugiere, who superintended the lighting, tells me that they did it with a single arc and a reflecting screen.

The author has indicated in a previous paper, "Transactions, S. M. P. E.," Volume XVI., that a million candle power might be required for this purpose. Only the high intensity arc, among commercially available sources, can approach this power. A sufficiently insistent demand from the studios, however, could produce arc lights and tungsten lights of upwards of a million candle power. Such powerful lights would be easier on the eyes than the great number of smaller ones now used to supply an equal amount of illumination, for the brightness would be no greater, and one would less often be required to look directly into the light.

Kleig eyes need never occur. The studio may be made more comfortable to work in than any outside location. Kleig eyes are caused by an improper use of arc lights, and especially by the mistaken and very dangerous practice of using bare, unscreened high intensity arcs. Kleig eye is a deep "sunburn" of the cornea, that transparent, celluloid-like shell which covers the front surface of the eyeball. The use of the cornea is to absorb the dangerous ultra-violet energy which exists in the light of the sun and keep it out of the delicate interior of the eye. But the cornea is not celluloid, it is living tissue. When the radiant energy from a bare arc light falls upon the cornea the ultra-violet energy which that shell is called upon to absorb is greater in amount, and of a far more penetrating and intense kind, than is sunlight. The cornea is overtaxed, bruised and burnt, becomes inflamed and swells. Then the whole eye is thrown into a fever, and the tear ducts may be closed up so that the eyelid rasps over the protruded eye.

The large lighting unit (refered to in the text) for studio use

This disease, then, should be prevented by putting a sort of artificial cornea in front of every kind of arc light. A sufficient protection for the actors' eyes would be a flint glass door in front of every light box to cut off dangerous energy. Flint glass is a more effective shield against ultra-violet energy than crown glass, but it is a trifle less transparent. A corium glass, which would have to be made to special order for the studios could be had as transparent as crown glass, and even better as an eyeshield than flint glass. The light lost in passing through a sheet of this glass a quarter of an inch thick would be much less than is lost in passing through the camera lens, and the dangerous energy removed would be of a kind that never gets through the lens into the interior of the camera, for it is filtered out by the flint glass of the anastigmat.

A half dozen powerful lights, of varying sizes, ought to be sufficient for the photography of any ordinary scene within the studio.

Soft lights, as directional as you please, may be provided by mounting an arc light to face into flat reflectors, painted with a lithophone paint to protect the eyes against ultra-violet energy, and yet reflected all the light. One of such design, devised by P. R. Bassett (see illustration), is a shallow octagonal dish, eight feet across, faceted like the impression a cut diamond might make in clay. Standing in the set, and looking into this reflector, you see fifty square feet of glowing surface, and the set will be brilliantly illuminated as though the bare arc had been used, and quite without sharp shadow edges. Light and reflector are mounted on a light wheeled frame, so that the apparatus may be shoved around anywhere like a 17-tube mercury arc bank, and it will produce five times as much light as the 17-tube bank. Very powerful soft light coming from one direction produces a natural, unforced illusion of depth, roundness and solidity in the picture on the screen.

An interesting feeling of counterpoint can be had if the light is varied in harmony with the tempo of the action, or to indicate the passage of time, or the gathering of storms. Imagine a picture: Certain persons in a room, and then the knocking on the door—it is danger. Might one not smoothly and with rapidity build up a sharper lighting, still logical, still apparently proceeding from the lamps upon the table, to show how a room

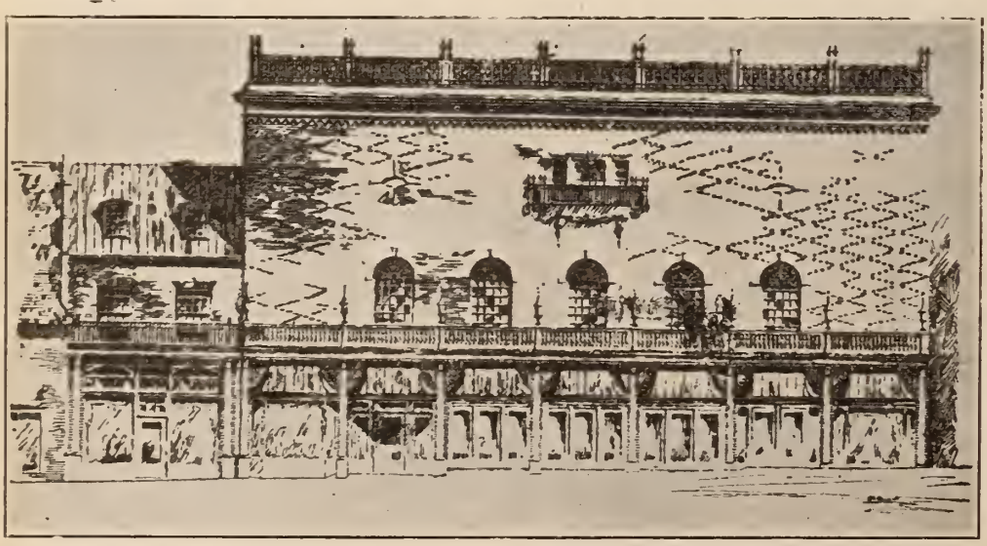
Many Inducements Offered at Ottawa for S. M. P. E. Convention

JUDGING from the interest already aroused in connection with the fall meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, the October gathering to be held at Ottawa, Canada, the capital city of the Dominion of Canada, will be a record-breaking one in point of attendance.

The arrangement committee, of which Raymond S. Peck, director of the Canadian Government Motion Picture Bureau, is the chairman, is determined to make the Ottawa convention a huge success. Ottawa boasts of one of the most modern and beautiful hotels on the North American continent—the Chateau Laurier, which is operated by the Canadian National Railways. The Chateau is situated in beautiful Major's Hill Park—in the heart of the city and will make ideal convention headquarters.

The papers committee is also preparing a programme that no member of the society can afford to miss.



The City of Ottawa has a population of 150,000 and occupies a commanding position on the high cliffs overlooking the Ottawa River and is known throughout the world for its charm and beauty. Being the capital of the Dominion of Canada, the city has many fine Federal buildings which are valued at over $25,000,000. Opposite the city of Ottawa, separated by the majestic Ottawa river, lies the industrial city of Hull, in the province of Quebec.

Ottawa makes an ideal convention city because of its location and railway service. The city is served by the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Canadian National Railway and the New York Central Railway. It is just three hours' distance from Montreal and six hours from Toronto.

Members of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers can leave New York in the evening and be in Ottawa before noon the following day.

It is suggested that arrangements be made well in advance for accommodation at the convention headquarters, hotel—the Chateau Laurier, as a big attendance is anticipated. Mr. Peck, director of the Canadian Government Motion Picture Bureau, Ottawa, will be glad to answer any enquiries from members of the organization, concerning the forthcoming convention.

In a few weeks every member of the Society will receive from Ottawa, a richly illustrated folder minutely describing the Capital City of Canada and containing much information for those contemplating attending the convention.

Photographic Innovation

An innovation in motion picture photography that is expected to create considerable interest has been introduced by Elmer Clifton, the director, in his handling of "Six Cylinder Love," the Fox screen version of the play that ran for almost two years on Broadway.

This new method was used in the lavish cabaret scenes, which had a water landscape in the background. In the foreground was a scrim stretched taut across the dancing floor. Upon this netting was painted a deep sea scene in rich colors.

When the powerful studio lights were leveled on the scrim, the background of the set was blotted out. When these front lights went out the dance hall came into view, the floor being seen for the first time. When these lights went out the dancers were in silhouette, and the backdrop appeared to be pushed miles and miles away.

The result was a remarkable study in perspective and composition.

Park Theatre, Lehighton, Pa., Opened

Formal exercises of an elaborate character marked the opening of the new Park theatre in Lehighton, owned by Andrew Bayer and his six sons, Aloysius, Frank, Charles, William, Alphonse and Joseph, when there were two capacity houses. The theatre is located at Second and South Streets. The house, which has a seating capacity of 1,000, is modern and luxurious in all its appointments. It is fireproof and constructed of mauve brick with limestone trimmings. It is equipped with specially built projectors on the mezzanine floor, a Martin rotary converter and a Kreig spotlight switchboard for the production of the newest color effects. On the opening night Professor S. W. Unger of Allentown presided at a concert on the Moller organ. John Eberson — Architect
Seating by American Seating Company

THE same care and thought that directed the planning and selection of the essential items of equipment for the new Majestic Theatre, Houston, Texas, were exerted in the selection of the theatre chairs. As in every other detail, only the last word in theatre chair perfection would do.

The one selected was a handsomely upholstered theatre chair of American Seating Company manufacture, roomy and comfortable, built to last a generation.

As further aid to audience convenience, the chairs in their placement were slightly staggered so that each occupant is just a trifle to the side of and a little higher than the one in front of him. This is a detail readily understood and appreciated, but is only one of the many that mark the completeness of this new theatre of the South.

Alternating Current Machinery

Lesson VII—Part 1

Alternating Current Generators

IN its simplest form, an alternating current generator is exactly the same as a direct current generator, with the sole exception of the method of drawing the current off of the armature coils.

In the case of the direct current generator a comparatively large number of coils each composed of a few turns of wire are used. The individual coils each have their ends connected to copper slugs called commutator segments and current is drawn from the machine by means of carbon or copper brushes rubbing on these commutator segments as the machine revolves.

The alternating current generator, on the other hand, instead of having a large number of coils of few turns, has a small number (either one, two or three, according to the phase) of coils consisting of many turns of wire on its armature. One end, and sometimes both ends, of these coils are each connected to a solid copper ring fastened to the shaft of the generator and which revolves with it. These are known as collector rings and current is drawn off the machine through brushes rubbing on these rings.

Generation of Current

Alternating current differs from direct current only by reason of the fact that it flows first in one direction, then reverses and flows in the opposite direction. Direct current, on the other hand, flows constantly in the same direction. The effects of these two currents, however, are very different and it is these effects which make the study of alternating current circuits so difficult.

It was clearly explained in preceding articles that the commutator of a direct current generator causes the current to flow steadily in the same direction from whence comes its name. Suppose we consider a single loop of wire, such as that hown in Fig. 103, revolving between two magnetic pole, in the direction indicated. If the end of thi coil of wire were each connected to a commutator egment and the necessary brushes were provided, the result would be a direct current generator. If, however, the ends of the loop were each connected to a solid copper ring which revolved with the wire loop and a brush was placed in contact with each ring, we would have an alternating current generator.

The current is generated in the following manner. As side (A) of the loop moves down past the face of the north pole it cuts lines of flux flowing from the N pole to the S pole. We have already seen that if a wire is moved through a magnetic field, a voltage will be induced in the wire which will, if the circuit be closed, cause current to flow. In Fig. 103, we have the necessary conditions to cause such an induction of current in wire (A).

As wire (A) is moved down wire (B) which forms the opposite side of the loop, must obviously move up past the South pole. The direction of the flux has not been changed but that of wire (B) is just opposite to (A) so the current induced in B will flow in the opposite direction to that in (A). This can be easily verified by Fleming's three finger, right-hand rule described in Lesson VI, Part 1. While the currents in wires (A) and (B) are apparently flowing in opposite directions, relative to the pole faces, yet they are actually flowing in the same direction since the wires are sides of closed loop.

If any electrical device such as a lamp, be connected across the two copper rings, current will flow out of (A) into the lamp and then from the lamp into (B). As the loop revolves still further, wire (A) will take the position occupied by (B) and will move up past the South pole. When it does this, however, the induced current will no longer flow in the same direction but will be reversed. The current flowing in (B) will also gradually come to zero and reverse in direction as it leaves the South pole and moves over past the North pole. The current, over this half revolution of the loop will then flow from (B) through the lamp and into (A). On the next half revolution (A) will go past the North pole and (B) past the South pole and the current will have again reversed in direction.

Frequency

At each half revolution, then the current in both wires will be reversed and this will continue as long as the loop is revolved. This constant repetition of reversals gives rise to the term frequency often used in connection with alternating current machinery.

The time required for wire (A) to start from the position shown and make a complete revolution, returning again to its former position, is called a cycle. Frequency simply refers to the number of complete revolutions of the loop, made in one second of time.

Thus if wire (A) makes 40 complete revolutions in one second, the frequency of the current would be 40. If it revolved 60 times per second, the frequency would be 60 cycles. Each complete cycle calls for two complete reversals of current. This is more clearly shown by Fig. 104. One reversal is sometimes called one alternation.

Single Phase Windings

The simple machine just described would give what is called single phase current. That is, only one wave of alternating current would be drawn from the machine. In actual practice, such a single phase machine would have, not a single loop of wire, as shown but rather a coil of wire composed of many turns in order to generate the proper voltage.

In order to make the machine as small and efficient as possible, the entire circumference of the circle through which the loop revolved would be used and to do this the large coil would be divided into a number of smaller ones and distributed around the circumference of the circle. It might be well to mention that practically all alterating current generators have stationary armatures built in the form of a cylinder inside of which the poles of the machine revolve. This is exactly opposite to the practice followed in the construction of direct current machinery. This construction is simple, less costly, and requires less bracing of the conductors. It would be impossible to do this with a direct current machine because of the commutator.

The smaller coils, which are distributed over the circumference of the circle, have their ends connected so as to form a continuous loop, the two ends of which are connected to the proper collector rings as if only one loop were used. Where this construction is used each smaller coil must have its own north and south pole so if there are four coils there will be eight poles, four of which are north and the other four south. A simple wiring diagram of such a machine is shown in Fig. 105. This shows the armature cylinder before mentioned cut between coils 1 and 4 and spread out flat. If ends A and B were joined together so as to make a circle with four coils, the result would be the armature as it would appear on the machine. Each coil is shown with its north and south pole.

As each pair of poles sweep past a coil current is induced in each coil which goes thru one complete cycle since both a north and south pole moves past the coil. In the particular winding shown in Fig. 105 one complete revolution of the field pieces would occur when the pair of poles in front of coil 1 had moved past coils 2, 3, 4 and back to coil 1 again. Each revolution of the field pieces, then, represents four cycles so if the machine is revolving at the rate of 900 R.P.M. (revolutions per minute) the frequency would be 4 x 900 = 3600 cycles per minute or 60 cycles per second.

Two Phase Windings

Single phase current is very useful for such things as incandescent lamps, light motor loads and other simple devices. For heavy power-work, however, single phase motors do not possess the high starting torque required to run heavy machinery and recourse must be had to other ways of securing this starting torque.

If another winding be placed on top of that shown in Fig. 105 but moved forward a distance of 90 electrical degrees and the ends of this second winding are also connected to a separate pair of collector rings the result will be a two phase generator. Such a winding is shown in Fig. 106. Each pair of coils, one from each winding, has its pair of poles and no change in frequency results. Each of these phases can be used separately for single phase devices, such as lamps, etc., or both phases may be used simultaneously to operate 2-phase motors. A peculiar voltage relation exists between these two phases which will be explained in a later article. Instead of a single wave of current and voltage being supplied by such a winding, two waves, placed 90 degrees apart, are supplied.

Three Phase Windings

Two phase motors do not give the starting torque which can be secured by the use of three phase motors. In order to operate such three phase machines, naturally three phase current must be supplied them. This is obtained by placing three windings on the generator armature each spaced 120 degrees apart from the others as shown in Fig. 107. Three phase current is by far the most commonly used source of power for motor work due to the better speed regulation and torque characteristics. As will be explained later, single phase motors are used principally for light loads such as fans, rewinders, buffers, etc.

Power Plant for Warner Studios

To gain speed and efficiency in the production of the eighteen classics of the screen, the Warner Brothers completed last week the erection of a new power plant at an expenditure of $100,000. The entire electrical equipment was constructed from designs planned by F. N. Murphy, Chief Electrician of the Warner studios.

With the completion of this power plant the Warners are said to have the largest connected generating capacity in the Hollywood motion picture colony. It carries a load of 2,100 horse power, controlling sufficient power to illuminate a city of 30,000 population. In addition to this equipment the Warners recently acquired a portable gasoline generator set which is mounted on a five-ton truck and enables the company to generate its own "juice" while on location. Another portable power plant on a ten-ton trailer is also in use, and two more are being built in the East for the Warner studios.

Studio Invention Improves Close-ups

A third camera, equipped with a wide-focus, specially-built telescopic lens, set up on a long-legged tripod, for the purpose of "shooting" close-ups of screen players simultaneously with medium long range action, has been perfected by Richard Thomas, the young producer-director, who is filming "Other Men's Money" at the Hollywood studios.

According to Mr. Thomas, he has met with a greater degree of success than he anticipated. The device used, which is attached to an ordinary motion picture camera, is the result of several months' work of Mr. Thomas and his cinematographer, Jack Fuqua.

Audiences have grown so critical, declares Mr. Thomas, that the slightest variation in a player's facial expression from the medium shot to the close-up and back again is practically always noted and commented upon.

Lighting Methods for Studios

looks, seen through the dilated pupils of men in terror.

This could be done by slowly stepping down an opaque iris over the arc that faces into your soft light reflector. This exposes the skeleton of the lighting scheme. Shadows are made harsh. All light becomes sharp, and if the thing is overdone even shape may be distorted.

The movable portion of such a big light need not weigh more than 300 pounds, and the reflectors would weigh even less, so two workmen would be able to set up any combination the director might want, anywhere in the studio, within a few minutes.

This will be specially convenient while the set is being planned and built. Any part of the set, a flat, for instance, is a reflecting screen, designed so as to reflect a pattern in tones of gray into the camera. Distribution of mass, selection of line, contrasted values, the illusion of form on the screen, are the director's instruments. They are made convenient by convenient lighting. There can be no proper distinction between the design of a set and the lighting of it. These are inseparable. The flat, moreover, is almost always designed to produce the illusion of a piece of architectural structure. It represents the inside wall or the outside wall of a building, or an archway, or a flight of steps. It is only through a proper distribution of shadow that architecture takes on vitality, shows its structure. Light a building flatly, or with cross shadows, and, however real it may be, it will appear false, ready to tumble down upon you, or flimsy, supporting no weight. Its arches support nothing, its beams float upon a froth of ornament. Light has been a medium of the architect for three thousand years.

George Bellows has made some black and white sketches of prize fights which are cinematic. Light and shade are handled as though all the light came from a small cluster of brilliant lamps hung under a reflector a dozen feet above the center of the ring. They are pure chiaroscuro—tone contrast, light and shade. Effects quite as energetic as those are to be seen wherever moving pictures are made indoors. While a scene is being rehearsed most of the lights are cut off to spare the actor's eyes. Sometimes only one intense arc light high on a balcony throws a hard slanting light into a courtyard set, where a number of actors move about in rehearsal. The picture is a trifle arty, freakish, distorted, like something seen under moonlight. Black shadows shoot from under the feet of the moving crowd. But there is life in the picture, and spaciousness.

The motion picture camera, with its great depth of sharp focus searches out minute details of perfection or carelessness in lighting, as, for instance, in the rendition of line, or of the textures of materials or of flesh. To use soft focus destroys line and texture, leaving only shapes and a broad suggestion of values upon the screen. It is often a relief to the imagination, for it helps to conceal the bitter glare of rigid light from an inconvenient and over-complex lighting system. The most unfortunate sort of complexity is that which results from using several sorts of illuminant.

Pictorially, motion picture photography is pure chiaroscuro, an art which gets all of its effects by contrasts of brightness on one color. Therefore, it is important to be able to produce upon the screen the tone values the director saw or imagined in the studio. The camera is extremely sensitive to the nature of the illuminant. When two such different kinds of light are employed it will record the shadows, which are mostly illuminated by the mercury arcs, in one scale of values, and will record in an entirely different scale those portions of the set receiving direct light from the carbon arcs. A shadow on a dark blue wall paper, under such double illumination, may not register on the film at all. Shadows within the folds of a tapestry may turn out brighter than the unshadowed portion. Nearly all contrasts of value will increase or be reduced in a quite irregular fashion within the camera, as you shift from one light to the other. The appearance of these values will give no reliable notion of how they will contrast upon the screen.

The faceted diffuser shown on the first page of this article functions as follows:

When the hard light of the arc strikes the dull white matt surface of a facet it is scattered back in all directions, but the proportion of the light that will scatter in any given direction may be estimated. More of the light will take the "billiard ball" course than will take any other course. But a great deal of the light will travel off at a very wide angle from the "billiard ball" direction, so that if one stands opposite one of the edge facets and so close to the diffuser that it is just possible to see past the lightbox to the distant edge of the diffuser, the distant edge will appear more than half as bright as the near edge. This difference between the brilliance of the edges, when one stands that much "off center" drops to a negligible quantity at eight-foot distance from an eight-foot diffuser. Indeed, the 17 principal directions of light cross in such a manner that there is obtained in effect that paradox of which the cinematographer has dreamed—the beam of diffused light. A white wall, at a reasonable distance from the diffuser, is more brilliantly illuminated than it would be if the bare arc shone upon it from the same position.

Opinions on Current Short Subjects

"Is Conan Doyle Right?"
(Pathe—Two Reels)

IN the first place this subject does not give the answer to the question proposed—and therein lies the principal advantage for the clever showman. The picture is an expose of fraudulent practices as employed by fake mediums in fleecing gullible patrons who seek contact with the spirit world. In the hands of the aforementioned "clever showman," this subject ought to provoke wholesale discussion, centering about the question presented in the title, and the sort of discussion that means shekels for the box-office. Moreover, it is one that lends itself readily to presentation—a magician ballyhoo, house interior bathed in the eerie, subdued light of red or purplish lamps, a sleight-of-hand or mind reading act as a prologue, etc. Briefly, we believe here at last is a "showman's picture" in the short-subject field. As to the manner of mounting this expose of spurious spiritualistic practitioners, the entire subject has been handled in a highly entertaining manner. Several of the methods of alleged spirit communication,—often featured in the Sunday supplements and in books and lectures on the subject—table levitation, slate writing, materialization, the movement of inanimate objects such as instruments "at the control of the spirits," etc.—are presented here in their proper settings. Then follow the explanations, simple and comprehensively depicted, showing that at least most of these methods of "establishing spirit contact" are perfectly human in conception and mechanical in their execution. The picture carefully refrains condemning Spiritualism as a philosophy and from branding all spiritualists as cheats; it merely shows that certain mediumistic practices can be explained on perfectly natural grounds—and does this in a most entertaining fashion.—E. F. SUPPLE.

"The Optimist"
(Educational—Two Reels)

LLOYD HAMILTON essays the role of a comedy Pollyanna and Miracle Man in this one and puts over a highly amusing performance. The vein of satire is enhanced by Hamilton's mock seriousness which never relaxes even in the most ludicrous of the situations. There is some decidedly amusing incident worked into Hamilton's demonstration of optimism at all costs. At one place he enters the squalid room of a poverty-stricken family and while holding his hand to the sunshine outside grasps, quite by accident, a coin being tossed by two gamblers below the window. When later he throws a bottle of whiskey, which he has wrested from the drunken father, out the window and into the hands of the two gamblers below they take the bottle as compensation for the coin they have lost and conclude a bootlegger lives above. They return with a party of friends and the air literally rains coins being tossed aloft by the thirsty customers. With the aid of a basket Hamilton catches the money and hands it over to the amazed family. The second reel is largely a flash-back to the early settlement period with Hamilton as one of the Pilgrim Fathers. Again, he practices his philosophy of good-will on the Redman whose response is to attack the dwelling of the philosopher and his friends. Some of these sequences are uproariously funny and the sub-titles do their bit in sustaining the humor of the situations. Here is a subject rich in laughter and yet with a subtle vein of satire which we believe will appeal to the imagination of the spectator.—E. F. SUPPLE.

"Back to Earth"
(Universal—Two Reels)

THIS Century comedy is cleverly staged as well as amusing piece of work. The subject abounds in gags of the mechanical kind, a flying bungalow with all sorts of ingenious devices hidden away in the partitions being one of the features. The winged bungalow is the property of two real-estate sharps who have a decidedly effective way of fleecing their customers. They cruise about in their airplane-house until a desirable site presents itself. After landing they surround the dwelling with all sorts of attractive props and then receive prospective buyers to whom they demonstrate the marvelous mechanical contrivances with which the bungalow is equipped. After securing the purchase money from the new owner they await the latter's departure and then sail the bungalow up into the sky to select a new location and land some more easy money. In the end, of course, their duplicity leads to their own undoing. A thoroughly enjoyable comedy from start to finish and one that ought to go well in any type of house.—E. F. SUPPLE.

"Let's Build"
(Pathe—Two Reels)

THIS is the introductory number of the new Hal Roach series, which will be known under the group name of "The Spat Family." There are three principal characters—a dignified husband of the English type, a quick-tempered wife who is quite ready and competent to fight hubby's battles as well her own, and an overbearing, "know it all" brother of the wife, whose principal object in life seems to be to find something for sister's husband to do. In the present subject the trio undertake to build a house on a mountain side. With each character blundering at his or her respective task, continually getting in the other's way, and wholly dissatisfied with the progress of the other members of the party, the proceedings rapidly develop into riot of ludicrous mishaps and laughable situations. "Let's Build," in our opinion, strikes a fresh note in comedy production and sets a pace for humor and incident that will tax the ingenuity of Hal Roach's gag men to maintain successfully in the subsequent numbers of this series. We won't venture an opinion on the subjects to come, but we will say of "Let's Build" that here is a comedy number that is certain to provoke gales of laughter no matter what type of house it may be shown in.—E. F. SUPPLE.

"Face to Face"
(Universal—Two Reels)

"FACE TO FACE" is a western which presents in its background a number of mountain shots that would be properly hailed as highlights in a straight scenic. The story unfolded against these beautiful mountain settings is exceedingly simple in structure: a ranger is marked for death by a band of outlaws; by the use of his wits and fists, the hero defeats the band temporarily, but in the end is about to enter the trap they have set for him when his wife conceives a clever plan to apprize him of his danger; eventually the band is brought to justice and the wife and husband re-united. A fairly entertaining short-length drama of the western type in which the settings stand out for special note.—E. F. SUPPLE.

"Moving"
(Educational—One Reel)

THIS is a fair comedy with a measure of entertaining incident and some laugh-provoking situations. Cliff Bowes and Virginia Vance are featured in the roles of Newly-weds, apartment hunting. The device is resorted to of having an amateur wall-paper a room with resultant blunders and ultimate disaster. In this case the wall-paper is hung over even the doors and windows so that in the end most of the room is wrecked in an effort to locate an exit. The bungalow has a sliding front which is employed effectively in getting over some good laughs.—E. F. SUPPLE.

"A Man About Town"
(Pathe—One Reel)

MISTAKEN identity is the principal basis of the comedy supplied in this one. Stan Lurel, in the featured role, inquires of a car conductor the exact way to a certain location and is directed to follow a young lady sitting opposite him, who is also bound for the same location. Hence, when the young woman alights from the car Laurel promptly follows her. The problem would be a simple one if it were not for the fact that about every third girl Laurel passes is dressed exactly like the one he has been told to follow. The result is that in a short space of time Laurel is following different young ladies all over the town. Numerous side-plays, affording some real laughs, are worked into the action as Laurel flits from one trail to another.—E. F. SUPPLE.

"Dancing Love"
(Universal—One Reel)

THIS is a travesty on the marathon-dancing craze recently prevalent. Nervy Ned, after being informed by the girl of his choice that she will marry only a champion marathon dancer enters a contest and sets out to break all endurance records. Mickey Dugan, the present title-holder, is also entered. The rivalry between the two is very keen, and much of the reel is taken up with the mishaps that befall Nervy Ned and Mickey as a result of their mutual antagonism and counter-plotting.—E. F. SUPPLE.

"The Walk Out"
(Pathe—Two Reels)

THIS is a diverting comedy number based on the struggle between capital and labor. The theme is burlesqued, of course, the characterizations being amusingly caricatured and the incident commonly associated with strikes and labor troubles ludicrously exaggerated. "Snub" Pollard plays the featured role. While at first inclined to remain loyal to the boss he eventually sides in with the men but has considerable difficulty in proving to the strikers that he is indeed one of them.—E. F. SUPPLE.

UNIFORMLY GOOD

WISE film men want laboratory work uniformly good. There are sixteen separate pictures in every foot of film. Each photograph must be a perfect reproduction to give the finished photoplay the smoothness of technical excellence. That's one of the superior points in STANDARD PRINTS. They have an even quality. They are uniformly good.

Each director and cinematographer has different ideas for expressing things on the screen. But they all want the same standard of photographic excellence. The laboratory must maintain this in negative and prints while stamping each production with the individuality of director and cinematographer.

Our ability to give film that personal touch brings the industry's leading producers to STANDARD FILM LABORATORIES. Experience has shown many of them that they get more for their money by using STANDARD SERVICE and that exhibitors are better satisfied with STANDARD PRINTS.

DIRECTED BY ALFRED E. GREEN
PRESENTED BY ADOLPH ZUKOR

YOU'VE all been clamoring for another "Back Home and Broke." Here it is.

George Ade has turned out a story which, while totally different in theme, has all the elements that "Back Home and Broke" had—and more.

It was made to order for Thomas Meighan and it's a perfect fit. With a title that's exploitation-proof.

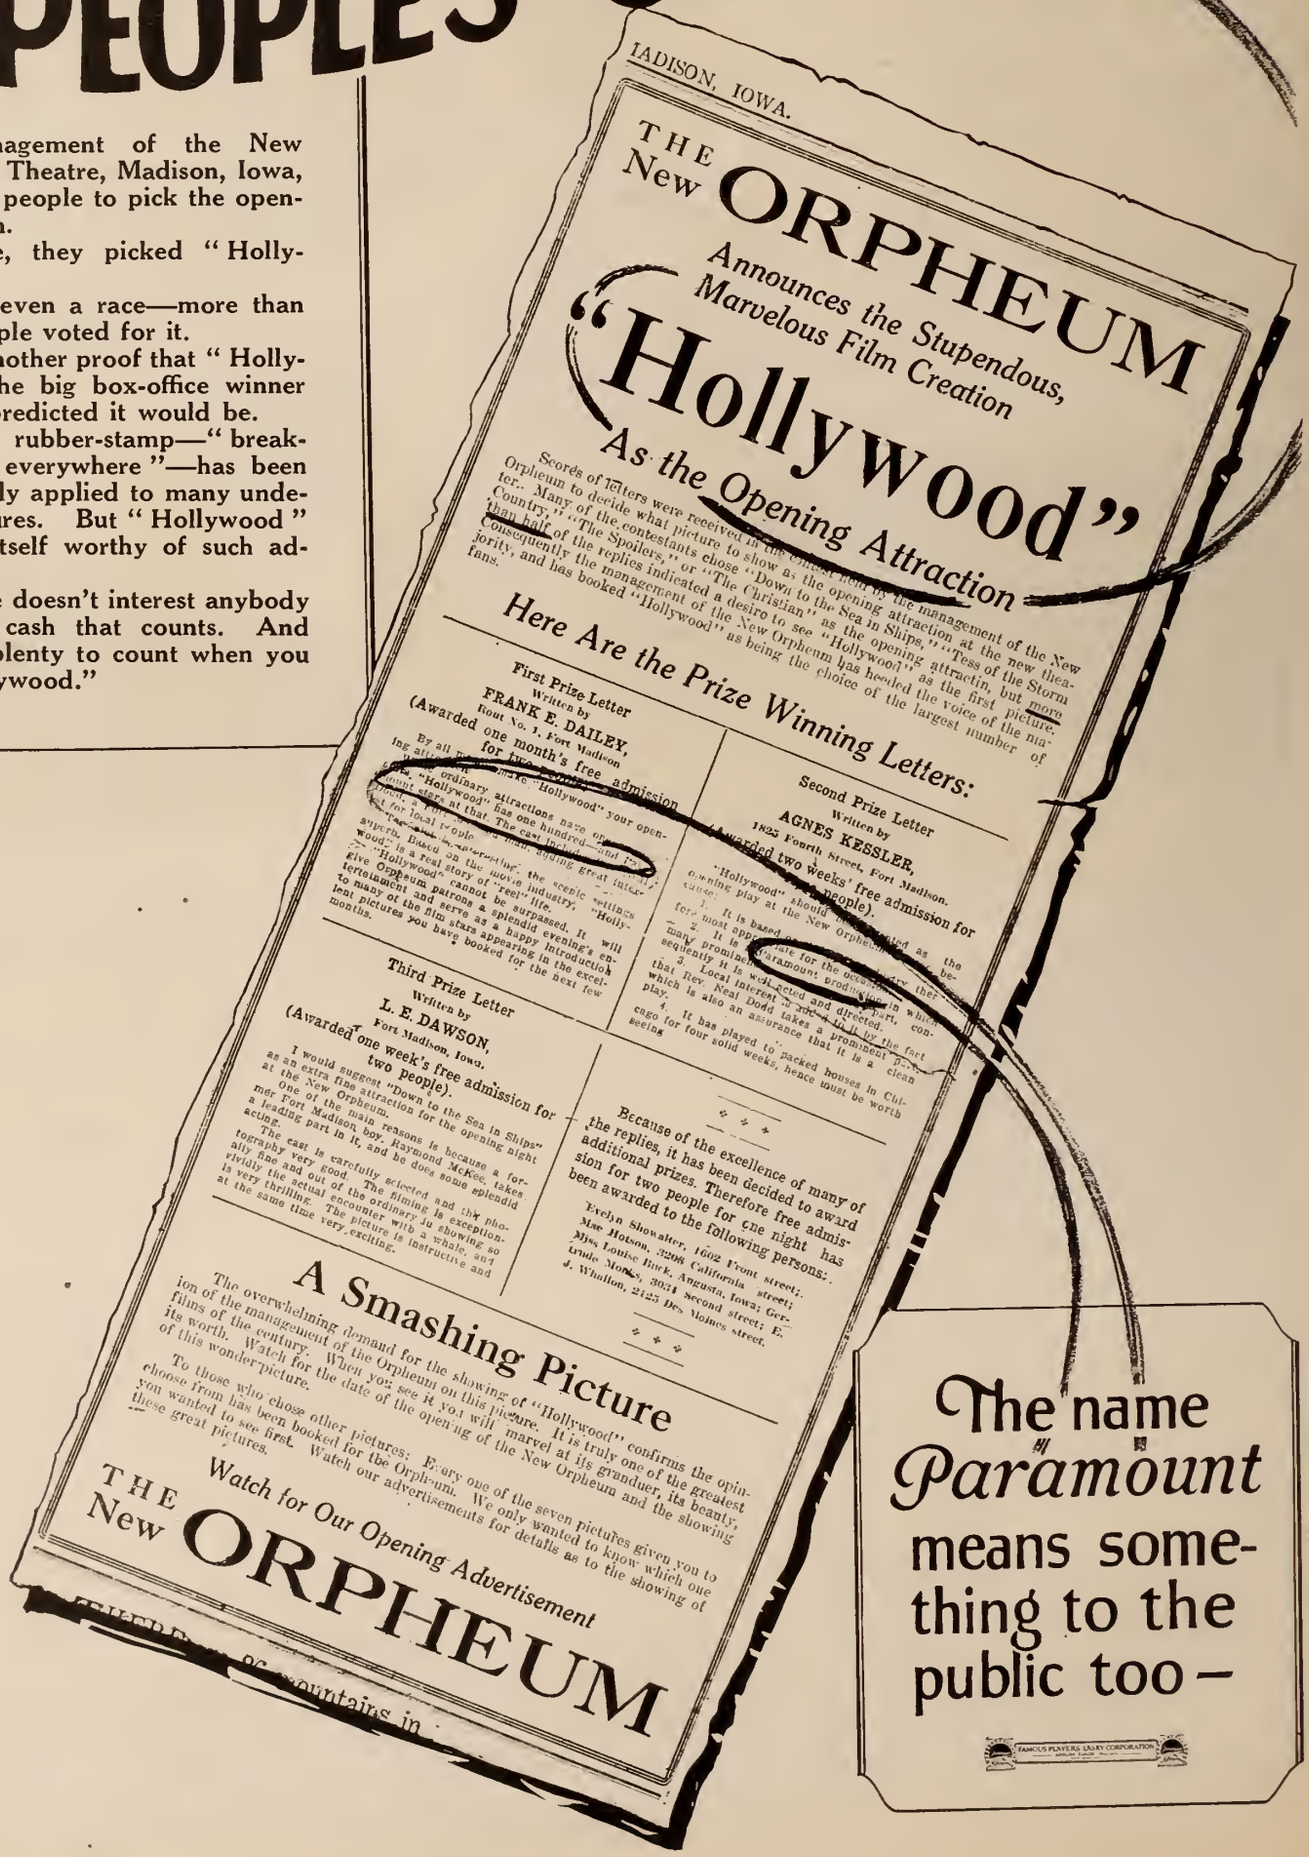
The PEOPLE'S CHOICE

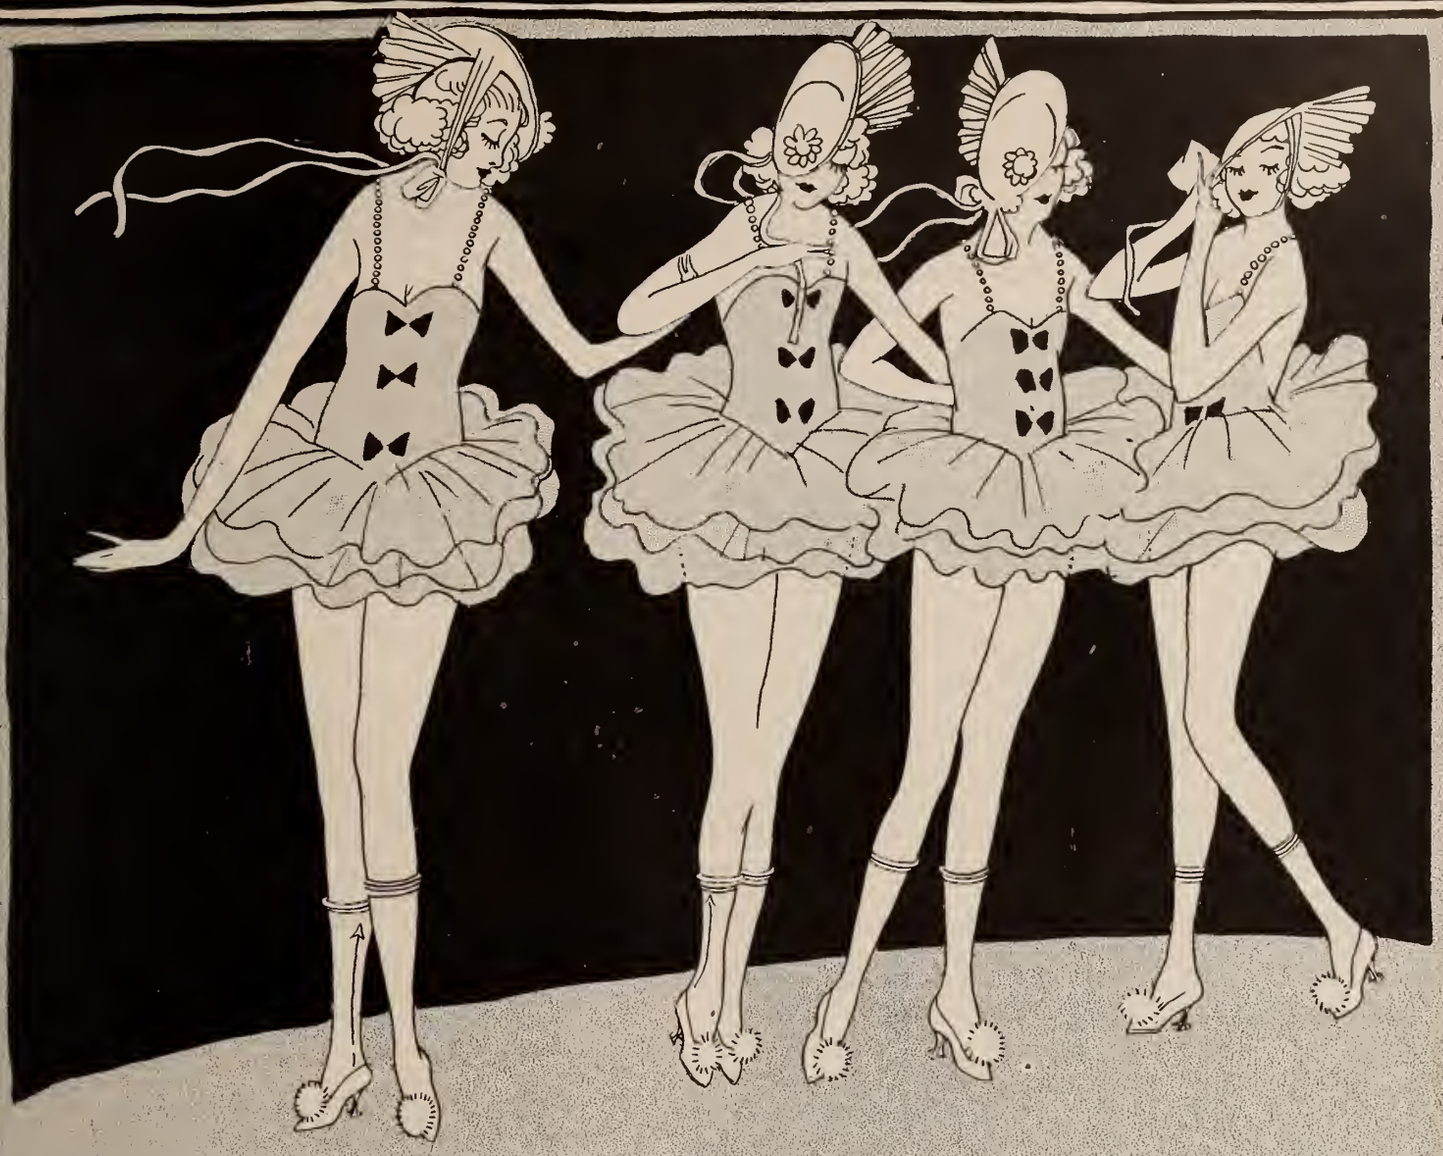
THE management of the New Orpheum Theatre, Madison, Iowa, left it to the people to pick the opening attraction.



Of course, they picked "Hollywood."

It wasn't even a race—more than half the people voted for it.

It's just another proof that "Hollywood" is the big box-office winner that critics predicted it would be.



That old rubber-stamp—"breaking records everywhere"—has been promiscuously applied to many undeserving pictures. But "Hollywood" is proving itself worthy of such advertising.

Cold type doesn't interest anybody—it's cold cash that counts. And there'll be plenty to count when you play "Hollywood."

The name Paramount means something to the public too—

FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY CORPORATION

Paramount Mack-Sennett Comedies

THE Paramount-Mack Sennett two-reelers put comedy short subjects on the motion picture map. And few comedies, since produced, can touch those earlier knockouts.

Your public hasn't forgotten them, either. They roared at them then, and they'll howl at them now. More than that, there's a real demand to see Ben Turpin, Charles Murray, Marie Prevost and other favorites in the pictures that made them famous.

They've all been re-titled and re-edited by Ralph Spence, and your Paramount Exchange will supply you with fresh prints and new advertising material.

UNIVERSAL HAS NO

I CAN'T figure out to save my life why this business should be confronted with some "new plan" for selling goods every year or every season.

I can't figure out why exhibitors will seriously debate and discuss every new selling method adopted by one company or another. I can't take it seriously. I can't see any mystery about the fundamentals of business. I can't see that it is necessary to strain the old bean trying to think up some new way of selling goods when the old way has been demonstrated to be satisfactory to everybody.

The Universal has no new selling plan. It never had a new one. Our policy has been to make the best pictures we knew how and then sell them to every exhibitor who felt like buying them.

We never have said to any exhibitor, "You can't have this unless you jump through a hoop." We never have tried any stunt calculated to make the exhibitor blind to what sort of a deal he was getting.

It isn't necessary. It isn't strictly on the square. And it isn't a good policy on which to base a permanent institution. Whenever it works successfully it is only temporarily so, and it always has a bad kick-back.

Naturally I want to sell as many pictures as I can to as many exhibitors as I can. And I want to get the best price I can and still keep my customer friendly and on a profit-making basis. He, on the other hand, wants to get them for as little as he can and still not put me out of business.

Any other basis is a false one!

There are no ifs, ands or buts about our selling plan. We'll sell on the basis of your needs and your requirements. We have no hard and fast rule.

Most of the exhibitors this year are booking every blessed one of our big productions without seeing them in spite of the fact that I have always cried "Look before you book." Whether they haven't time to look at each picture before booking, or whether they are willing to book Universal pictures on faith, the fact remains that they are booking THE WAY THEY WANT TO BOOK and not according to any fixed plan of ours.

I'm glad to see other producers discarding "plans" and "systems" and getting down to brass tacks. It's a step in the right direction. When they cast aside ALL strings and ifs and buts, they will have reached the point established by Universal years ago!

This is why Sid Grauman's audiences were taken by storm!

The only great cast is that cast that tells a story in a great way.

"The White Rose"

Hammers out its appeal in tones that never jar because the players WERE the characters; not just acting the characters.

Not in recent years has any player won such lavish praise as MAE MARSH, who is greater in this picture than in "The Birth of a Nation" or "Intolerance."

Ivor Novello was specially selected from all young men of stage and screen for this role. He is great.

Carol Dempster, a different type, always getting better and better, is better than ever in this film.

Neil Hamilton, one of those real "finds" D. W. Griffith so often makes, is on his way to greatness.

Through it all moves that sensitive magic of quick humanity that only Griffith, the real master of the films, gives always to his work.

There is something real and human about

"The White Rose"

That quickly stirs your calm and chatting audiences into friendly groups, tensely silent and alert with sympathy.

Your spectators laugh and they sigh and sit in tight delight, for this splendid story is so natural they become as interested as if it were about some one they all knew intimately.

As Don Allen in the New York Evening World, says: "It is one of the really big films of all time because it is so very, very human."

It is no wonder Mr. Grauman's audiences are "taken by storm." Every audience is. You should show it in your theatre.

Sidney Franklin

represents the modern spirit of the photoplay. Though comparatively young in years, he boasts an experience that covers practically the entire history of the motion picture art. Photoplays produced under Mr. Franklin's direction have always represented a step forward and have invariably contained that indefinable something that distinguishes genius.

His vast experience achieved through association with prominent players and authors has placed him at the top of his profession, and in Warner Brothers "Classics of the Screen" he is producing real masterpieces of the silent art which will endure for years to come.

Franklin's re-creation of "BRASS" alone would have stamped him a master of screencraft. His forthcoming production of "TIGER ROSE," with Lenore Ulric in the title role, and with the co-operation of David Belasco, will make the public as eager to see the words, "A Sidney Franklin Production," on a film as they would the name of any star performer.

"TIGER ROSE" is but the first of a series of pictures to be produced by Mr. Franklin for Warner Bros.

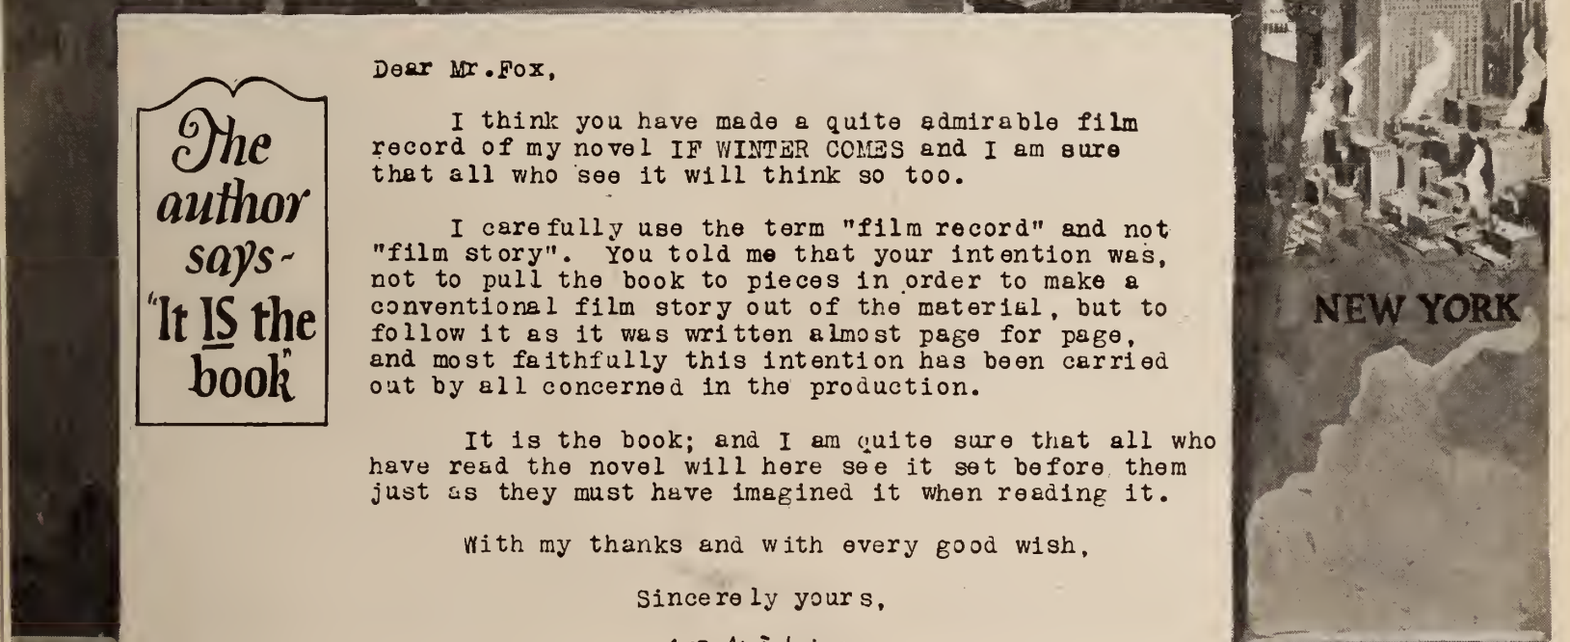
The author says- "It IS the book"

Dear Mr.Fox,

I think you have made a quite admirable film record of my novel IF WINTER COMES and I am sure that all who see it will think so too.



I carefully use the term "film record" and not "film story". You told me that your intention was, not to pull the book to pieces in order to make a conventional film story out of the material, but to follow it as it was written almost page for page, and most faithfully this intention has been carried out by all concerned in the production.

It is the book; and I am quite sure that all who have read the novel will here see it set before them just as they must have imagined it when reading it.

With my thanks and with every good wish,

Sincerely yours,

ISSUES CHALLENGE TO ALL SPOOK PICTURES

With a certified check for $5,000 as a forfeit and a committee of scientists and photographic experts as the jury, Blair Coan Productions, Inc., producers of "You Are in Danger," challenges all proponents of spiritualism to place their much-discussed ectoplasm photographs alongside of the negative from portions of the movie drama.

If any difference can be detected between the negatives from the film drama and the photographs on which Conan Doyle and other believers in spirit manifestations have based their contentions, the film producers stand ready to give up the forfeit.

Andre Barlatier, master trick photographer, filmed the spirit scenes around which much of the mystery element of "You Are in Danger" is built. Barlatier also took many of the various ectoplasm photographs over which the spiritualists and their opponents are now debating. The producer's forfeit is also offered to anyone who can show an ectoplasm photograph which Barlatier cannot reproduce with every effect of genuineness.

OTHER Men's Daughters, a feature produced and directed by Ben Wilson, is added proof that good sense is more important than millions and sincerity of purpose, greater than artificial display.

In this picture, which will be released by the Grand-Asher Distributing Corporation early in October, may be seen the harmonious combination of an excellent story from the pen of a famous novelist, fine acting by distinguished stars, inspirational directing and extremely artistic production.

Because Evelyn Campbell, wrote "Other Men's Daughters" with a vivid, human appeal, that interest has been preserved in its screen edition. Nowhere is there the lavish and gaudy show which taxes, too greatly, the mind of the observer.

No awe-inspiring sum was spent upon production nor were all the greatest and most famous stars of screendom cast for this picture. It is neither weird nor grotesque.

Yet nothing of effort or money has been spared to make "Other Men's Daughters" a perfect creation.

With Bryant Washburn and Mabel Forrest in the leading roles, brilliant and satisfying acting is assured. And all that can be added to a picture by the assembling of an accomplished supporting cast is here in evidence.

"Picture Brains"

"YOU raise a vital question in your last week's editorial," writes a producing executive.

"You intimate that the community theatre audience in general may not want the 'big' picture, or at least that they prefer certain stars and star program pictures.

"Have you considered that, maybe, it is the exhibitor's fault; that the smaller town audience everywhere would prefer these splendid efforts if only the exhibitor could sell them to his public, as too few exhibitors are able to do———?"

* * * *

Yes, we have considered this important phase of the matter and many other phases of it. And we are by no means of any one mind on an answer.

But we do feel this: that baffling as it is, it is the biggest problem facing the motion picture show world today. And with all the millions going into pictures, some shrewd thinking must be done.

* * * *

The motion picture audience, as we well know, is a new kind of show audience. It isn't Broadway, nor big town, nor small city nor community, nor rural alone. It is all this; it is general; some forty millions of people more or less regularly and some six millions every day must be entertained by the pictures. And that is a new and tremendous undertaking.

Can one type of picture satisfy this very broad audience?

Must not pictures be made definitely for the urban audience on the one hand and on the other for the rural audience? That question arises right along.

And just as it seems a logical enough theory some pictures come along, popular with all classes and communities and knock this supposition full of holes.

We referred last week to Harold Lloyd's "Why Worry." This picture will go equally well everywhere. Which brings forth an important fact, that comedies have advanced further along the motion picture road of entertainment. And they have made this advance by being chockful of action and new business.

Chaplin is right when he says: "We of the films have not gone ahead as our public has. The public is not tired of the old faces. It is tired of the old face in the old material."

The impression seems to prevail that people in the large cities are up to the so-called "bigger and better" pictures and that the small town audience is not; that it is necessary, therefore, to make pictures down to the small town taste.

But it seems to me that the small town audience is, on the contrary, the more exacting. In the large city there are many different kinds of audiences. Enough people will go to see "Peter the Great," to make it seem a successful metropolitan picture. In the small town the one main audience there prefers the swift action, modern story and setting and the star personality of Tom Mix. * * * *

The one thing that is everywhere demanded is action, not as Chaplin says "quick action" merely, but "combination of circumstances, one happening directly after another." That is one reason why the star is liked; it isn't necessary to waste two reels of film in introducing new personalities. The other thing universally demanded is new business.

"New business" doesn't mean colossal sets, magnificence, lavishness. The fact is that this sort of "bigness" is old to the public. The limit has about been reached. The bigger picture, bigger in these respects, is not necessarily a better picture.

* * * *

The great trouble today, it seems to us, is that there is too little thinking in pictures. The author thinks in words and the director thinks in big sets. Picture subleties are lacking, picture brains in other words.

We can imagine one of our well heralded dramatic directors laying his plans for "Why Worry."

First, Harold Lloyd as the wealthy clubman would be staged amid luxurious surroundings rivalling the dream of a mad interior decorator; and we would get at least two reels of this sort of stuff. Then directions would be issued to build a tropical island out in the California desert, pumping the surrounding water in from the Pacific ocean, all at a cost exceeding one million dollars.

And audiences, metropolitan and urban would marvel and yawn.

It wouldn't do a bit of harm if some agile minds got busy today with all the vim and imagination employed when pictures were in their sturdy, rollicking and despised youth. The picture has grown up to be too much of a lounge lizard.

WM. A. JOHNSTON.

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

COSMOPOLITAN PRODUCTIONS may be relied upon to stage its studio festivities in the same artistic and finished manner that is characteristic of its pictures. Fresh proof of this was given on Monday, September 10th, when the scribes of the trade papers, fan magazines and New York dailies were invited to the big plant on the Harlem River to look on at the taking of mob scenes for "Yolanda," the latest Marion Davies super-super, and, only incidentally, of course, to partake of an elaborate luncheon. A room in the studio had been suitably decorated for the occasion and every provision was made for the comfort and enjoyment of the visitors, with Marion Davies presiding as an always tactful and charming hostess. Lynn Harding, Ralph Graves, Mary Kennedy, Robert G. Vignola, Luther Reed, Miss Thurlow, General Manager Utassy, Louis Macloon, and other members of the cast and studio staff were on hand for the occasion. After luncheon, the party adjourned to the lot, in the rear of the studio, where Joseph Urban had erected a huge castle set, superb in appearance. Some 1,600 players were taking part in scenes laid at a jousting tournament, and the advance glimpses given of the splendor of the production augur well for "Yolanda" and for Marion Davies, who may be expected to repeat her triumphs in "When Knighthood Was In Flower" and "Little Old New York."

AFFORDING as fine a spectacle as can be imagined, the huge dirigible, ZR-1, built by American engineers, sailed majestically over New York yesterday at the noon hour when the open spaces were filled with upturned faces. The giant ship sailed serenely along against a background of blue sky. Those fortunate enough to witness this impressive event went back to their work with a genuine thrill. The aerial spectacle afforded a vision of sheer beauty.

The people looking towards the heavens forgot the deadly purpose behind this work of art. They forgot that it could be used as an instrument of destruction; they saw only the grace and beauty and marveled over it.

The cameramen of the news weeklies naturally missed no opportunity to capitalize the event. They had their cameras in advantageous positions atop of skyscrapers—and it is said that several accompanied the crew of the mighty dirigible.

MARSHALL NEILAN, having completed the editing of his Russian picture, "The Rendezvous," while vacationing in New York, will return to Los Angeles and environs this week. Reason? There's man's work to do.

THE motion picture theatres of New York won't have everything their own way on Sunday evening, September 23, for the long cherished hope of theatrical managers for a general Sunday performance of legitimate attractions is to be realized.

The American Red Cross-Japanese Relief Committee has arranged with the Producing Managers Association for performances of all regular productions on the evening of the 23rd. The occasion will be known as "Japanese Relief Night" and receipts are to be turned over to the Red Cross. The plan calls for performances of straight plays, musical comedies, vaudeville and revues.

THE July issue of the Silver Cross, a monthly publication, carries an editorial pertinent to the screen: "The movies are here to stay, and if we find that our community is not getting the right kind of pictures, instead of washing our hands of responsibility, why not get together a band of influential people and go to the movie managers in the right way and ask for better films? Kindly tact and constructive methods will do far more to improve the situation than wholesale criticism without proposing any practical remedies."

JAKE WILK, who is parked temporarily at Dinard, France—enjoying a well earned vacation, postcards that they screened "Way Down East" the other night and that between reels one can play roulette in the casino. He asks if that wouldn't be a good idea for Riesenfeld, Plunkett or Rothafel to adopt.

THREE in a row for James Cruze. Quite a record to achieve in one season. No sooner did the director startle the screen world with "The Covered Wagon," than he surprised them with "Hollywood." And now comes "Ruggles of Red Gap," which firmly establishes Mr. Cruze as a genius in making stories sparkle with humor. His deft treatment of story, his skill at pointing his incident and enriching the characterization by giving each important figure a well planted reason for being present makes him one of the most dependable directors now facing the Kliegs.

"Ruggles of Red Gap" is nearly director proof, but that isn't to say that it could not have been spoiled with inadequate direction. On the contrary Cruze has made the vital figures of Ruggles, Cousin Egbert, Effie and the Honorable George stand out like cameos. His incident is rich and the plot breezes through with humorous flashes. The picture carries keen satire, a sprinkling of burlesque and effervescent comedy all the way. And yet there is pathos added to give it proper balance.

Edward Horton makes Ruggles a very human valet—one who looks and acts in keeping with a gentleman's gentleman. His meekness—his curious, shy, inquisitive expression—so perfectly etched that Harry Leon Wilson might have drawn him from life, indicate a sure gift for pantomime. He deserves to go far on the screen. There is nothing of the strutting poseur in his studies. One may be certain that any role assigned him will be interpreted as well as human understanding can make it.

Some players would have clowned the figure—made him a stupid "silly ass" type of English servant. Horton makes him stupid enough, but his stupidity earns him a quick sympathy. You actually feel sorry for the poor chap whose ancestors for generations have taken orders—who continues to take orders in spite of the newfound independence that Cousin Egbert gives him. He almost hesitates to assert his freedom.

It is sheer enjoyment when Egbert goads him to strike his snobbish relative from Boston.

"Ask him if it is Tuesday," says Egbert. "If he says yes knock him down."

"But sir, it is Tuesday," pipes the gentle Ruggles.

This bit of delightful by-play bounds to the surface in several instances, giving color to the figures and clever incident to the plot.

Ernest Torrence's Cousin Egbert is picturesquely sketched—played in an awkward manner typical of a ranchman who is unable to adapt himself to cultural expression. He is the braggart, but only while his wife is not at his elbow. Torrence portrays him like a big, vital boy with an eye for cutting capers and embarrassing his relatives. He tucks his hands inside his suspenders and uses a toothpick with careless abandon before his guests. A finely wrought character study, played for all it is worth by a skillful pantomimist.

These two figures with the Honorable George, also admirably limned by Frank Elliot, generate the humor.

"Ruggles of Red Gap?" A delightful comedy gem, excellently directed and acted by artists who understand real entertainment values.

PERLEY POORE SHEEHAN is winning as much recognition in the screen world as he did when writing exclusively for fiction magazines. His name on a picture as sponsor of its adaptation or continuity is assurance that it will be well constructed and so simplified as to be ever interesting.

Mr. Sheehan was formerly editor of the Paris Herald and his literary activities have guided him in various fictional channels. At one time he was associated with the Munsey Publications as a short story writer—and has contributed to the Saturday Evening Post over a score of years. One of his well remembered screen contributions is "The Whispering Chorus," which was one of the first expressions of realism ever produced. He was also co-author with Robert H. Davis of "We Are French."

We take the liberty here to compliment him for his adaptation of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," the Universal masterpiece. He has translated Victor Hugo to the screen in such a manner that the French author's flair for realism is admirably caught. He has flavored it with all of Hugo's detail. May he continue to interest screen patrons with his scripts for many, many years to come.

Officers from other posts and State officers and delegates en route to the American Legion Convention in Saratoga attended the theatre as guests.

WHOOPEE! Tom Mix, accompanied by his royal retinue of cowboys and Indian chiefs, arrived in New York last Friday from Los Angeles. The Fox star rushed East to be among those present at the Polo Grounds when his friend, Jack Dempsey, steps into the ring to defend his title against Luis Firpo, whom the sporting writers have termed "the wild bull of the pampas."

This is Mix's first appearance in New York since he came here on a similar occasion two years ago to occupy a ringside seat at the historic battle between friend Jack and Monsieur Georges. The cowboy star will linger just long enough "to see Dempsey win"—after which he will board a westbound train for Los Angeles. Had he arrived a month ago he could have participated in Tex Austin's rodeo at the Yankee Stadium. There was plenty of wild ridin' in the ball park—and Tom would in all probability have walked off with most of the prizes.

THE secret is out. We've grown so accustomed to reading of million dollar productions that we refuse to enthuse over the cost. But we are more than interested in the cost figures of Rex Ingram's "Scaramouche," which have mounted into the colossal sum of $1,139,014. The end is not yet in sight as the picture is now being edited, with the consequent retakes and the insurance which it is predicted will itself call for a premium well into six figures.

Film Men in Japan Reported Safe

Cochrane and McIntyre, of Famous Players, and Goodman, of Fox, Escape Injury

ALL the American film representatives who were in the 'quake zone at the time of the recent Japanese disaster are believed to be safe.

Official confirmation of the escape of Tom D. Cochrane and R. E. McIntyre, Famous Players-Laskey representatives in Tokio, was received by E. E. Shauer, director of the foreign department, in a cable from Mr. Cochrane, dated Kobe, September 10.

The Paramount office in Shiba ward was totally destroyed. Mr. Cochrane and Mrs. Cochrane, with the latter's sister, were at a resort near Tokio when the 'quake came, and escaped without injury. They have established temporary quarters at the Oriental Hotel, Kobe, while Mr. McIntyre is remaining in Tokio for the present.

News of the escape of Delbert Goodman, American representative of Fox in the Orient, was received September 12 by Sydney Abel, manager of the Fox foreign department. The message came through the Navy Department at Washington, and gave no details, but reported Mr. Goodman was uninjured.

Mail advices received by N. L. Manheim, Universal export manager, indicate that the Imperial theatre of Tokio was staging a gala performance of "The Leather Pushers" when the fatal earthquake rocked the Nippon capital.

At the request of Japanese officialdom, the letter stated, a de luxe presentation had been arranged by Frank L. Lappin, acting manager for Universal in Japan, in the absence of Manager Edward B. Rowe, who was then in America. The showing was scheduled for the last week in August, including the fatal first of September. The H. A. Snow picture, "Hunting Big Game in Africa," had previously been shown in the Imperial theatre, and was viewed by many prominent people of the Island Empire.

On the day preceding the earthquake, Al Lichtman, president of Preferred Pictures Corporation, received a cablegram from Tsurio Sasaki, prominent Tokio distributor, closing negotiations for him to handle the Preferred Product in Japan. A complete set of prints, accessories, etc., was immediately shipped to Tokio. Mr. Lichtman has been unable to secure any information concerning Mr. Sasaki since the catastrophe.

Picture theatres throughout the country have aided the Red Cross Drive for relief funds. Collections are being taken from employees and patrons. Many theatres have set up Red Cross booths in their lobbies.

The manager of the Japanese interests of one large American film company who reached San Francisco early last week from New York, to journey to the hard hit isles to determine what could be salvaged from the ruin, was told by the Japanese consulate-general at San Francisco, that he could not be permitted to go to Yokohama or Tokio. The argument of lack of sustenance will stop a morbid tourist, but a man with millions of yen in Japanese property at stake is no ordinary tourist, and the film man is now on his way to Tokio.

The policy of the Palace theatre at New Britain, Conn., will be changed the 23rd, the management announcing this week that after that date the house will be exclusively devoted to the showing of motion pictures. The theatre is one of the representative ones in that city and a notable addition to the exclusively motion picture houses of Connecticut.

M. P. T. O. of Northwest and Music Tax Society Reach Complete Agreement

THE Motion Picture Theatre Owners of the Northwest and the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, at a meeting held in Minneapolis September 10, resolved their differences and agreed upon conditions licensing all the members of the M. P. T. O. of the Northwest, covering the public performance of copyrighted music.

This announcement is made in a telegram to Motion Picture News from W. A. Steffes, President of the Northwest exhibitor organization, and confirmed by a wire from E. C. Mills, of the American Society, who attended the Minneapolis conference.

Mr. Steffes' wire continued: "As a result of the conference, which was attended in behalf of the M. P. T. O. of the Northwest by Messrs. Steffes, Theodore L. Hayes, Clinton, Kaplan, Friedman, Hitchcock, Johnson, Buchanan, Carrish and Dryer; and, in behalf of the American Society by Messrs. Mills, of New York, Hartman of Chicago, and Snethen and Summers, of local counsel, an amicable agreement all around was reached, pursuant to which licenses will now be taken by all theatres in the territory included in the jurisdiction of the M. P. T. O. of the Northwest, including Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Northern Wisconsin.

"The agreement marks the end of the misunderstanding heretofore existing between the music men and the exhibitors of this section and is in line with similar arrangements now being made wherever responsible exhibitor organizations get together with the music people."

"The conference resulted in complete agreement upon a basis of absolute fairness and equity to both copyright proprietors and exhibitors, illustrating once more the possibility of harmonious adjustment of differences when reasonable men get together and discuss matters in a reasonable manner," Mr. Mills telegraphed. "The result will be to save exhibitors in this section vast sums in costs of litigation, penalties, etc., and demonstrates to exhibitors the result possible from active, intelligent and militant organization. We are happy to report complete accord and mutual agreement."

AT a luncheon given on the mezzanine floor of the Rialto theatre, Macon, Georgia, a Better Films Committee was tentatively organized last week to work along the general lines of all similar committees in the Southeastern states.

A. C. Cowles, newly appointed head of public relations department of Southern Enterprises, and E. R. Rogers, district manager of that company, of Chattanooga were present and actively engaged in helping for mthe organization. Officers were elected and plans made for the immediate reviewing of pictures and the inauguration of children's matinees.

Mrs. Percy Chestney was elected president; E. Clem Powers, vice-president; Mrs. Martha Barnes, secretary and Mrs. Charles Harrold, treasurer.

M. P. T. O. A. Asks Congress for Tax Consideration

The M. P. T. O. A. has forwarded letters to all members of the United States Congress in the campaign for the elimination of admission and seat taxes. These letters point the value of the screen along educational lines and as a co-operative agency on Government issues. This co-operation has been established with the departments of Agriculture, Post-Office, Labor, Commerce and Interior.

The letter advances the screen as a publicity medium with the same powers as the newspaper and magazine and therefore entitled to the removal of the taxes. The plea is made for justice and fairness at the coming session of Congress.

T. O. C. C. Charges Against Loew, Fox and Moss

Charges have been preferred by the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce against Marcus Loew, William Fox and B. S. Moss, accusing them of violating the resolution passed by the Chamber to the effect that no member should make any individual agreement with Operators' Union No. 306.

Mr. Loew will be summoned before the Board of Directors of the T. O. C. C. next Tuesday. Mr. Fox, it is expected, will be heard the following week and Mr. Moss the week after.

Resume Visual Instruction in Washington

The Americanization class will continue the visual course in the projection room of the Metropolitan theatre after a month's respite.

Sunday Closing Bill Loses in Alabama

By a very narrow margin the Sunday closing bill was defeated in the Alabama legislature by a vote of 17 to 16. Every session has its Sunday closing bill, but never before has opinion and vote been so evenly divided as in this instance, which is considered a distinct victory for the motion picture interests.

Big Plans for Michigan Convention

M.P.T.O. Officials Visit N. Y.

A GROUP of executives of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan, headed by President W. S. McLaren and General Manager H. M. Richey, arrived in New York this week, on important business preliminary to the annual state convention to be held at Jackson October 16-17.

The chief topic which engaged the attention of the exhibitor executives, while in New York, related to the non-theatrical situation in the Wolverine State, which Mr. Richey declared is assuming "serious proportions."

By correspondence with Will H. Hays, a conference was arranged between the Michigan group and Courtland Smith, secretary of the Hays organization, at which the Michigan exhibitors offered the producers "an opportunity to solve the situation."

The Michigan officials also had an appointment with the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers for the purpose of working out an equitable solution of the music tax problem similar to that reached between the Society and the M. P. T. O. of the Northwest at the Minneapolis conference this week.

Mr. Richey, interviewed by a representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, also told in detail of the work of the Michigan organization, and called attention particularly to the business-like manner in which the annual convention was being approached.

New Convention Plan

This involves a brand new convention plan. Instead of waiting until the convention actually meets and then appointing committees, who would do their work hurriedly, the committees have already met, drafted their reports, and are ready, through their chairmen, to go on the convention floor.

"In this way," Mr. Richey added, "the theatre owners will leave the convention knowing exactly what has been done the past year and what the future activities will be, will have an actual part in planning them and will help in carrying them out."

In the Michigan group, who visited New York, besides President McLaren and Mr. Richey, were the following: Glenn Cross, Battle Creek; Phil Gleichman, and Fred DeLoder of Detroit; Claude Cady, Lansing; A. J. Kleist, Pontiac, and W. S. Butterfield, Battle Creek.

Stressing the non-theatrical situation, which he described as a menace to the small exhibitor particularly, Mr. Richey declared that the Michigan organization was seeking only fair play.

"The situation arises in this way," he explained. "The home offices of the distributors are naturally pressing for business. Theatres in a large majority of towns of the State run from two to four nights a week, and they are limited for product to the twenty-five exchanges in the city of Detroit. But they can use the product of only eight or nine of these, and have no room for the others.

"The salesman of the others, urged by exchange managers, who in turn are crowded by New York, seek of course to sell their product to the exhibitor. Finding that the exhibitor has no room for it, the salesman welcomes the opportunity to sell it to the church or school, thus creating serious competition for the little exhibitor.

Will Hays and Sol Lesser, pictured as they sailed for London during the week.

"I do not wish to be unfair to the exchanges, but I think this policy of theirs is very unwise. The result may be the driving out of business of the small theatre owner, and this cannot be a good thing, because the exhibitor is vital to the producer's welfare.

"We have therefore sought the conference with the Hays organization in order to arrive at a co-operative solution of the problem. Our suggestion is that the matter be handled through the Joint Arbitration Boards. Where the exhibitor can show that he is able and willing to pay a fair price for product, the Detroit exchanges should refuse to sell to churches and schools. But, of course, if it is shown that the exhibitor is merely trying to hammer down the price, then the producer should have the opportunity to sell to the non-theatrical institution.

"What we are trying to do is to get relief for the little fellow—fairly and on a co-operative basis. The situation has become so serious that we felt we should come to the Hays organization first. We want to co-operate. But, failing a friendly solution, there are other means available to us. Those we do not wish to use unless it becomes imperative to do so."

Non-Theatrical Situation

Citing an example of what happens in the present non-theatrical situation, Mr. Richey declared he had documentary proof to show that in one case a theatre in Michigan was asked $150 rental for a picture, and then the same picture was sold to a church for $25.

"This matter," he continued, "will be taken up at the Jackson meeting. We want some definite action on it to report to our convention. That is the reason we postponed the meeting until October 16-17.

"It will be a very unusual convention," Mr. Richey went on. "In preparation for it, we called in to Detroit last week the members of five committees—Ways and Means and Budget, Constitution and By-Laws, Admission Tax, Non-Theatrical Situation and Future Activities. These men are from all over the State. The meetings were very successful. We shall go to the convention with our business program and reports all ready. It won't be the usual convention, where things are done in a hurry, officers elected, resolutions passed, etc. You know the kind I mean.

"The Budget Committee have fixed the budget for the new year. The Committee on Constitution and By-Laws have revamped that document for the approval of the delegates. A complete outline of activities is ready."

As an instance of what had been accomplished, Mr. Richey said that the Auditing and Budget Committee estimated the organization would close the year with $7500 to $8000 in the treasury.

"We have also put into force our Fire, Compensation and Public Liability Insurance Department," he continued. "One hundred and twenty-eight fire insurance policies, aggregating $750,000 have been written. This represents a saving to exhibitors of about $80,000. Our headquarters in Detroit is now engaged in mailing out dividend checks to theatre owners. Besides saving them forty-five per cent. on insurance, we have also secured an actual reduction in the premium rate.

"Our Compensation and Public Liability work only began in June, but we have written sixty-eight policies, representing a saving to exhibitors of $11,000.

"For every dime paid by the exhibitors of Michigan to the organization, we have returned one dollar in cash benefits. And this does not include the benefits of protection they have obtained by their membership.

Admission Tax Repeal

"We expect to have the biggest convention we have ever held, and our ambition is to get every theatre owner in the State to Jackson. One of the things we shall do while in New York is to arrange for speakers on specific subjects, such as Insurance, Advertising and Exploitation, Theatre Accounting and Public Good-will—topics vital to the welfare of the exhibitor in the conduct of his business. We expect to have every Michigan Congressman present at the convention, so that they may hear first-hand from the exhibitors of their respective sections on Admission Tax Repeal."

Mr. Richey then outlined the work done already by the organization toward repealing the tax. "I have held seventeen sectional meetings in the State in order to get concrete data on the Admission Tax," he said. "Excluding Detroit, the year has been a poor one for the exhibitors of the state. Fifty-five per cent. of the theatre owners found it necessary to absorb the tax. If they don't get relief, a large number will go out of business."

The entertainment features of the convention have been well provided for. There will be a banquet, a dance and a ham and egg breakfast. For the ladies, President McLaren has arranged a luncheon, a theatre party, a tour through the Jackson State Prison, and a visit to some of the manufacturing plants of the city.

As a final word, Mr. Richey told in one sentence the strength of the Michigan organization: "We have 458 actual, cash, due-paying members," he said, "and there are 512 theatres in the State."

Canadian M. P. T. O. A. Launched

Enthusiastic Meeting Pledges Affiliation With Exhibitors of America

GEORGE B. SPARROW of Montreal was elected the first president of the Canadian Division of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America at its organization meeting in the Mount Royal Hotel, Montreal, on September 6 and 7 when practically 100 representatives of the moving picture theatre business were present from the United States and from the various Canadian Provinces from Manitoba to Nova Scotia. Mr. Sparrow is vice president of His Majesty's theatre, a legitimate house of Montreal, and president of the J. B. Sparrow Theatrical and Amusement Company, Ltd., which is identified with the operation of other theatres in Montreal and Quebec.

The vice president of the Dominion Board elected on the final day of the conference was J. C. Brady, proprietor of the Madison theatre, Toronto, who has been president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors Protective Association of Ontario for years and who has also been prominently identified with the Canadian Exhibitors Exchange, Ltd., Toronto. A. Sperkados of Montreal was appointed treasurer and Vincent Gould of Montreal was chosen as National secretary for Canada with offices in the Albee building, Montreal.

Directors were appointed as follows: For Ontario, Harry Alexander, M. Gebertig and H. Ginsler of Toronto; Fred Guest of Hamilton, Mayor J. A. Cooper of Huntsville, and J. Coplan of the Princess theatre, Ottawa. For Quebec, A. Denis, Montreal, and T. D. Bouchard, member of the Quebec Legislature for St. Hyacinthe. For Maritime Provinces, F. G. Spencer, St. John, N. B., and J. McAdam, Halifax, N. S. For Manitoba, W. Kershaw of Winnipeg, president of the Manitoba Exhibitors Association, and J. McNichol of Winnipeg. The Provinces of British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan were not represented at the convention and no officers were elected for those districts. Three more vice presidents are to be elected as well as a representative from the Province of Ontario on the board of directors of the M. P. T. O. to speak for the Canadian division. H. S. Ross, K. C., Montreal, was appointed legal adviser to the Canadian branch. The only woman at the convention was Ray Lewis of Toronto, editor of the Moving Picture Digest, which was made official organ of the Canadian Division.

Important visitors and officials at the Canadian convention included Sydney S. Cohen, National president of the M. P. T. O., Harry Berman, New York, general sales manager of the Film Booking Offices; R. F. Woodhull, Dover, N. J., president of M. P. T. O. of New Jersey; Charles Whitehurst, Baltimore, M. P. T. O. director; J. M. Seider, East Orange, N. J., Harry Davis, Pittsburgh, director, A. J. Moeller of New York, service manager of the M. P. T. O., and Howard Smith of Buffalo, president of the M. P. T. O. of New York State.

A resolution was adopted in which the Canadian members pledged support to the Theatre Owners' Distributing Corporation with headquarters in New York City. National Motion Picture Day, Monday, November 19, established by the M. P. T. O., was also approved. The annual convention of the Canadian Division of the M. P. T. O. is to be held in May, 1924. Another conference is to be held shortly in Toronto, Ontario, to arrange further details. Canadian directors are to hold meetings each month.

Sydney Cohen spoke on the movement toward "centralized control" of the moving picture industry and declared that the M. P. T. O. would relentlessly oppose this. Film Rental prices and alleged distribution discrimination came in for discussion and President Cohen declared that the enactment of vicious laws had been prevented and several unjust taxes had been revoked as a result of the activity of the M. P. T. O. He pointed to excessive taxes in Canada and declared that moving pictures were to be classed as an economic necessity and not as a luxury such as theatrical performances for which the admission prices ran to $3. Injury to one was the concern of all—was the motto of the organization.

Congressman Bloom of New York City declared that he had built his first theatre 17 years ago and had been building them ever since—in adding his good wishes and greetings to those of President Cohen. Alderman Trepanier of Montreal officially welcomed the delegates and visitors to Montreal. G. B. Sparrow, who was ultimately elected president of the Canadian association, was the chairman of the splendid luncheon which was conducted in the Mount Royal Hotel at noon on September 7.

Chicago Houses Advancing Admission Prices

WITH reports of better business becoming general, a tendency towards slight advance in admission prices to meet the mounting film rentals is apparent in Chicago, and several theatres already have made advances. Among these are the Howard, which goes to forty cents for adults and seventeen cents for children; the Keystone which goes from twenty-five cents to twenty-eight; the De Luxe, from twenty-five cents to twenty-eight; the Panorama, twenty-two to twenty-five; the Douglas and Rogers, twenty-two to twenty-five, and the Adelphi and Bryn Mawr.

It is reported that a number of other theatres will announce price boosts in the next few days.

Authors and Critics on Picture Values

"Best and Worst" Are Picked

OPINIONS on motion pictures from authors and newspaper critics throughout the country have been gathered by the Hays organization and distributed to producers for their information.

In asking the writers and critics for their views, Will H. Hays wrote that their communications would be considered confidential; therefore no names can be printed. The collection of opinions, however, includes some of the best known people in the writing world, as well as many of the representative newspaper reviewers of photoplays.

The questionnaire asked for opinions under the following heads: Best Feature; Worst Feature; Best Comedy; Worst Comedy, and General Remarks. The newspaper critics usually stuck closely to these classifications. The authors, however, ignored them entirely, in some instances, and wrote essays on the subject of "What's Wrong with the Movies."

Among the authors, "The Covered Wagon," closely followed by "Robin Hood," "Down to the Sea in Ships" and "Nanook," led the "best features." Others named were: "Tol'able David," "The Village Blacksmith," "Tess of the Storm Country," "The Law of the Lawless," "Human Wreckage," "Minnie," "Vanity Fair," "The Birth of a Nation," "Hearts of the World," "The Tale of Two Cities," "Sentimental Tommy," "Prisoner of Zenda," "Forever," "A Doll's House," the Strongheart pictures, "The Bright Shawl," "Grumpy," and "When Knighthood Was in Flower."

Opinions in Detail

A few of the authors put down what they considered the "worst features," as follows: "The Rustle of Silk," "The Impossible Mrs. Bellew," "Sawdust," "Prodigal Daughters," "The Top of the Morning," "The Ne'er Do Well," "Adam's Rib" and "The Beautiful and Damned."

Comedies considered best were: "Grandma's Boy," "Shoulder Arms," "The Kid," "Penrod and Sam," "Grumpy" and "The Shriek of Araby." Worst: "Safety Last," the Nervy Ned Series, and Chaplin's comedies. One author answered by saying: "Almost all."

Miriam Battista was recently given an audience by President Coolidge when she made a personal appearance at one of the Washington theatres.

In the newspaper poll, fifty-four critics went on record. "Down to the Sea in Ships" and "Only 38" head the list of "best features." Then follow "Robin Hood," "The Covered Wagon," "Penrod and Sam," "Within the Law," "Enemies of Women" and "Driven." The following got one vote each: "Peg of My Heart," "Trifling Women," "Oliver Twist," "Bali the Unknown," "Grumpy," "The Critical Age," "Quicksands," "Alice Adams," "The Rustle of Silk," "The Flirt," "Where the Pavement Ends," "The Go-Getter," "Salome," "Minnie," "The Famous Mrs. Fair," "The Isle of Lost Ships," 'The Girl I Loved," "The Flame of Life," "Environment," "Lost and Found," "Skin Deep," "The Christian," and "Jazzmania."

"The Rustle of Silk" and "Souls for Sale" tied for the "worst feature" in the opinion of the newspaper critics. Then follows "The Village Blacksmith" with three votes and these with one apiece: "Has the World Gone Mad?" "The Shock," "Bella Donna" and "Adam's Rib." The following got one vote each as the worst: "Dollar Devils," "Temptation," "The Light in the Dark," "Children of Jazz," "Cordelia the Magnificent," "Is Divorce a Failure?" "Jazzmania," "Salome," "The Snow Bride," "Crossed Wires," "Wandering Daughters," "Look Your Best," "Three Who Paid," "The Little Wildcat," "Refuse," "Secrets of Paris," "Kisses," "Only a Shop Girl," "Face on the Barroom Floor," "Pawned," "Alias Julius Caesar."

Harold Lloyd's comedies overwhelmingly top all others as "best" in the view of the newspaper folk. He gets 19 of the 54 votes. "Safety Last" received 15 votes, "Grandma's Boy" three and "Dr. Jack" one. Douglas MacLean received two votes, one each for "Bellboy 13" and "The Hottentot." These got one vote each: "Where Is My Wandering Boy This Evening?" "Continent Yankee," "The Love Nest," "Kick Out,' "The Baloonatic," "Minnie," "Luck," "Penrod and Sam," and "The Pilgrim."

When it came to discussing "the worst comedy," the critics gave free rein to general condemnation, and only mentioned a few by name. The list is headed by "Mary of the Movies," with four votes, followed by "Sixty Cents An Hour" with three, and "The Pilgrim" with two. These got a vote apiece: "The Midnight Cabaret," "Mr. Billings Spends His Dime," "Rob 'Em Good" and "Carmen, Jr."

Referring to an article recently published which rumored the removal of the Southern Enterprise offices from Atlanta, Mr. Franklin reports that while the Atlanta offices will be discontinued as a home office, it will be continued as a District office. Furthermore, because of the remarkable development in theatre activities in the southern section, District offices will also be established immediately in Memphis, Jacksonville, Charlotte, Dallas, Oklahoma City and San Antonio, with provision for additional offices in other active centers in accordance with anticipated expansion.

Open Air Shows in Small Villages

Des Moines Paramount Exchange Puts Outdoor Commnity Programs Across

WHEN the warm weather comes and their patrons turn to outdoor recreation, hundreds of exhibitors in small towns and villages close their doors for the summer. A plan which offers a way out of this loss for these exhibitors, and which also bids fair to develop openings for theatres where none now exist, has been put into effect the past summer by A. W. Nicolls, branch manager for Paramount at Des Moines, John E. Kenneback, exploiter at that exchange, and the Des Moines salesmen.

The idea consisted in nothing more or less than selling these exhibitors, or commercial clubs, on presenting Paramount Pictures in the open air—on the town square or in the streets—on certain nights each week to bring the farmers to town.

This was accomplished in one of two ways: either the salesman helped the exhibitor to get the merchants behind him for outdoor summer shows on a certain night each week, for which each merchant paid the exhibitor a specified sum; or the salesman sold the pictures outright to the commercial club to be shown outdoors by that body.

In the case of the commercial clubs, it required real salesmanship to round up the directors for a conference and sell the idea to all of them, but the experience in the Des Moines territory showed that it could be done.

As a result, several small towns have built their own projection booth in the open, the screen across the street and permanent wooden horses for bench supports. In some such towns, pictures have supplanted the ever-popular band concerts to draw farmers to town on a summer evening. In other settlements, the band has furnished music during the showing of the pictures.

A. H. Diekmann, secretary of the Commercial Club of Denver, Ia., told the Paramount exploiter:

"The showing of pictures in the open on Saturday nights has done more to stimulate trade, bring people to town and to enliven the community than anything we have ever tried."

H. A. Woodson, secretary of the Commercial Club of Stanley, Ia., a town of 160 souls, said:

"The pictures bring as many as 1,500 people to town and the cost to the merchants is very nominal. It seems they come from all over. If they can't find seats, they park their cars nearby and watch the pictures from the running boards."

The following towns in the Des Moines territory have been following the open air stunt of showing pictures under the auspices of local merchants: Denver, Ellsworth, Tingley, Lohrville, Leon, Plymouth, Stanley, Linden, Alexander, Zearing, Auburn, Colo, Gravity, Dallas Center, Lidderdale, Dana, Alexander, Ridgeway, Wadena, Baxter, Central City, Gilman, Elliston and Sharpsburg.

Eight operators of moving picture theatres were arrested at Memphis, Tenn., Sept. 1, charged with "unlawfully conducting a motion picture entertainment on Sunday" in violation of a statute enacted at the last session of the Tennessee Legislature.

Each made bond for $250 at police headquarters.

The theatres were not closed by the police and continued to operate as though nothing had happened. The cases will be appealed to the highest courts in the State, in event conviction is had.

Goldwyn Corporation Sues Samuel Goldwyn

Suit has been brought by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation to restrain Samuel Goldwyn from using his name in connection with the release of pictures. It is claimed by the Goldwyn concern that they have spent over $2,400,000 in exploiting the name of the corporation.

A preliminary injunction is asked restraining Samuel Goldwyn from the use of the name in connection with his productions "Potash and Perlmutter" and "The Eternal City."

Flynn to Make Owen Davis Melodrama

Emmett J. Flynn has decided upon his second picture under his new alliance with Goldwyn. It will be based upon one of Owen Davis' earlier successful melodramas, "Nellie, the Beautiful Cloak Model." Flynn, only a few weeks ago, completed his first Goldwyn production, "In the Palace of the King."

P. T. Barnum Seen as First Exploiteer

Career Reviewed, by Benj. Hur

ASTUTE, shrewd and ingenious, P. T. Barnum has become almost a tradition in the show business. The recent publication of "Barnum," written by M. R. Werner and published by Harcourt, Brace & Co., serves as a reminder that however much exploitation may have grown and developed, it still remains essentially what P. T. Barnum made it. The growth of our institutions and changes in the machinery of civilization have led to surface alterations in the technique of "press agenting," but at the bottom of things, every showman of today owes a great debt to the daring and originality of the pioneer exploiteer, P. T. Barnum.

As a result, "Barnum" is not only a fascinating picture of a unique character, but a gold mine of exploitation suggestions, and may be profitably read by the exhibitor or exploiteer of today.

Barnum was what we in America call a "character." He had an unusual personality and exploited that personality to the full. Twice he lost his property and much of his capital, yet he left an estate valued at $4,-00,000. When he made his will, he had the soundness of his mind tested and sworn to by various reputable physicians in order to block any contest of his will, if possible, and set aside $100,000 to combat any that might be started.

His First Fortune

He made his first fortune as manager of Barnum's American Museum, New York's "store-house of curiosities, natural, theatrical and unnatural." He had been engaged in various pursuits of a commercial nature before this, but never successfully. He was a born showman and the American Museum gave him the chance to do the very thing he was born to do—cater to the amusement-loving public, and to do it in such a way that the public applauded and came again even when they were "sold." Barnum early learned, in conducting the American Museum, the value of the newspaper as a medium for reaching the amusement-hungry public. He made it a point to become personally acquainted with proprietors of the various newspapers in New York and even with the foremen of the composing rooms, who often inserted for him announcements about the Museum after the entire editorial staff had gone home. He knew that if he could make his Museum the talk of New York, success was assured. He accomplished this end by using every available means of advertising. He often created the means when none were available.

Here is an example quoted by Mr. Werner in his life of Barnum on pages 52 and 53, which bears ample evidence of his inherent showmanship—"A man came to the box-office of the Museum one morning and asked for money. Barnum inquired why he did not work, and, after buying him his breakfast, employed him at $1.50 for the day. The man's job was to place a brick on the corner of Broadway and Ann Street, another brick on the corner of Broadway and Vesey Street, another in front of the Astor House, and another in front of St. Paul's Church. This brick-layer was to hold a fifth brick in his hand and he was to continue from brick to brick exchanging the brick in his hand with the brick on the walk, without talking to anyone en route.

Strongheart and Lady Jule as they will appear in "The Love Master," which Larry Trimble is Making for First National.

"At the end of every hour of this work, he was to present a ticket to the Museum, walk through the building and pass out to continue solemnly his brick work. Half an hour after the man began his round, five hundred men and women were watching him, and trying by repeated questioning to solve the mystery of his purpose. Solemn and taciturn, he went from brick to brick, ignoring commands and questions of the crowd, and at the end of the first hour the streets surrounding the Museum were filled with people. Whenever he entered the Museum, people bought tickets and followed him, hoping that inside was the solution to the riddle of his strange actions. After several days of this walking advertisement, the police interfered and insisted that Barnum must withdraw his man because of the congestion of traffic he caused, for the crowd practically closed all streets near the Museum. But Barnum's bricks were discussed for several weeks.

Real Exploitation

This is probably the best example of exploitation which can be given to the manager of a motion picture theatre. The prime fact aimed at in any motion picture exploitation is to arouse the curiosity of the public about the picture exhibited. Barnum's idea with the bricks was to arouse the curiosity of people as the purpose of the brick-layer's action, until the curiosity became so keen that they would buy tickets to the Museum to gratify it. The exhibitors' problem is so to arouse the curiosity of the public in his picture that they will buy tickets to see the production. All of their efforts in direct street exploitation are based upon this appeal curiosity.

Barnum was able to humbug his public and often did so both at the Museum and later in the great Barnum & Bailey circus. But exhibitors must remember that Barnum had a new crowd of people every day; also he relied upon the fact that American people like to be fooled and then see their neighbor fooled in the same way. He may have, and often did employ means that cannot be characterized as entirely honest in drawing people into the Museum and into his circus, but he always prided himself upon giving them more than their money's worth once they were inside. The motion picture theatre manager has the same clientele to appeal to week after week, and he must be more honest with his clientele than Barnum sometimes was.

One of the attractions which Barnum purchased for his American Museum was the so-called "Fiji Mermaid" which he bought from Moses Kimball, proprietor of the Boston Museum. Barnum's means of bringing this new curiosity to the attention of his possible patrons would seem to be very circuitous and indirect. Soon after the mermaid came into his possession, a news letter appeared in the New York Herald from Montgomery, Ala. After telling of the state of trade, condition of crops and politics, the news letter mentioned near its end that Dr. Griffin of the Lyceum of Natural History, London, who had but recently returned from Pernambuco, had in his trunk a most remarkable curiosity—a real mermaid found in the Fiji Islands, preserved by Chinese, and purchased by Dr. Griffin for the London Lyceum. A week later a similar letter from Charleston, S. C., was published in another New York newspaper. A third letter was mailed from Washington, D. C., to a third New York newspaper some time later and stated that Dr. Griffin was soon to visit to New York enroute to London and expressed the hope that New Yorkers would get to see this extraordinary curiosity.

The Mermaid Stunt

When Dr. Griffin, who was an employee of Barnum's, reached Philadelphia he was persuaded to let the proprietor of the hotel where he stopped and a few other persons see the mermaid. The result was that Philadelphia newspapers for the next day and several days thereafter, commented upon the great natural phenomena. Barnum had had prepared several engravings of the mermaid and he now took them to three New York newspapers telling them that he had hoped to induce Dr. Griffin to exhibit his mermaid at the American Museum, but that it was impossible for Dr. Griffin to exhibit it publicly anywhere except in London, the engravings were now worthless to Barnum and the newspaper might have them. The following Sunday, each of the three newspapers printed a different picture of the mermaid and learned for the first time that rival newspapers also had them.

Then Barnum hired from an agent a concert hall on Broadway and the newspapers printed advertisements that Dr. Griffin had been prevailed upon to show the mermaid for one week only at the concert hall. When the week was over, Barnum advertised that he had induced Dr. Griffin to show the mermaid at the American Museum.

This is a good instance of the deception with which Barnum humbugged the public, but he justified himself on the ground that once inside the Museum, patrons got more than their money's worth.

Barnum As First Exploiteer

In later years, when Barnum decided to bring the "Swedish Nightingale," Jenny Lind, to the United States for a concert, on account of the furore which she had created in Europe, he found, in a talk with a railroad conductor, that the average American knew nothing whatever about Jenny Lind. Her tour under his management was to commence six months later, and he set about the task of informing America of the great singer's merits. Barnum wrote a statement for the press concerning the rumor that he had engaged Miss Lind and at the end of his statement made mention of the fact that the singer, since her debut in England, had given to the poor from her own purse more than the entire amount which Barnum had engaged to pay her for the American tour. In every bit of advertising and publicity thereafter, great stress was laid upon Miss Lind's charities as well as her ability as a singer.

Barnum, in this instance, carried to the Nth degree the now universal rule, in all kinds of amusement publicity, of exploiting the personalities of the performers. Motion Picture publicity men and exhibitors find most of their newspaper and magazine publicity along this line.

The auctioning off of tickets for the first performance of a theatrical and musical performance was in all probability started by Barnum with Jenny Lind's first concert. For publicity purposes, he auctioned off admissions to the first concert. Prices rose rapidly for the first ticket and it was finally sold for $225 to Genin, the hatter, whose establishment adjoined Barnum's American Museum. Genin bought the ticket on the advice of Barnum for its advertising value for his own wares. The next day, more than two million readers in New York alone knew that Genin was a hatter and the newspapers of the country soon informed their readers of that fact.

Barnum believed in publicity whether or not the particular event was connected up with a specific amusement venture. After he had sent the forerunner of the circus, Barnum's great Asiatic Caravan, Museum and Menagerie, about the country for four years, he sold it all except one elephant which he retained for his personal use. In charge of a keeper the animal was sent to Bridgeport and to Barnum's farming land adjoining "Iranistan," as his very Asiatic-looking home was called. He put both to new use. The keeper was dressed in new oriental costume and directed to plow the six-acre field near the railroad track every time a passenger train on the New York and New Haven Railroad appeared in sight. Passengers, of course, all wondered at the sight of the elephant plowing ground and the newspapers carried stories far and wide with the result that Barnum received hundreds of letters from farmers asking if elephants could profitably be used on the farm. There was no sign of any sort on the elephant, but it served to direct attention to Barnum, and Barnum's name was so well connected with the American Museum that the publicity richocheted and hit the Museum.

Barnum did not hesitate to use the courts to obtain publicity. At least, such is the inference made by Mr. Werner in his "Barnum." He was sued by one William Charr who complained that he had gone to the Museum to see the bearded lady, and who claimed that he had been humbugged out of his 25c admission charge, maintaining that the bearded lady was a man. The charge was tried in court and, of course, the newspapers were full of it. Barnum could easily have proved his case out of court but he was delighted to have it aired there.

Barnum believed in the value of controversy, and never refrained from engaging in one. He even attacked and questioned the honesty of other showmen. One year on his program appeared this couplet:

"Others may issue paper lies,
But we show all we advertise."

Barnum's dictum on advertising is quoted by Mr. Werner: "And above all advertise! But I say if a man has got goods for sale and he doesn't advertise them in some way, the chances are that some day the sheriff will do it for him." His own advertising for the Museum and later for the Barnum & Bailey circus was of a spectacular and flamboyant style. In discussing advertising, he was very hard on the man who defaced the landscape with billboards, and yet in actual practice, with the circus at least, Barnum billed very freely and within a greater radius that any other circus man. The Barnum & Bailey circus was billed for a radius of seventy-five miles around and railroads were induced to run excursion trains to the circus. It was said that his advertising brigade of bill-posters posted more bills in one week than other circus companies posted in an entire season.

George M. Cohan, one of the astutest of theatrical showmen, could, if he did not do so, have taken a leaf from this "Prince of Humbugs," as Barnum delighted to call himself Barnum was generally patriotic but that did not prevent him from profiting financially from it. In 1876, the centenary of the Declaration of Independence, he added a list of patriotic numbers to the circus. There was a Goddess of Liberty; "a gigantic live American Eagle," which was scheduled to "hover overhead"; groups of patriotic figures, including a man dressed as the "Father of his Country"; and other appropriately costumed Revolutionary heroes. "A stupendous chorus of several hundred thoroughly trained voices" sang 'My Country 'Tis of Thee' while the Goddess of Liberty triumphantly waved the Stars and Stripes.

Barnum always boasted of giving a moral show, both in his Museum and later in the circus. He gave passes freely to the newspapers and also to the clergy, and the latter frequently gave him as valuable publicity as did the press.

Mr. Werner's book, "Barnum" is a digest of the showmanship of perhaps the greatest showmen who ever lived and one of the most picturesque characters that our national life has developed. The author has written the biography, it might be said, without fear of contradiction, from the point of view of exhibitors and other showmen, and has brought out just those points that will be of value to those who offer the public amusement in any form. It will repay a careful perusal on the part of any exhibitor.

Admission Tax Brings Deficit to Small Exhibitor

AN example of how the Admission Tax works against the small exhibitor is at hand in a letter to Motion Picture News from A. R. Cavaness, of the New Plaza theatre, Phoenix, Arizona.

"Ever since we have been compelled to collect the war tax we have run behind," Mr. Cavaness writes. "We have gone on in the hope that each year the tax would be lifted. Both myself and my sons have mortgaged our homes in order to hold on. On July 4, 1923, our theatre was destroyed by fire and we had to raise the money to reopen.

"If it weren't for the war tax we could all make a decent living, but with the tax hanging over our heads there is no possible way to make a cent, for the Government gets all the profit. Sometimes we have to dig down in our pockets to pay the tax. I know there are hundreds of little exhibitors in the same fix as myself."

South Carolina Exhibitors Escape Special Tax

It is pretty well conceded now that South Carolina exhibitors will escape entirely the special state-wide ten per cent admission tax imposed as a part of the taxing scheme of the last General Assembly. The special tax board upon passage of the bill allowed a respite to the theatres until September 1, 1923, and now they have allowed a further continuance of its enforcement until January 1, 1924.

Since the General Assembly meets again in January and exhibitors feel confident they can have this part of the tax measure repealed it is meeting with general satisfaction as handled by the tax board.

New Companies Increase; Capital Decreases

A comparison of the motion picture business in New York State during the midsummer months shows that 50 companies were formed during July and August this year as against 39 during the same months a year ago.

The capitalization of the companies forming this year, however, shows a slight decrease, the aggregate for the two months reaching $1,090,200, as against $1,544.500 covering the companies of a year ago. In July this year, 23 companies were chartered as against 19 in July, 1922; while August brought 27 new motion picture concerns in comparison to the 20 of last year.

Cosmopolitan Wins Test Suit in Illinois

Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan was awarded the verdict in the suit brought against them by The Stoolman-Pyle Corporation of Champaign, Ill., for alleged violation of contract. The concern sued for an injunction when "Enemies of Women" was given the Orpheum opposition house, as a first run. It was alleged the plaintiffs had been promised the picture.

The court held that Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan had the right to rent the picture to any company they desired.

Executives Discuss Foreign Outlook

Lieber and Shauer Give Views

VARYING views on motion picture conditions abroad were expressed this week by Robert Lieber, president of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., and E. E. Shauer, assistant treasurer of Famous Players-Lasky and director of the company's foreign department. Both officials returned recently from several months' trip to the other side.

Motion pictures in Europe have yet to acquire the dignity which they have attained in this country. This is the belief of Mr. Lieber. The picture industry abroad has not established itself as a permanent, established force in national life, especially among the better classes.

"'I find particularly," said he, "that the press still has an idea that this business of ours is a sort of fly-by-night proposition that is going to pass beyond the horizon again. About every time a newspaperman asked for an interview the first question he fired at me was: 'Well, how long do you think this business of yours is going to last?' I gladly took advantage of the opportunity which was offered me at the banquet of the First National Convention in London last month to give my answer publicly to this question. We have the most natural form of amusement for the people that has ever been given to the world, and I don't care who the man is, let me know him, and I will entertain him with the cinema.

"I find also in Europe, and this holds true in the Scandinavian countries as well as in England, that the industry has not succeeded in 'selling' itself to what might be termed, for lack of a better term, the 'higher ups' in society, and as a result this amusement of ours is not treated with the same sort of consideration that is given it in the States.

Theatre Standards Abroad

"I went into a few theatres in Gothenburg, Stockholm and Christiania, and I was really surprised at the excellence of their amusement houses. While the theatres are older and not as large as the better houses in the United States, yet from a standpoint of beauty and upkeep they can well be included among good houses.

"Unfortunately I saw very few Swedish theatres in operation, because in that country and in Norway the theatres generally close during the short summer period. I find that the average Scandinavian is so intent upon making the best of his short summer that indoor amusements have no chance. The people are intent upon being out of doors during the short time the sun shines upon them, and men of means and men of only moderate circumstances have their summer homes and go to them week-ends.

"In England I find that the theatres, generally speaking, are not as good as in Sweden. It is evident, from an examination of British building restrictions before the war, that England at that time did not recognize the necessity of good theatres as clearly as Sweden. Consequently, when building operations stopped in 1914, the British had not advanced as far as had the Scandinavian countries. There is, however, a strong tendency to build at the present time, and just before leaving London I visited a new house in the suburbs, a theatre with nearly 3,000 seats, built by a man who thoroughly understands the motion picture business in its present-day stage.

"In proof of my first observation—that the screen has not been recognized as a permanent and stable and dignified institution—I could cite any number of opinions of prominent men, all of which belittle the screen. But this will, of course, change, even as it is changing today."

The European motion picture industry stands at the threshold of what promises to be the most successful year in its history, in the opinion of Mr. Shauer, who returned on September 7 from a visit of several months to European film centers. He was accompanied by Harold M. Pitman of the Paramount legal department and by Ike Blumenthal of the Paramount foreign organization in Berlin.

Excellent Prospects

"At no time since the war," said Mr. Shauer in discussing conditions in the film industry abroad, "have the prospects for good business been as excellent as they are today. I found a great improvement in conditions over last year, and unless all signs fail all branches of the industry are certain to enjoy an improved business during the coming twelve months.

"The leasing of the London Pavilion, Tivoli, Palace and Empire theatres by leading American producers and distributors for first run showings of big pictures marks a new step forward in the British film industry, perhaps the most important since the war. More attention is being paid to the elevation of the screen to the important position it demands in an artistic theatrical sense, and it will also bring about a new era of exploitation in Great Britain, which will have a tremendous effect upon the growth of the business during the coming years.

"Distributing conditions are becoming more nearly normal, with the completion of a number of new theatres, and before the year is over our British release schedule will be on about the same basis as in the United States.

"One of the many improvements which impressed me greatly was the wonderful spirit I found in business circles in the Central European countries, Czecho-Slovakia, Austria and Hungary, where the work of regeneration is already well under way. The people are cheerful, business is improving and money has become stabilized. Everywhere in Prague, Vienna and Budapest I found the people working with a will for the rebuilding of their countries. As a result of this great improvement in conditions we expect to announce shortly new arrangements for the distribution of Paramount pictures in this territory."

"Scaramouche" Premiere in Washington, D. C.

ACCOMPANIED by his wife, Alice Terry, and several members of his staff, Rex Ingram, Metro director, arrived in New York this week from Hollywood, bringing with him a completely edited print of "Scaramouche," the picturization of Rafael Sabatini's romance of the French Revolution.

The world premiere of the picture is scheduled to given at the Shubert-Belasco theatre, Washington, D. C., Saturday night, September 15. Its Broadway showing will be at the Forty-fourth Street theatre late in the month.

Mr. Ingram is concluding final preparations for the New York showing. On the trip East from the Coast he completed the editing of the picture, assisted by Grant Whytock, who had direct charge of the job of trimming the footage from 100,000 to 10,000 feet.

The director and his staff, including Curt Ehfeld, production manager, also spent considerable time on the music score, upon which several noted American composers have been at work for a long time. An elaborate presentation will be given the production.

Universal Signs O'Malley for "Mamie Rose"

Patrick O'Malley has been signed by Universal to play the romantic male lead in "Mamie Rose," Mary Philbin's initial starring vehicle for that company.

Edwin J. Brady, veteran character actor, has also been cast for a prominent role in the Philbin play, as has Max Davidson.

This play is an adaptation of Lenore Coffey and Harvey Gates. The latter is writing the continuity. Bernard McConville will supervise the production. Irving Cummings will direct.

John Barrymore Is Due on Coast Sept. 18

The announcement comes from the Warner Brothers that John Barrymore is scheduled to arrive at the Warner studio on the West Coast September 18 to commence filming of the Clyde Fitch play, "Beau Brummel."

Carmel Myers, Alec B. Francis and Richard Tucker have been added to the cast of players engaged for the Warner feature. Mary Astor, as was announced previously, will play opposite John Barrymore, and Irene Rich will appear as the Duchess of York. Harry Beaumont will direct the production.

Mildred Harris Is Elliott Dexter's Lead

Mildred Harris has been engaged for the leading feminine role in Elliott Dexter's first production for Grand-Asher, as yet lacking a title. It is an H. William Neill production.

De Witt Jennings has also been engaged to play the important role of Farley, the detective.

Carl Stockdale will play the role of the bookkeeper in Bryant Washburn's first picture for Grand-Asher directed by Cullen Tate. This picture is called "Try and Get It," and is adapted by Jules Furthman from the Eugene P. Lyle story, "The Ring-Tailed Gallawampus."

Gathering Film Biography of T. R.

Industry Co-operating With Roosevelt Memorial Association in Important Work

A MOTION picture biography of Theodore Roosevelt, to consist of every foot of "T. R." film which can be gathered, is to be placed in Roosevelt House, the birthplace of the great President, at No. 28 East 20th Street, New York.

One section of the building, which is being restored by the Roosevelt Memorial Association as a national museum and shrine, is to have a picture theatre, projection apparatus, and vaults for the preservation of Roosevelt film.

The first important public step to enlist the industry's co-operation was taken at a luncheon at the Harvard Club given August 31, by Will H. Hays, who is vice-president of the Roosevelt Memorial Association, and by Hermann Hagedorn, secretary and director of the Association. Representative motion picture men were the guests. As a result of their enthusiastic agreement to aid, the following Film Research Committee was created:

Will H. Hays, chairman; J. Stuart Blackton, of Vitagraph and Elmer Pearson, of Pathe, vice-chairmen; E. W. Hammons, of Educational Films, George McC. Baynes, of Kinograms and Edwin Hill, of Fox News. The purpose of this committee is to interest the industry in the search and to direct the intelligent, concerted effort to gather all Roosevelt film into the care of the Roosevelt Memorial Association.

Mr. Blackton gave the first impetus to the movement by offering to contribute freely every bit of Roosevelt negative to be found in the Vitagraph vaults, which he ordered searched thoroughly. Emanuel Cohen, editor of Pathe News, went to Paris where he directed a search of the Pathe vaults for Roosevelt film not to be found in this country. Other notable contributions have been made or promised.

The nucleus of the film library will be installed in this department upon the opening of Roosevelt House, October 27. The gathering of all Roosevelt film which was begun this summer, will continue until the Roosevelt Memorial Association has collected every foot obtainable. This will be preserved and classified. This means the bringing to light of many forgotten films bearing on important epochs in American history which will be of incalculable direct and reference value in producing historical, educational and dramatic pictures.

When this film library is ready to function, it will be put at the service of all responsible producers, without cost beyond a small service charge. In place of having to search everywhere for a particular piece of Roosevelt film to fit a subject, the producers can go to this central source which will have all the available "T. R." negative together with the authoritative data concerning the man.

F. B. O. Re-issues Feature With Hayakawa

Because of the special interest in the Japanese catastrophe the F. B. O. announce this week a re-edited and remade version of their picture "The Vermilion Pencil" starring Sessue Hayakawa.

Working opposite Hayakawa is Bessie Love. The story was written by Homer Lea, with the direction handled by Norman Dawn. Edward Warren Guyol and Alice Catlin wrote the continuity.

The cast consists of Ann May, Misao Seki, Bessie Love, Sidney Franklin, Thomas Jefferson, Tote du Crow and Omar Whitehead.

The picture now being released is an entirely new version, with an almost complete change of story through excellent recutting.

Kilgour and Belmore in Washburn Cast

Joseph Kilgour has been signed by Bryant Washburn to appear in his first production for Grand-Asher, tentatively titled "Try and Get It," directed by Cullen B. Tate.

The role in the story, by Eugene P. Lyle, Jr., which was published in the Saturday Evening Post, under the title of "The Ring-Tailed Gallawampus," is that of Larry Donovan, proprietor of a big printing establishment. The continuity was written by Jules Furthman.

Lionel Belmore is also a member of the Bryant Washburn cast.

Madge Kennedy Completes "Three Miles Out"

Madge Kennedy has completed the second of a series of six special productions which she is making under the banner of Kenma Corporation. The name of the new picture is "Three Miles Out," and as the title indicates has to do with bootlegging activities in the waters surrounding New York City.

In her supporting cast are Harrison Ford, who is her leading man and Marc MacDermot. The idea for the story was furnished by the famous illustrator, Neysa McMein and the production was directed by Irvin Willat.

Mary Philbin Starts First Starring Jewel

Mary Philbin has started her first Universal Jewel starring picture. Orders from Europe to Universal City outlined four productions for the 1923-1924 Jewel program. The first of these productions is Owen Kildare's "My Mamie Rose," which went into production at Universal City this week with Miss Philbin enacting the role of the wistful, quaint little "Queen of the Bowery" as described by Owen Kildare in his novel.

The screen version has been prepared by Lenore Coffey and Harvey Gates. Irving Cummings will direct.

Such famous characters as Steve Brodie, Chuck Connors, Tim Sullivan and Barney Flynn will be seen in the play, and Fred Datig,, casting director, and Cummings are now carefully choosing the players.

Those who have already been cast to support the youthful star are Pat O'Malley, Edwin J. Brady Lincoln Plummer and Max Davidson.

Halsey Starts Adaptation of "Humming Bird"

Forrest Halsey has begun work at the Paramount Long Island studio on the adaptation of Maude Fulton's play, "The Humming Bird," which will be Gloria Swanson's next picture. Sidney Olcott, who will direct the production, expects to begin work September 24. Halsey is writing the scenario from a treatment of the play which Julian Johnston and Lloyd Sheldon wrote.

Scenes from "Cause for Divorce," a Huge Dierker production, released by Selznick.

Associated Exhibitors have transposed to the screen the Charles Dickens classic, "David Copperfield," from which these scenes were taken.

Co-operative Booking, T.O.D.C. Aim

Lower Film Rentals Promised by President True, of Exhibitor Distributing Concern

CO-OPERATIVE booking is the keynote of a statement issued this week by W. A. True, president of the Theatre Owners Distributing Corporation, which, as announced recently, will begin active operation in October.

"Co-operative buying is no longer a theory," says Mr. True, "it has been tried and has proven practical in many lines of business. We are simply making available for the exhibitors a channel for service and a short cut to lower film rentals by placing at their disposal this plan of an exhibitor owned and exhibitor controlled distributing service, of which co-operative booking is one of the many advantages.

"Let me emphasize that co-operative booking is actually but one of the advantages. Our movement embraces many others, such as elimination of both the duplication of profits and the pyramiding of distribution costs and the reduction of production costs by economic and careful supervision.

"These, and other disturbing factors contributing to the present high cost of pictures, we will materially reduce. But perhaps the advantage most interesting to the average exhibitor is this plan of co-operative booking. Without going deeply into the details, it is sufficient to say that it will lower the film rentals of our product and assure exhibitors of real attractions at prices which are fair and equitable.

"Producers realize that co-operative booking by the exhibitors means intensive distribution which, in turn, means heavy gross bookings on features having real merit and public demand. We are assured of a lineup of pictures with quality and audience appeal, announcement of which will be made shortly."

In addition to the list published in a previous report, Mr. True names the following representative theatre men as solidly behind the Theatre Owners' Distributing Corporation: Eli W. Collins, president of the M. P. T. O. of Arkansas; Frank G. Heller, president, M. P. T. O. of Indiana; R. F. Woodhull, president, M. P. T. O. of New Jersey; Martin G. Smith, president, M. P. T. O. of Ohio; Fred Seegert, president, M. P. T. O. of Wisconsin; Joseph W. Walsh, president, M. P. T. O. of Connecticut; E. M. Fay, president, M. P. T. O. of Rhode Island; David Adams, president, M. P. "Pop" Lubin Dies After Long Illness

Pioneer Producer Passes Away at Philadelphia Home at Age of 72

SIEGMUND LUBIN, whom the film world knew as "Pop," pioneer producer, once a commanding figure in the industry, died September 11 at his summer home in Ventnor City, near Philadelphia, after a long illness. He was 72 years old.

Born in Breslau, Germany, he came to New York when he was sixteen, lived in Boston for a short time and then settled in Philadelphia, where he laid the foundation for his optical business, which in turn became the basis of his ventures in motion pictures.

He was one of the early experimenters, and was said to have got his idea from stereoptic slides shown by Edward Muybridge, then a professor at the University of Pennsylvania, who in 1886 made the famous horse race picture in California.

"Pop" Lubin, taking his first crude pictures in the backyard of his Philadelphia home, would run them off in his optical shop.

"The Auditorium," built by Mr. Lubin at Eighth and Race streets, Philadelphia, was the first theatre in which his early experiments were shown. He later built two other theatres in the Quaker City.

Thus was started the foundation for the Lubin Manufacturing Company, of which Mr. Lubin became president and chief owner, and which in the days of General Film and, afterwards, Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay (V.-L.-S.-E.), was one of the leading producing and distributing companies. In the heyday of his power, Mr. Lubin had an immense studio plant at Betzwood, covering more than 500 acres, where many productions, "big" in those days, were made. His studio at Twentieth Street and Indiana Avenue, Philadelphia, was also the scene of the making of a great number of pictures. Some of the most prominent stars of that period, including Ormi Hawley, Lottie Briscoe, Arthur Johnson, were on the Lubin roster.

Mr. Lubin lost large sums as a result of the Government dissolution suit against the Motion Picture Patents Company, and also because of litigation with Thomas A. Edison. He ceased to be an active figure in the industry about 1916 and sold out his interests to Lewis J. Selznick. Of late years, Mr. Lubin had devoted himself to his optical business in Philadelphia.

He is survived by his daughters, Mrs. Emily Lowry and Mrs. J. A. White, of New York.

Labor Trouble Being Settled Rapidly

Arbitration Methods Generally Give Slight Increases to Musicians, Operators

LABOR troubles are gradually being ironed out in different parts of the country. For the most part they are being arbitrated with slight increases generally being given the workers.

Substantial increases in the wages of musicians in St. Louis motion picture houses, theatres and other places of amusement are provided in contracts just signed by the theatres. In addition several of the leading motion picture houses are paying bonuses to get desirable players. Musicians are now receiving $3 to $5 a week more than a year ago without considering the bonuses.

The proposed strike of musicians and operators, which threatened, not only to deprive the picture houses of Detroit of music, but close them entirely on September 1, has been successfully arbitrated between the unions and the Theatrical Managers' Association.

The musicians asked for a $20 weekly increase, but finally compromised an a $10 increase for musicians in the downtown theatres and an 8 per cent. increase for those playing in the neighborhood houses. The operators were granted an increase of $12 weekly.

Exhibitors and musicians have come to an agreement in Jamestown, N. Y., where the melody manufacturers have decided to accept the raise offered them by the theatre men.

A compromise agreement on wages has been reached between the musicians and practically all of the major houses in Rochester with the exception of the Lyceum, Regent, Piccadilly and Family. A meeting between union officials and managers of these houses is expected to iron out the trouble completely. By the agreement the musicians in the Eastman, Temple, Fay's, Gayety, Victoria and several of the smaller houses, will get a flat increase of $5 a week over the minimum scale for a six-day week with extra pay for Sunday work. The musicians asked for a boost of $10.

After nearly a month of negotiations looking towards an increase as of September 1, averaging from fifteen to thirty per cent. in the weekly emoluments of motion picture theatre projectionists and musicians the conference committee of the Projectionist's Local No. 224, and the Musicians' Local No. 161, accepted the draft offered by the managers committee, in so far as a net increase of ten per cent. was offered on the scale for the projection department of very union-shop motion picture house in the city of Washington.

The wage scale of musicians playing in motion picture theatres of Cleveland is still unsettled, after ten continuous weeks of negotiations. Latest reports state that Ed Haug, business agent of the Mutual Musical Protective Association, has announced that he will stand pat on his original demand for a 20 per cent. increase.

When the Operators' Union presented their contract to the managers of Tampa, Fla., this year, it called for an increase in pay amounting to 10c. an hour. The managers could not see their way clear to pay this amount, but offered to pay an increase of 5c. an hour. This was accepted by the Union and all houses have signed up at that rate, with the exception of the Prince theatre.

Wage differences between the exhibitors in Albany, N. Y., and operators in that city, will be ironed out in a satisfactory way within the next few days. While the operators have demanded an increase of about 40 per cent. in wages, it is expected that a compromise will be effected in an offer made them of a 20 per cent. increase retroactive to Labor Day.

The labor disputes with projector machine operators, musicians, stage hands, and bill posters, that a few weeks ago threatened most of the New England centers of the motion picture industry have now been settled to the satisfaction of all parties, and in nearly every case an agreement on wage increases has been reached. Information at hand gives no news of the failure of the management granting an increase, though it was usually a compromise rather than the increase originally demanded.

Griffith Making Patriotic Production

Producing Story of Revolutionary Period on Big Scale at Request of D. A. R. Officials

RESPONDING to a request from officials of the Daughters of the American Revolution, transmitted through Will H. Hays, D. W. Griffith is at work on a motion picture based on the founding of the American Government.

The request, according to announcement this week, was made first to the Committee on Public Relations, affiliated with the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., of which Mr. Hays is president. Mrs. Anthony Wayne Cook, president general, and Mrs. Charles White Nash, New York Regent, representing the D. A. R. on the Committee, made the request. The Committee sent the request to Mr. Hays who turned it over to Mr. Griffith and obtained his consent.

The film as at present outlined is to show the struggles, sacrifices and results of the Revolutionary Period.

In a letter to Mr. Hays, outlining the picture, Mr. Griffith wrote in part, after pointing out the present world-wide unrest and the danger of Bolshevism: "Our idea of a motion picture that is much needed in America is to show conditions in America as they are today, of various phases of unrest and dissatisfaction, to show how the average workman of today, with his bathroom and plumbing, lives better than the kings of the world up to 150 years ago. In the battles between labor and capital, let them both argue out their troubles as much as they will, but one thing all must remember: to be careful that no act imperils, in any way, the sacred institutions of these United States."

Mr. Griffith then outlined the scope of the picture, which would include the Boston Tea Party, Lexington and Concord, Paul Revere's Ride, the heroism of Nathan Hale, the dark days at Valley Forge, and all the events of the Revolution leading up to the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown.

"The romance for such a story has been originally written by Robert W. Chambers," the letter continues. "He will give his time and practically invaluable services, owing to his great knowledge of everything pertaining to the historic as well as the romantic side of a picture dealing with this theme." The producer will also have the assistance of John L. E. Pell, an authority on American history, and Anthony Paul Kelly, playwright and scenarist.

"No effort should be spared in telling the greatest story we believe possible to tell Americans—the story of their country," Mr. Griffith concludes.

WHAT SHOWMEN THINK OF CURRENT RELEASES

Exhibitors' Box-Office Reports

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATRES

FAMOUS PLAYERS

Bluebeard's Eighth Wife—

Played to excellent business all week, and all seemed to agree that it was the best Swanson so far. Mighty well liked, in other words. (East.)

Especially designed to build up box office receipts, this one turned the trick. S. R. O. every night. (East.)

Excellent picture of its type. Heard much favorable comment. Good business. (Middle West.)

Gloria Swanson always a drawing card. This proved no exception and packed 'em in all week. Highly praised by press and patrons. (East.)

They like this one. Nice business. One of the gilded pictures in which Miss Swanson appears to advantage. (Middle West.)

The Silent Partner—

Interesting plot, well directed and well acted. Business stood up very well. (Middle West.)

A likeable picture, well patronized. (East.)

Fine picture, which drew good business in connection with a Turpin comedy. (Middle West.)

Lawful Larceny—

Got away to big holiday start and maintained pleasing standard all week. Good society drama with action that seemed to please. (East.)

This picture is a good one. It didn't draw more than a fair crowd, but those who saw it liked it much. (Middle West.)

A good picture, which drew well. (Middle West.)

Hollywood—

This was something new for the fans in the way of a tale of screen life in Hollywood. Very refreshing according to critics. Very good business. (East.)

This picture was a great disappointment. Opened big, but dropped during the week. Middle West.)

Another big propaganda picture, capitalizing the stars of the screen. Did not get by so well with the patrons, as they are tired of this type of picture, especially when they can get real photoplays in which the stars really take parts. Business fair, and picture held over for a second week. (West.)

A very entertaining picture which our audiences liked. Business good. (Middle West.)

A very satisfactory picture. Business good. (Middle West.)

The Cheat—

Shows Miss Negri at her best. Patrons like it very much. Receipts held up against strong competition. (Middle West.)

Played to good houses all week. (Middle West.)

Just a fair picture. Not up to Pola's standard. Business good. (Middle West.)

Salomy Jane—

A fair picture. Business fair. (Middle West.)

A good box office attraction which played to good crowds. (Middle West.)

The Purple Highway—

An average business for a week's run. (Middle West.)

FIRST NATIONAL

Dulcy—

A treat all the way through. Patrons thought so too. Very big week. (Middle West.)

Constance Talmadge does good acting in this one. Well liked by our audiences. (Middle West.)

Minnie—

Not very pleasing to audiences here. Business only fair. (West.)

The Girl of the Golden West—

The vogue for Westerns helped this offering to attract satisfactory business for seven days. An entertaining picture. (East.)

Potash and Perlmutter—

A sympathetic, well made film. (East.)

GOLDWYN-COSMO

Three Wise Fools—

As a house opener this caught big evening audiences, but matinees rather light. Press called it a delightful story, and patrons seemed to concur.

The silent drama version of the melodrama is enhanced with effects the stage cannot achieve. Perfectly presented. Very good business (East.)

Enemies of Women—

A wonderful feature. Played to such big business held it over for another week. (Middle West.)

UNIVERSAL

Merry-Go-Round—

A good week's business with this one. (Middle West.)

Catering to best patronage of the city, it caught an exacting class of theatregoers, and in large numbers.

Was called one of the best staged pictures of the season. (East.)

Continues to do a very good business on second week of run. A fine picture. Held over for a third week. (West.)

Jewel—

Where Is This West—

A good program picture that didn't go over as well as it ought to on its merits. (Middle West.)

Legally Dead—

Business fair. Picture the same. (East.)

Shadows of the North—

Great work in this, and the dog went strong. Excellent buusiness. (East.)

METRO

The French Doll—

One of the best pictures in which Mae Murray has appeared. The women especially like it. Gives them the latest fashion hints. Good business during week's run. (Middle West.)

Just like all other pictures with Mae Murray, and people are getting tired of them. We had a poor week. (Middle West.)

The Eternal Struggle—

A very fine production. Good business for week. (Middle West.)

An Old Sweetheart of Mine—

Struck a popular chord in transient patronage, and netted one of best weeks of season. Story went over with honors to spare. (East.)

Cordelia, the Magnificent—

Star a big favorite and this one attracted capacity for a week, assisted by strong supplementary bill. (East.)

F. B. O.

Human Wreckage—

This picture played for two solid weeks, making a record for this house, and piling up the dollars. Unusual draw. (Middle West.)

Elaborate cutout display in front and liberal exploitation of Mrs. Wallace Reid netted big business. (East.)

HODKINSON

Michael O'Halloran—

An average picture that was satisfactory on a double feature program. Not strong enough to hold up alone, however. Business very good, due to other feature, primarily. (West.)

FOX

The Great Night—

William Russell has no special following, but picture did average business. Story received little comment, and was taken rather indifferently. (East.)

Soft Boiled—

As typically Mix as it could be, and therefore a hit through the entire week. Excellent business. (East.)

ALLIED P. & D.

The Shriek of Araby—

Very good five-reel comedy that really holds up. Popularity of star and interest in "sheiks" was responsible for very good business for the week. (West.)

SELZNICK

The Common Law—

Wonderful cast and well balanced picture that pleased all who saw it. Nice receipts. (Middle West.)

Queen of Sin—

A big picture, as far as mob scenes go, but not much else to boost it. Business just fair. (West.)

PREFERRED

Mothers-in-Law—

Drama filled with laughs and heartaches. It carries a big punch. Very good business. (East.)

A little better than its name. (East.)

STATE RIGHTS

Broadway Gold—

A true to life sort of a drama that ought to be well liked anywhere as much as it was here. Very good business. (East.)

A good picture. Business fair. (Middle West.)

The Last Hour—

Not much of a picture; fair box office value. (Middle West.)

Bright Lights of Broadway—

Lots of excitement, with an interesting tale to tell. This picture pleased a lot of people, and we had a good week. (Middle West.)

Gold Madness—

Picture seems to lack power, despite name of featured player. Did not meet with great approval here. Personal appearance of Guy Bates Post helped draw good houses, however. (West.)

How "3 Wise Fools" Was Put Over

Details of Campaigns on Picture

DIVERSIFIED and ingenious exploitation has been the rule in putting over "Three Wise Fools," and the highlights of several campaigns are presented here for the convenience of other exhibitors.

Manager Floyd D. Morrow of the Regent theatre, Washington, Pa., succeeded in getting placards on every pole in town carrying trolley wires, which meant that "Three Wise Fools" was well billed along the main arteries of traffic.

This had never been done before, so every body thought it couldn't be, but Mr. Morrow laid his lines and made his plans by first making friends with the head of the street railways company and then making him and his wife ardent fans. A season pass helped in this and a pleasant word of greeting each time he came to the theatre helped, as well as a solicitous inquiry as to how he liked the different shows. The street car man got to thinking well of the theatre, and when asked about putting cards on the poles "just once," why of course he was glad to consent.

As in most other towns, the poles are of iron and taper toward the top, so Mr. Morrow wired the cards to the pole and as they slipped down it made the wires tighter.

Tobacco Tie-ups Are Made

For the showing of "Three Wise Fools" at the Chicago theatre, Chicago, Mr. Hollander of that theatre, and Walter D. Nealand, exploitation man assigned to the Chicago branch of Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan, arranged two city-wide tie-ups with the United Cigar stores.

One tie-up was with the New Vintage Ricoro cigar and the other with the Herbert Tareyton London Smoking Mixture. A special poster, twenty inches high by twelve inches wide, was printed on pink stock. The Ricoro tie-up contained a reproduction of a still showing William H. Crane, Claude Gillingwater and Alec Frances as they appear in "Three Wise Fools," smoking cigars. The Tareyton tie-up shows them smoking long-stemmed pipes.

MUSIC TIE-UP ON "NE'ER-DO-WELL"
A Memphis music store gave this display to "The Ne'er-Do-Well" (Paramount) at Loew's Palace theatre

Y Y Y Teaser Campaign

A campaign which had the elements of novelty was put on by Manager Milton F. Russell of the Capitol theatre, Altoona, Pa., assisted by Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan exploiteer Bill Robson.

The first three nights of the week preceding the showing of this film several young men went forth at midnight and painted at each street crossing on the sidewalk the following "Y Y Y Fools." One column, one inch teasers were also scattered throughout the newspapers. On top of the theatres there appeared a twenty-four sheet painted bulletin with the same cryptic sign.

The following day the teasers in the newspapers were increased to one column two inches and the extra inch explained that "Y Y Y Fools" meant Goldwyn's "Three Wise Fools" at the Capitol theatre all week commencing August 13.

Clown Street Ballyhoo

That a man in clown costume is a good street ballyhoo for "Three Wise Fools" was proved by Edward Trinz, manager of the Elite theatre, Waukegan, Ill., and Walter D. Nealand, Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan exploitation man. The man carried a huge sign on his back, "Three Wise Fools." For several days the clown paraded the business streets of the city and was always the centre of attention.

The reviews of this picture from the Chicago newspapers were placed on a big frame in the lobby. Its value was proved by the number of patrons of the preceding picture who stopped to read the reviews.

Novelty Hats are Given in "Three Ages" Campaign

Several days in advance of the showing of "Three Ages" at the Imperial theatre, Jacksonville, Fla., Manager Charles Morrison distributed one thousand novelty Buster Keaton hats, half of them to children attending and the other half through merchant tie-ups.

Mr. Morrison was fortunate in securing the co-operation of two very busy stores, each one of which has excellent window display location, one a prominent drug store and the other a popular hat store. They arranged a co-operative display and co-operated further by handing out a Buster Keaton hat with each purchase. By this means, there is no doubt that numbers of these little advertising affairs were carried into the homes.

The papers were quite liberal in the amount of free space given, based on the fact that "Three Ages" is the first full length six-reel comedy drama by this comedian.

UNUSUALLY ATTRACTIVE DRUG STORE WINDOW DISPLAY TYING UP WITH "IF WINTER COMES" SHOWING
Manager Oral D. Cloakey of the Regent theatre, Ottawa, obtained this handsome drug store window display in connection with his campaign on "If Winter Comes" (Fox)

Child Stunts on "Penrod and Sam"

Managers Aim Exploitation Measures on Photoplay at Juvenile Population

IN exploiting "Penrod and Sam," managers have stressed the juvenile angle heavily, appealing to the youngsters in their communities, figuring that word-of-mouth would take care of it from that point on.

Newman's theatre, Kansas City, Mo., took advantage of this angle in good shape with a special prologue billed as "Thirty-five Klever Kiddies."

In line with the appropriate sort of exploitation to get the kids to boost a kid picture, the management had children supply the entertainment for this feature. The players were mostly from the Marie Kelly dancing school.

Two jazz bands, one girls and one boys, singers of jazz and classical songs alike and dancers formed the ensemble. The prologue wound up with a number asking the audience to think kindly of their efforts and hoping that they would enjoy "Penrod and Sam."

Such a prologue harmonized with the picture and furnished a welcome change from the conventional stagy ideas.

"Regular Fellows" Organized

The "Regular Fellows" organization came into being at the Rivoli theatre, Baltimore, Md., enlisting the support of all regular fellows in the city to see "Penrod and Sam."

It was a new disguise for an old stunt. The newsboys were there and so were the poor boys, the boys from the orphanage and all the others who didn't have the wherewithal to look out for the regular "admishun" price. The Baltimore News and Baltimore American had announced in advance that they would look out for that.

Boys' Shop Gives Showing

True to its name—the Metropolitan Boys' Shop—the Dayton Emporium looked out for its boys, employes and customers, with a special showing of "Penrod and Sam" at the Strand theatre, Dayton, O.

Two thousand youngsters lined up for the showing which was given in conjunction with the Strand theatre's advertising on the picture.

There is a unique news angle in the fact that the showing was part of the Metropolitan Boys' shop yearly program for the benefit of its boy friends. It gives several entertainments, of varied natures, during the year and the youngsters who are numbered among its friends and customers are the guests on such an occasion.

Newspaper Sporting Writer Aids "The Spoilers"

Exploitation hinging directly on one of the principal features of the picture was put over by the New York office of the Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan and Goldwynner Eddie Carrier for the showing of "The Spoilers" at the Stillman theatre, Cleveland.

A description of the fight between Milton Sills and Noah Beery in "The Spoilers," written by one of the sports feature writers of the Cleveland News and published, under a two-column head, in the middle of the sporting page two or three days in advance of the opening of the picture, was obtained as a result of this concerted action.

Eddie Bonns, manager of exploitation for Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan, telegraphed Eddie Bang, sporting editor of the Cleveland News, as follows: "Am advising Eddie Carrier, Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan representative, now en route from studio with special print of Rex Beach's 'The Spoilers' personally to screen our latest production for you and friends at Cleveland. Account wonderful fight scenes would appreciate Kilbane and Tremaine be guests at private screening which Carrier arranges. Kindest personal regards."

Ray Campbell of the News sports staff was detailed to describe the fight in the photoplay. His account, carrying his name as the writer of the article, was published under a double-column head.

LIGHTHOUSE AS MARQUEE DISPLAY

Manager P. F. Schwie and W. H. Laurance, publicity director, of the Garrick, Duluth, prepared this marquee display on "The Isle of Lost Ships" (First National)

Comprehensive Campaign on "Bluebeard's 8th Wife"

Manager Howard Price Kingsmore of the Howard theatre, Atlanta, was aided in his campaign on "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife" by the fact that the play had been seen but a short time before in Atlanta, presented by a stock company, and had attracted great interest.

An interesting and curiosity-arousing newspaper campaign consisted of the use of small teaser ads in all three newspapers, showing, one at a time, the seven former wives of Bluebeard until all seven were shown. These were followed by another, illustrated with cut of Gloria Swanson and asking the question . . . "Who was Bluebeard's eighth wife?" The climax was reached with the announcement that "Gloria Swanson is Bluebeard's Eight Wife." The outstanding feature of these teasers was the hand-drawn question mark, which was uniquue enough to attract attention.

The advance foyer display was a scene of the modern Bluebeard and his wife, cut from the 24-sheet, including also the other seven wives, back of which was a suggestion of a hall in Bluebeard's castle, showing the locked doors of the forbidden chamber and a big shadow of the Bluebeard of olden times with animme nse scimitar in his hand.

The prologue for the week was termed "Bluebeard's Vengeance." It depicted a scene in the hall of old Bluebeard's castle. This scene showed a man typical of Bluebeard, six feet in height, dressed in "Bluebeard" costume and holding a scimitar in his hand. It was enacted by an Italian bass singer, Edward Odio, singing "The Song of Vengeance," and Jessie Reese Calvert, lyric soprano, who appeased the wrath of Bluebeard with the singing of "For You Alone."

A very excellent piece of enterprise was the tie-up with the Atlanta Constitution's beauty contest. Not alone was Mr. Kingsmore successful in getting the winner of the contest (Miss Frances Thayer) on the stage all week, but in getting a tie-up with the Constitution, based on sending a photograph of the winner to Cecil B. DeMille.

Clever Newspaper Contest Used on "Main Street"

Manager J. Wright Brown of the Grand theatre, Columbus, Ga., put across an excellent campaign on "Main Street" recently.

Advance interest was created by a contest under the auspices of the Columbus Enquirer-Sun to decide "Which will be Main Street of Columbus in the Future?" There was a bit of psychology in having the contest relate to the future, since it stimulated local enthusiasm in the thought that Columbus is a growing city. This contest got front page publicity every day for four days in advance. On the day of opening a co-operative page appeared, giving prominence to the outcome of the contest in the center of the page. On the same day the Enquirer-Sun came out with an editorial relative to the contest.

The co-operation of the White Book Store was secured, and an excellent window display was made a week before opening. A pass was given to the purchaser of each copy of the book.

Diversified Display Used on "Abysmal Brute"

Manager Thomas G. Coleman played up his lobby display strongly on "The Abysmal Brute." The theatre front for this picture had a 24-sheet mounted on canvas directly over the marquee, two end banners under the marquee and one banner the entire width of the theatre. In the lobby were a large oil painting and beside it, a big three-sheet gold frame containing 3 black and white stills, one 22 x 28 and two 11 x 14 feet. These in addition to the regular posters.

In an attempt to reach all classes the following points were stressed—that it was a Jack London story—the prize fight—the handsome star—society background with Mabel Julienne Scott—rugged outdoor atmosphere. Not one of these points was given prominence over the other, thus making a diversified appeal.

The criticism of the Birmingham News critic was capitalized upon and his recommendation that it was "a great production" was featured on cardboard banners, one of them placed under the regular sidewalk banner, the other right over the oil painting in the lobby itself.

Animal Crackers Given Out on "Hunting Big Game"

Manager Oscar White of the Rex theatre, Sumter, S. C., went a little heavier than usual in advertising "Hunting Big Game in Africa." For three days in advance the papers carried teaser ads; window cards were placed two weeks ahead; three window displays and advance tie-up with hardware store and with the National Biscuit Company, which furnished animal crackers. Slides with changing copy were run daily for fifteen days in advance.

Cut-outs made from the 24-sheet were displayed in the windows until opening day, when they were transferred to the lobby. A jungle effect was produced there by the use of trees and evergreens. The banner which stretched across the front was made from the 24-sheet, and a tiger cut-out, which was saved from a former picture, was partially concealed among the foliage of the trees, as were other animal cut-outs and a most realistic jungle effect was produced.

Animal crackers were distributed to children and grown-ups both as they came out of the theatre. Through co-operation with a grocery store the printing of the envelope containers were free to the theatre.

Complete Campaign Is Used on "Human Wreckage"

Manager James D. Kennedy of the Apollo theatre, Indianapolis, and Harold Wendt, F. B. O. exploitation man, co-operated to put over a strong advertising campaign on "Human Wreckage."

Milling crowds on busy street corners were surprised to have thrust into their hands a capsule by a pretty, smiling girl. Glancing at the capsule they were confronted by one word, in red ink, "Dope." Opening the capsule a small advertisement of the feature picture was found by the curious citizen. "Dope" proved to be only one word in the sentence. "This is straight dope."

Paper napkins, with the startling question, "How yould you like to be a waiter?" were distributed to several local cafeterias. These were placed among the regulation napkins, and brought the message of the Apollo theatre to many who were enjoying their noon-day meal.

Calling cards from "Mrs. Wallace Reid, Hollywood, Cal.," were distributed to representative homes throughout the city. On the reverse was written, "Sorry you were not in. Will see you next week at the Apollo theatre."

Many staid business men were shocked to find among their mail a postal card: "I just saw Mrs. Wallace Reid in 'Human Wreckage.' Don't fail to see it when it comes to your city. Peggy." The cards were mailed at Louisville, Kentucky. About 1,000 business men, including lawyers, physicians, and other professional men received the cards.

Block Long Sign Painted on "Enemies of Women"

For the exploitation of "Souls for Sale" at Loew's Vendome theatre, Nashville, Tenn., the manager had painted on the high board fence, erected around a new building in the process of construction in the heart of the city, a mammoth sign, which was almost a city block in length. The title of the picture was painted in black letters five feet high, against a white background. The theatre and the date of showing were painted in smaller letters at each end of the sign.

Street cars from all parts of the city and most of the automobile traffic passed along the street in front of this sign. Goldwyn-Cohmopolitan Exploiteer C. F. Mock aided in the exploitation.

NEWS AND VIEWS OF THE SHORT-LENGTH PRODUCTION

Short Subjects and Serials

COMING ATTRACTIONS FOR THE DIVERSIFIED PROGRAM

Short Subjects Gaining in Favor

Clevelander Praises Educationa's "Sea of Dreams," Shown at Allen Theatre

EXCERPTS from newspaper reviews gathered by the publicity departments of Educational, Pathe, Universal and Fox tend to show a goodly falling in line of representative critics who are going into detail in their comment on short subject units of bills. Particularly encouraging is this situation in the larger cities of the country. The New York critics have for some time been dwelling at length on the merit of the short units, in no few cases having placed them above the feature in quality and entertainment value.

But this journalistic recognition of the growing importance of the short subject is reaching beyond the confines of metropolitan newspaper offices. The smaller town press, too, has been awakened. Clever exhibitors have contributed much in the education of critics, particularly those of cities like Boston, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Chicago, New Orleans, Atlanta, Minneapolis, San Francisco and Los Angeles.

Educational this week can justly feel proud of the recognition given its "Sea of Dreams" by W. Ward Marsh of the Cleveland Plain Dealer, who, recently, while "catching" the show at the Allen theatre in that city, gave that subject the stellar berth. But that was not all. Across the eight-column top of the amusement section was jotted the following: "'Sea of Dreams' Short Subject in the Allen, Praised for Beauty and Imagination."

This is, indeed, a tribute to Educational's allegorical picture, for Cleveland's editors and critics rank among the most fastidious in this country.

Interesting Animal Shots in Current Urban Classic

The current Urban Popular Classics is one of the Raymond L. Ditmars' series, "Modern Truths From Old Fables." It shows the animals of the Zoo at feeding time. Among the animals are Alaska bears, a Brazilian monkey who eats raw eggs, a giant tortoise who is fond of tomatoes and the two-horned rhinoceros which feeds on shrubbery. There is also shown in this short feature "The Prophesy of a Dying Bird," adapted from the fable by La Fontaine.

"Yes, We Have No Pajamas" Latest Follies

"Yes, We Have No Pajamas," inspired by the popular "nut" song, is the title of the next Century Follies Girls comedy. The comedy is an original by Sig Neufeld and Bert Sternbach, dealing with the adventures of many girls at a boarding house. The girls are forced out of the rooms minus their belongings and as a last resort don bathing suits with a bathing contest resultant.

Both action and comedy find a place in Round Five of the new "Fighting Blood" series, which bears the title of "The Taming of the Shrewd." This series appears on the F. B. O. schedule and stars George O'Hara.

Christie has promised thrilling and humorous situations in this comedy, in addition to the novel atmosphere of the Southern California oil fields.

T. O. D. C. Planning Short Subjects

Exhibitors' Distributing Firm Offered Product by Independents

THAT the Theatre Owners' Distributing Corporation, of which W. A. True is president and whose roster includes officials of the national and various State units of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, including President Sydney S. Cohen, will establish a department devoted exclusively to the handling of short subjects is accepted as a fact among well-informed exhibitors. There was some talk in usually reliable circles that the T. O. D. C., in addition to planning for a magazine two-reeler, may effect an arrangement whereby it will enter into the news weekly field.

All efforts to obtain some official comment on the many reports circulated in short subject circles failed, however. Nevertheless, there is much interest among short subject men relative to the plans of the new organization concerning comedies and other brief reels. That several independent producers of that type of pictures have approached the leaders of the exhibitor organization is not denied, but no definite information concerning the firm's plan can be ascertained.

It was readily admitted in New York that at present the T. O. D. C. is concentrating its efforts on the acquisition of feature productions, but several officers of the firm admit that a short subject department will be established. In fact, say some of these, the establishment of such a department will be complying with the demand of exhibitors who are grabbing all the short stuff available.

INSTRUCTIONS have gone out of the Loew offices to local managers of Loew houses to display prominently in all advertisements all short subjects, particularly the comedies. The Loew offices have been studiously watching the growing popularity of the short subjects and have finally come to the conclusion that a little more advertisement will not only help the draw at the box office, but incidentally chop down the overhead at their combination houses.

Picturesque highlights from "Hold Everything," an Educational Christie comedy co-starring Bobby Vernon and Vera Steadman. Scott Sidney directed this one.

John L. Sullivan Relative in "Leather Pushers"

BILLY SULLIVAN this week was signed by Universal to star in a new series of "Leather Pushers" of the type made famous by Reginald Denny. Sullivan comes from a family of pugilists, although he personally has done no professional fighting. He is the son of Jerry Sullivan, a heavyweight boxer, and cousin of the famous John L. Sullivan. The new star was selected by Fred Datig, casting director at Universal City, from a list of 157 applicants. He is 25 years old and has appeared in pictures for the past eight years. The new "Leather Pushers" series will be directed by Edward Laemmle.

Summerfield, who has filled that capacity at virtually every contest, and who headed the committee; Lew Cody, Helen Ferguson, Carmel Myers, Eleanor Boardman, Kathleen Key, Hortense Alden, movie players, and D. S. Ricker.

Indian War Bonnet Boosts Universal Serial

Indian war bonnets as the reward for attendance during the exhibition of the 15 chapters of Universal's serial, "In the Days of Daniel Boone," proved a business getter for Manager Frank Boschetti of the Star theatre, Lawrence, Mass. When the ticket is punched 15 times the holder is entitled to a bonnet.

Karns is a new Century acquisition. It will be the first of an all-star series.

Japanese Earthquake Stirs Broadway Interest

THE de luxe houses along Broadway—the Capitol, Strand, Rialto and Rivoli—handled the Japanese earthquake situation so cleverly that much favorable comment resulted. The exhibition of scenes of Japanese cities ruined by the 'quake. This proved a splendid advance agent for the actual 'quake scenes that are now on their way. Very clever showmanship. The scenes shown were from the International, Fox and Pathe weeklies.

"Poodles" Hannaford New Educational Star

Three big punches from Hal Roach's latest "Our Gang" comedy, "No Noise," for Pathe release.

Kinograms Acquires Newest Scenes From Japan

From Educational this week came an announcement that in Kinograms, its news reel, it presents the most recent pictures to arrive in this country of the earthquake-stricken section of Japan. The material used in this issue, N. 2283, is part of a shipment of films received by Edward K. Hanaka of Tokio, Kinogram's representative in Japan, who happened to be in New York and turned the shipment over to Kinograms. Many of the scenes were made as late as August 2.

Mr. Hanaka, who has a motion picture laboratory in Tokio, left for Japan after receipt of the film, which he said was the last shipped from Tokio before the great catastrophe. He has been unable to receive any word of the fate of his laboratory or employees, or of his family. As soon as he can establish communication with his employees in Japan he will instruct them to rush all available material on the disaster direct to Kinograms. Mr. Hanaka is confident, however, that if any of his employees are still alive prints of the scenes of the disaster are already on their way to Kinograms.

New England Exhibitors Feature Local Events

Will Rogers' Initial Pathe Comedy October Issue

Announcement emanated from the New York offices of Pathe this week that "Jus' Passin' Through," starring Will Rogers, formerly of the Ziegfeld Follies, will be released in October. This is the first of a series of two-reel comedies that Hal Roach is making in Los Angeles for Pathe distribution. The pictures will be released at intervals of four weeks. The supporting cast includes Marie Mosquini, Noah Young, Earl Mohan, and Billy Engle. Charles Parrott is directing.

Rogers plays the role of a tramp, who, unfortunately, gets off the brake-beams at Santa Susana where hoboes were not allowed. He breaks into a thanksgiving feast in jail only to be let out hungrier than ever.

Pathe Augments Exhibitors Exploitation Aids

Pathe this week announced that owing to its greatly increased short subject lineup it has augmented its exploitation aids on those pictures. With every Hal Roach one-reeler will come four 11x14 lobby sepias. The other exploitation aids are as follows: weekly Aesop's Fables, a Paul Terry cartoon in two colors, size 22x14, for lobby use; Stan Laurel comedies and "The Spat Family" two reelers, one- and three-sheet posters, eight 11x14 lobby displays and five black and whites, a broadside and sales promoter on the series, one- and two-column mats, a press sheet and slide on each issue; Will Rogers and Ben Turpin two-reel comedies, one-, three- and six-sheet posters, eight 11x14 lobby displays with five black and whites, one- and two-column cuts mats, broadside, sales promoter, press sheet and slides on each subject.

Radio Will Not Hamper Pictures—Hammons

E. W. HAMMONS, president of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., an ardent radio enthusiast, this week took exception to statements made by some film men that the popularity of radio will prove a menace to pictures. He says, in part:

"Radio appeals only to the ear; motion pictures appeal to the eye. Literature, books, magazines and all other amusement forms of fiction, perhaps, consume more of the public's time than either movies, radio or the legitimate stage, but no one has regarded it as a menace, nor did publishers regard the advent of movies or radio as inimical to their interests. I will say, however, that radio will compel motion picture operators to pay more attention to programs he sets before his patrons."

Mickey Daniels, Mary Korman, and the "Gang" get over some real laughs in "July Days," one of the "Our Gang" series on the Pathe schedule.

Short Subject Briefs

The Imperial comedy, "The Two Johns," and "Sunshine and Ice," a Fox educational entertainment, are to be released on the same date, September 16.

Gimbel Brothers, one of New York's leading department stores, hooked up with Universal on the Baby Peggy series, advertising the Baby Peggy dolls. The latter are earning considerable worthwhile publicity for the clever star.

The Educational-Christie comedy, "Navy Blues," featuring Dorothy Devore, and the second picture of the "Sing Them Again" series, "Companions," also an Educational release, have been recommended by the National Motion Picture League as suitable for family showing. The current issues of Kinograms, Educational's news reel, is also listed.

Educational has acquired new quarters for its exchange in Kansas City. The offices were moved the first of this month.

Alyce Mills has been signed to play lead in a series of two-reel comedies being produced by the Stellar Productions, Inc., opposite Eddie Bolton. David Lustig is directing.

"Wages of Cinema" is the sixth issue of the second series of H. C. Witwer's "Fighting Blood" series Film Booking Offices is releasing. The sixth episode will be released in October. The story deals with life in Hollywood.

Pre-release Reviews of Features

Where Is This West

(Universal—4532 Feet)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

IT seems to be Universal's plan to give Jack Hoxie orthodox western melodramas and then allow him to put in the hokum. Patrons of this type of screen fare are in the habit of taking it seriously unless a legitimate comedian is using it as an expression of his humor. "Where Is This West?" is hokum—very old hokum—without much rhyme or reason.

It all centers around the idea of a jealous ranch foreman employing the boys to make things embarrassing for a so-called tenderfoot—not the garden variety of tenderfoot from the East, but a workman from a milk station. A crooked lawyer informs him and a young waitress that they have inherited a western ranch. But the reason for their inheritance is never established. A subtitle informs us that this lawyer is attempting to gain title to the property, but the point is never developed. So it depends for its interest upon the foreman and the boys initiating the milk-man in the old time hokum of the West—an idea pretty frail at best.

The comedy relief is poor, depending as it does upon a fellow workman who rides the brake-rods and becomes kidnapped by a group of movie Indians. Hoxie arrives with the girl in the midst of a cowboy shooting spree. This hot action is planted for their benefit, but the hero doesn't bat an eyelid. Frustrated in their attempt to scare him they resort to such deep-dyed villainy as kidnapping the girl. So he rescues her two or three times. There is a deal of blank cartridge incident, bringing in a climax when the foreman makes believe that their retreat is doomed because of the Indians' circle of death. But Hoxie comes down off the hills in a commandeered motor-cycle and bumps each Indian off his horse—and rescues the young heiress in distress.

The details are not well explained. For instance Hoxie is never introduced to the ranch house, but he rides straight to it as if he had lived there all his life. And the relationship of the hero and heroine to their deceased benefactor is never established. A picture carrying little plot and little variety of incident.

THEME. Melodrama of vicious ranch foreman who would introduce young Eastern workman into the rough and ready customs and manners of the West in order to frighten him away and thus claim the property for himself.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The good speed of action. Hoxie's horsemanship. The incident aboard the train.

DIRECTION. Allows several gaps, which if explained, would clarify the atmosphere. Introduces standardized incident to put over his interest and suspense. Comedy relief very poorly developed. Neglects the romance to supply western hokum—some of which is first rate

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Might link up with Western scenic resorts—suggestive of the title. Play up Hoxie and his horsemanship. Mention that Mary Philbin of "Merry Go Round" fame is the leading woman.

DRAWING POWER. Should prove suitable in second and third class houses.

SUMMARY. A weak effort in bringing out the ancient idea of initiating an Easterner into the wild and woolly ways of the West. Hokum and comedy not well balanced.

The Clean Up

(Universal—5051 Feet)

(Reviewed by Henry Olmsted)

IF this story of a rich and eccentric old man's whim in leaving a will cutting off his grandson with but a single dollar bill while giving to each native born inhabitant of the hick town a sum of fifty thousand dollars had been treated with consistent slap-stick methods throughout, it might have carried some real comedy value. As it is the director tries to balance the hokum with logic and makes a very labored picture of it.

Herbert Rawlinson, who plays the youth, was seen a few weeks ago in a similar vehicle, playing the role of a young spendthrift who was brought up sharp with realities by an eccentric uncle. The hokum was left out of that one. Here it is tacked on with a vengeance. No sooner is the will read publicly than all the gentry, composing all types so dear to the director who imagines no small town is real unless it harbors queer looking spinsters, village store loiterers and what not, hustle to the bank and emerge with big rolls of greenbacks which they spend in crap games on sidewalks and giving to itinerant fakers.

You can spot the ending once the two rival girls are introduced—one being the old man's secretary, the other a fortune hunter. When the latter learns that the youth is cut off in the will she transfers her affection to an idle bounder. So the action revolves around the hero cleaning up the village which has figuratively turned upside down. A honky tonk is opened and the natives shut up shop and live riotously. Which inspires the youth to force the idlers to go to work or get out of town.

There isn't a single type missing. The old codger is very much in the foreground. He stalks into the general store and says: "My false teeth won't be here till Thursday, so I'll have some more of that malted milk." This title is a sample of the hokum which finishes with a banquet when the hero introduces some quaint romances—Age engaged to Youth and so on. And true to form there is a codicil to the will giving him two million dollars.

THEME. Comedy-drama featuring youth winning inheritance from eccentric grandfather who has willed princely sums to native born inhabitants. Has romance which starts him working for the first time in his life.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The honky-tonk fight. The slapstick scenes when they are not embroidered with straight incident. The effort of Claire Adams to appear convincing.

DIRECTION. Has added good slapstick but robs it of humor by emphasizing dramatic touches. Misses with his small town atmosphere unless his object was to point it toward slapstick. Incident overdrawn and fails to maintain interest.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Title carries a "kick." Feature it for a teaser campaign. Distribute paper money, etc.

DRAWING POWER. For second and third class houses and rural communities.

SUMMARY. A mediocre effort to capitalize small town hokum. Overdrawn. Director should have played idea as straight slapstick. Slender plot has needed four continuity writers to fix it up.

Phyllis Andrews ..... Claire Adams
Mary Reynolds ..... Claire Anderson
Robert Reynolds ..... Herbert Fortier

The Broader Mission

A passerby questioned three workmen. Of each he asked, "What are you doing?"

The Gold Diggers
(Warner Brothers—Six Reels)
(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

BY entrusting Avery Hopwood's sparkling comedy, "The Gold Diggers," to a competent company in charge of Harry Beaumont after it had been excellently adapted by Grant Carpenter, Warner Brothers have given the screen something of value. The crisp dialogue may be silenced, but the action is eloquent with clever incident which carries on gingerly with the result that not a single dull moment is discernible, notwithstanding the fact that most of the by-play is given up to groupings and conversation. The characterization is firmly planted and with an even story to work with what occurs consequently carries rhyme and reason.

A sophisticated audience viewing the picture in the New York Rialto found considerable merriment over the discomfiture of the staid and dignified uncle of the youth who fell in love with a chorus girl and who despite his efforts to be proper found himself intrigued by one of the so-called gold diggers. The plot rests upon this slender foundation, yet so admirably dovetailed are its comedy high jinks that it never sags or loses its sparkle. The rich uncle who had threatened his nephew with disinheritance if he married the pretty chorine becomes in turn a sugar daddy—though he attempts to match wits with the girl and fails miserably. And to keep him company is his equally dignified lawyer who is charmed by a "swift worker" from the chorus.

The two "sweet papas" haven't a Chinaman's chance to escape, but it is the purpose of the heroine to paint herself in the worst possible light in order that the uncle will grant his consent for his nephew's marriage to a sister chorine—the uncle thinking it is the heroine who is the object of the boy's affection.

Harry Beaumont has qualified to turn out clever and subtle comedy. He has not failed here. His scenes when the dignified elders meet the gold diggers and when they subsequently propose are sufficient to rouse the risibilities of any audience. Hope Hampton playing her best role fits the demands of the character in an ideal manner. Louise Fazenda clowns considerably, but manages to furnish the humorous high spots. And Wyndham Standing and Alex Francis as the sugar papas, play with an effective grasp for the demands of the two roles. The supporting company is highly competent. The picture is excellently mounted. It generates a wholesome amount of humor.

THEME. Comedy-drama of chorus girls who make it a business to prey upon wealthy business men. Heroine intrigues such a man to embarrass him so he will grant consent to nephew's marriage. He falls in love with her.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The easy performances thoroughly in character of Hope Hampton, Wyndham Standing and Alec Francis. The clowning by Louise Fazenda. The sparkle of the story. The bright incident and titles.
